Extract from Daily Telegraph, Thursday, July 26, 1888.
CHESTER TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—"GOLDEN LEGEND."—"Great praise was also deserved by Mr. Grice, a young baritone, whose appearance in the part of Lucifer marked him out as one before whom, in all probability, there is a considerable future. Speaking for myself, I do not wish to hear Lucifer's music better sung than by this artist. Mr. Grice's method and intelligence, as displayed this evening, frankly encourage sanguine hopes of the service he will render in time to come."

MR. GORDON HELLER (Baritone)
(Of the St. James's Hall and Princes' Hall Concerts; formerly Pupil of Hy. Blower, Esq., Royal College of Music).
Address, 15, Vernon Road, Leeds.

MR. J. G. HEWSON (Baritone)
276, Hyde Road, Manchester.
"'ELIJAH' AT RETFORD.—The honours amongst the soloists were taken by Mr. Hewson, who, as a baritone, has certainly not been surpassed in Retford for a long time. His delineation of the character of Elijah was admirable, and exquisitely did he sing his various recitatives and airs. The principal share of the solos fell to him. . . . Whether singing as the suppliant entreating the life of the widow's son, or rejoicing at the answering of his prayer, or deriding the cries of the priests of Baal to their God, he was in every instance in splendid voice. 'Is not His word like a fire,' 'It is enough, O Lord,' and 'Lord God of Abraham' he sang with magnificent effect."—Retford and Gainsborough Times, December 18, 1891.
"The baritone was Mr. J. G. Hewson—a fine singer, steady, well-trained, and musical—who found favour with the audience from the first, continued it to the end, and received numerous encores, compliance with which the exigencies of time and the length of the work would not permit. The most applauded numbers were 'Lord God of Abraham,' 'Is not His word like a fire'—a fine piece of singing, which evoked demonstrations of approval from both choir and audience—'It is enough,' and 'For the mountains shall depart.' The readiness of the singer, his certainty, and promptitude, and accuracy, his expressiveness in the dramatic portions of the Oratorio were all most admirable."—Retford and Gainsborough News, December 18, 1891.

THE
A CONTRIBUTION TO
THE REVISAL OF MUSICAL ÆSTHETICS
BY
DR. EDUARD HANSLICK.

Seventh Edition, enlarged and revised (Leipzig, 1885).
Translated by GUSTAV COHEN.

PRICE SIX SHILLINGS.

"Messrs. Novello and Co. have done good service to musical art in this country by publishing an English translation of Dr. Edward Hanslick's 'The Beautiful in Music,' a work now in its seventh German edition. The translator, Mr Gustav Cohen, has, of course, taken the latest edition as his text and accomplished his task with perfect clearness, aiming, as he says, 'not so much at perfection in style as at reflecting with fidelity the mind and spirit of the author.' Nothing could be more timely than the appearance of this book, because at no former period has the delusion it seeks to dispel been more rampant and mischievous. Dr. Hanslick mainly assails the theory that the office of music is to represent feeling, and contends that the beauty of a composition is specifically musical—that is, inherent in the combinations of musical sounds, and independent of all alien, extra-musical notions. . . . We recommend Hanslick's book to the careful consideration of amateurs."—Daily Telegraph.

THE MUSICAL TIMES.

The Title-page and Index for Vol. XXXII. (1891) may be had on application gratis and post-free.

A NEW YEAR'S GREETING.

HERE is a beautiful thought, which readers of Cowper will at once recognise :—

> Time, as he passes us, has a dove's wing
> Unsoiled and swift, and of a silken sound.

It is more elegant to introduce a dove than an owl, or the poet who longed for a "lodge in some vast wilderness" would, perhaps, have likened the course of time to the rapid, noiseless flight of Minerva's bird across a star-lit meadow. That field-mice are in danger as the ghostly form floats past makes the comparison no less strong. We, too, are in jeopardy every hour. After all, poets are not needed to emphasise the fact that time passes, and especially may their services be dispensed with on this New Year's morning. The first hours of 1892 are consecrated by many recollections. We call out of the past shadowy forms long since released from the muddy vesture of decay; we picture scenes in that part of the drama of life which has been played and almost forgotten; we hear voices the music of which faded into silence years ago; we remember words that come back to us like an echo from a distant hill. As this is done, one thought occurs to every mind :—It seems but yesterday!—and we perceive the grim force with which Carlyle compared Time to "an all-embracing ocean-tide, whereon we and the universe swim like exhalations which are and then are not."

Bells are merrily ringing in the present morning, and as men meet each other there are cheery words and warm pressure of hands. But the emotions proper to the hour are, like life itself—that dome of many-coloured glass—a mixture of varying ingredients. Melancholy is one of them. It is the shadow of our pleasures and attends them everywhere. The idea of tears at a wedding makes us smile, and the fact often supplies a theme for jest. But the philosopher sees both idea and fact in a different light. What a "Roundabout Paper" Thackeray would have written on the subject! How full of wisdom and of gravely humorous teaching! Alas! our most joyous moments are tinged with regrets or apprehensions; tears lurk in the corners of eyes that sparkle with mirth, and amid the "over-tones" of New Year bells we mark the unrest of a discord that calls vainly for resolution. At this time we must perforce look back. We have reached an eminence in the country through which life's journey lies, and, as the traveller over a rolling prairie halts on the summit of each land-wave to survey the course he has achieved, so do we turn and reflect upon the year that has gone. To those of us who are interested in THE MUSICAL TIMES the survey extends over a landscape not wholly basking in sunshine. We have reason to be glad in that the confidence and support of the musical public have been with us through the year; in that the journal has been served with zeal by all engaged upon it; in that its prospects were never so bright as now. But amid the satisfaction of these things we do not forget that, since we last gave our readers New Year's greeting, one who, in virtue of his office, was first amongst us, has been called away. Our thoughts at this moment go back to the accomplished man and genial gentleman who began the year with us; who was our leader and fellow-labourer through winter and spring and summer into the season when fruits are ripe and the harvest is gathered. He lived to hear the noise of the reapers in the fields, but "there is a reaper whose name is Death," and he sometimes works swiftly and silently. Before his sudden stroke our Editor fell, and the year, for us, was put into mourning. Those are happy who, in such circumstances, can share the feeling expressed in that magnificent Hymn by Walt Whitman, which Professor Stanford has set to worthy music :—

> O praise and praise,
> For the sure-enwinding arms of cool-enfolding Death.
> . . . . . .
> Approach, encompassing Death—strong deliveress!
> When it is so—when thou hast taken them, I joyously sing the dead,
> Lost in the loving, floating ocean of thee,
> Laved in the flood of thy bliss, O Death.

This morning's bells rang in "the new," and from the facts of the year that has gone we turn to expectations from that which has come. We cannot see the road through it, but hope supplies the visual defect, and the new period of time seems big with possibilities of blessing. On every hand are cheery wishes; men face the future with higher courage, and imagination spreads before them a bright and brilliant scene. It may be no better than a mirage born of ardent longing. Its flowing waters may be rivers of sand; its fruits but apples of Sodom. But then they may not. It is possible that we shall drink of the streams and eat of the fruits, and so pass the year in thankful content. If we again speak of this journal, we do so simply that amid the subjects of our New Year's hopes it may not be forgotten. No persons are more conscious than those engaged upon it that there is much room for development, as a result of public support on the one hand, and the energy and devotion of proprietors, editor, and contributors on the other. Our share of the common work shall not be lacking, encouraged, as we are, by the appointment of an Editor who brings to his duties culture, energy, and savoir faire. It may be that among the writers for THE MUSICAL TIMES are some who do not see eye to eye with him on every question of musical art. If so, these will not be less ready than others to give him frank and cordial support, inspired by loyalty to a cause in which all have enlisted. Thus we enter upon the New Year praying that it may be a "Happy New Year" alike for those who write and those who read.

J. B.

FROM MY STUDY.

SALUTATIONS, gentle reader, on this New Year's morning! There comes a query back, "And who may you be, courteous sir?" That is a very proper question, and should be answered at the beginning of an acquaintance which may endure.

Inasmuch as I write from a "study," you have, perhaps, concluded already that I am studious, that I have an environment of books, and love to talk about them. The deduction is not less correct than obvious. But you want to know more. My name I shall withhold, inasmuch as it is of no account. Painful recollections at this moment are stirring within me of the school-boy agonisings with which I once pursued the value of x through the laborious intricacies of quadratic equations. That letter of the alphabet always represents to me something the worth of which has to be determined. I shall sign this paper "x.," and leave you, good sir or madam, to do the rest. My personal appearance and manner I entrust to your imagination, only hoping that it will do me justice. Do not, I pray you—though, after all, what matters it?—picture the natural hue and texture of my skin as too closely resembling old calf. I would also conjure you to leave a few white locks on the top of my head; to see that in your portrait I do not stoop over-much, and that my eyes are not painfully bleared with long research amid printed pages. There was a time, Madam—but enough; I have not taken up my pen to write personal reminiscences, however flattering to my amour propre.

You know the story of the countryman who, not being quite as familiar with Fleet Street as was Dr. Johnson, took shelter in a doorway to let the crowd pass. In some sort I am like that unsophisticated rustic. I, too, have taken shelter from the crowd, although under no misapprehension as to the length of the jostling procession. Picture me, if you like, in a door-way, just on the edge of the flowing tide, looking out upon its swirlings and whirlings, watching the flotsam and jetsam carried along by the current, and feeling devoutly thankful that I have been stranded. Into that position we are all driven sooner or later, though not all have the grace to be content and make the best of it. Do you know William Blake's illustrations to Blair's "Grave"? and have you seen his pathetic drawing of the old man, feeble and stooping, who is being blown in at Death's open door by an irresistible wind, which seizes and sports with his flying hair and garments? The door is not always open, and sometimes men have to wait for it. While they wait they need not be idle.

I shall talk to you from time to time through these pages, in quite a friendly, informal way, chatting about books largely, and discussing current events as they appeal to me in my seclusion. Most patient reader, I do not expect always to interest you, but neither the will nor the effort will be wanting, and so I crave your indulgence and company as I turn to business from these introductory prosings.

I received, the other day, a neat little book entitled "The Beautiful in Music," translated from the German of Dr. Hanslick by Gustav Cohen, and published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. First issued in 1854, Hanslick's work is now in its seventh edition; but, I believe, it is only just made available to English readers. If I were a rich man—the supposition is sufficiently laughable for a New Year's Feast—I would devote some part of my wealth to the circulation of this volume wherever musical amateurs congregate. Words are hardly strong enough to express the pleasure it has given me; they would certainly fail to convey the heartiness of my agreement with the author's reasoning and conclusions. I once had "a bone to pick" with Dr. Hanslick. As, then, one of the surging crowd in the busy highways of life, I knocked up against the Viennese critic. He had been writing nonsense about music in England; making such imperfect observation and drawing such rash and inaccurate conclusions that my faith in him was rudely shaken. In permitting such a result I was perhaps as unphilosophical as he was in causing it. You know very well that some mental processes are absolutely impossible to certain people. I say nothing about the comprehension of a joke by Scotchmen, because my reader may belong to that estimable nationality and I would not for the world hurt his feelings. But it is extremely doubtful, for example, whether the American exists who ever has conceded, does admit, or ever will allow that his country is inferior in any respect to any other. Similarly, I question whether a foreigner, whatever may be the professions of his tongue, can honestly believe that English music and musicians are worthy of anything better than contemptuous recognition. In giving us that and no more Hanslick simply obeyed an instinct the force of which not only rests upon training and example, but upon the heredity accumulated through many generations. I can hardly blame him now; nor have I the smallest inclination to do so after reading the book before me, and marching with him step by step through his arguments for the independence of music as an art.

The other day the serenity of my life was a little ruffled by an old friend, W., who—he is old enough to know better—indulged in ribald laughter at Hanslick's book, and drew upon his vocabulary of flouts and jeers for such terms as "fossil," and "stick-in-the-mud." I told him that the atmosphere of my study was unused to spoken pleasantries of the like sort:—observe that I say spoken, because, having a good collection of polemical musical literature, there are thousands of examples on the shelves. At this W. condescended to explain that music was for him an affair of sensation and feeling, or of descriptive and pictorial effect. "The only music for me," exclaimed my friend, "is that which stirs and thrills, or which suggests to me events and scenes. That which consists merely in form and sound has no meaning." Said I, "you will not find me undervaluing the physiological effects of music; but your thrilling sensations are due to the purely physical element of sound, and have nothing to do with art." Then I took up Hanslick's book, and remarking "This applies to people like yourself," I read from page 124 et seq.:—

"'Their attitude towards music is not an observant but a pathological one. They are, as it were, in a state of waking dreaminess and lost in a sounding nullity. . . . Instead of closely following the course of the music, these enthusiasts, reclining in their seats and only half-awake, suffer themselves to be rocked and lulled by the mere flow of sound. The sound now waxing and now diminishing in strength; now rising up in jubilant strains and now softly dying away, produces in them a series of vague sensations which they, in their simplicity, fancy to be the result of intellectual action. They are the most easily satisfied part of the audience, and it is also they who tend to lower the dignity of music. For their ear the æsthetic criterion of intelligent gratification is wanting, and a good cigar, some exquisite dainty, or a warm bath yields them the same enjoyment, though they may not be aware of the fact. In the indolent and apathetic attitude of some and the hysterical rapture of others, the active principle is the same—delight in the elemental property of music.'"

Having read thus far, I looked over the top of my glasses, and of the book, at W., who shifted in his chair (a very easy one) and gave a snort which I interpreted as half incredulity, half defiance. He did nothing more articulate, so I pursued my argument:—

"As for music suggesting ideas, scenes, events, and so on," said I, "you ought to know that it can do nothing of the kind, and that all the results of which you speak are the product of indications furnished by a title, or by an avowed 'programme,' or they spring from association of ideas. No doubt you regard the music of 'The Messiah' and Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' as pre-eminently suggestive of religious feeling?" W. muttered something to the effect that otherwise he would be a fool. I begged him not to apply depreciatory epithets, even to himself, and resumed: "Now listen again to Hanslick:—

"'Winterfeld has shown that many of the most celebrated airs from "The Messiah," including those most of all admired as being specially suggestive of piety, have been taken from secular duets (mostly erotic), composed in the years 1711-12, when Handel set to music certain madrigals by Mauro Ortensio for the Electoral Princess Caroline of Hanover. The music of the second duet, "No, di voi non vo' fidarmi," Handel employed unaltered both in key and melody for the chorus in the first part of "The Messiah," "For unto us a Child is born." The third part of the same duet contains the themes which occur in the chorus of the second part of "The Messiah," "All we like sheep." The music of the Madrigal, No. 16, is essentially the same as the duet in the third part of "The Messiah," "O Death, where is thy sting?" But the words of the Madrigal are as follows:

"Se tu non lasci amore
Mio cor, te pentirai
Lo sò ben io!"

There is a vast number of similar instances, but we need here only refer to the entire series of pastoral pieces from the "Christmas Oratorio," which, as is well known, were naïvely taken from secular cantatas composed for special occasions. And Gluck, whose music, we are taught, attained the sublime height of dramatic accuracy only by every note being scrupulously adapted to each special case—nay, by the melodies being extracted from the very rhythm of the syllables — Gluck has transferred to his "Armida" no fewer than five airs from his early Italian operas.'"

Closing the book with a bang I again looked at my old friend, who now spoke intelligibly. "I cannot argue all that," said he; "nor can you deny the pleasure which I actually feel and have described." I answered: "There is no wish to deny it, the objection is that your feelings and that which causes them have nothing essentially to do with music as an art." "Pray," was the retort, "how do you hear music?" I opened the book again, and instantly my thoughts went back to an old Methodist local preacher whom, in my young days, I used to "sit under" for the sake of his quaint and pithy sayings in the dialect of the country. The ancient man—he was a husbandman—was fond of demolishing arguments by appeal to the "law and to the testimony." "Oh! Oh!" he would exclaim to an imaginary opponent, "that's your geam, be it? But I knaw where to have 'ee. I'll just turn to Job, sixteen and dree (three), and take a veaw (few verses) out o' that." The homely figure of the faithful old teacher rose before me as I proceeded to take a "veaw" more out of Hanslick. "Listen," said I to W.:—

"'The most essential condition to the æsthetic enjoyment of music is that of listening to a composition for its own sake, no matter what it is or what construction it may bear. The moment music is used as a means to induce certain states of mind, as accessory or ornamental, it ceases to be an art, in a purely musical sense. The elemental properties of music are very frequently confounded with its artistic beauty—in other words, a part is taken for the whole, and unutterable confusion ensues. Hundreds of sayings about "music" do not apply to the art as such, but to the sensuous action of its material only.'"

My friend replied that the sensuous action suited him, and that he was not capable of hearing music for its own sake. To this I answered that unfortunately the vast majority of Concert-goers were like him, and, as a result, composers in these latter days degrade music by making it first of all an appeal to sensation. There is even a danger that pure music—artistically beautiful in itself—will die out, and that the public will tolerate nothing that does not pretend to tell a story, illustrate some extraneous thought, or simply thrill the nerves. I offered to lend the book to W.—it was made plain by his decrying epithets that he had not really read it—but he said that he would buy one for himself, which I thought much better. You, my long-suffering reader, should do the same.

A man who has a library, and reads the books in it—which does not always follow—acts unwisely when he takes up the volumes indiscriminately. He should regard his possession as a pasture farm divided into fields, according to similarity of subject, and then browse in one enclosure before proceeding to another. I have lately been going through some illustrated music-books of the last century, the perusal of which has lightened in very pleasant fashion the dark and foggy December days. How charmingly not a few of these volumes are "got up"! Open before me now is a beautifully clean, fresh copy of Handel's "Julius Cæsar"—the first edition, octavo, published by Cluer in 1724. Cluer, who was himself an artist, must have spent much money upon this book, the whole of the music being printed from finely engraved plates, while the title-page is a specimen of its kind not unworthy of the best French work at a later date. At the top of the composition (probably Cluer's own) two flying angels, charmingly graceful figures, display a placard, whereon is inscribed "Julius Cæsar: An Opera. Compos'd by G. Frederick Handel, of London, Gent." Immediately below, a third winged creature is engaged in blowing a trumpet; the base of the picture being occupied by two female figures, one playing a harpsichord, the other a viol da gamba. In the immediate background stands a well-filled book-case, and in the distance is a colonnade, meant, perhaps, for that of Burlington House. The engraving is worthy of the design, and the beauty of the entire volume makes one marvel either at the boldness of the publisher in expecting a return from the limited musical public of the day, or at the readiness of that public to encourage the issue of expensive books. But the early decades of the eighteenth century were rich in such productions. I take up two pretty volumes entitled "A Collection of Songs, with the Musick, by Mr. Leveridge. London. Engraved and Printed for the Author in Tavistock Street, Covent Garden. 1727." According to Lowndes, these are the only volumes published by the famous bass of Lincoln's Inn Fields, though, as need scarcely be said, other compositions from his pen have come down to us. In 1727 "Dick" was keeping a coffee-house in Tavistock Street, where, no doubt, he both sang and sold his songs. I am inclined to think that among his customers was William Hogarth, who may have wiped off a "score" by designing a frontispiece for the "Collection." Hogarth's name, it is true, does not appear on the plate, but the usually accurate Lowndes vouches for the master's handiwork, to say nothing of what I may call internal evidence. The engraving represents Bacchus and Venus, attended by Cupid, seated on two substantial clouds, looking complacently down upon the Genius of Music, who has cast at their feet, as an offering, a violoncello and an open book. The figures are admirably drawn, though the engraving is somewhat rough. The mythological personages are, I need not insist, very happily chosen, especially Bacchus, who could only approve such sentiments as these:—

When dull cares doe attack ye,
Drinking will those clouds repel;
Four good bottles will make ye
Happy, they seldome fail.
If a fifth should be wanted,
Do but call, 'twill be granted.
Thus youl easy obtain
A remedy for all pain.

It is to be hoped that none of Mr. Leveridge's patrons were judges of poetry, and that they bought the coffee-house keeper's books for the sake of material excellence, since in that case there was a quid pro quo.

Every way a more remarkable collection of English songs appeared in folio in 1737. Lowndes thus describes it: "The Musical Entertainer, engraved by George Bickham, Junr. (A Collection of Songs by various Composers, edited by John Frederic Lampe, and engraved on copper-plates, with a vignette on every page. Copies are frequently mutilated by print collectors.) Lond., 1737-8. 2 vols., folio." The mutilation of which Lowndes speaks is probably the reason why I never met with a copy till the other day, when, to my great satisfaction, one came under my hand and into my possession, though neither quite perfect nor in the best possible state. The editor or publishers of this collection must have taken upon them considerable responsibility, for the work is very expensively got up; the words and music are exquisitely engraved, and the large vignette, at the head of each song, is designed with spirit, while the plates are entitled to rank among Bickham's best work. The designs, however, are not all original, one of them being easily recognised as adapted from Hogarth's "Midnight Conversation." I should add that the tail-pieces and ornamental borders are not less charming in their way than the vignettes. It would be a great pleasure to take my complaisant reader through the collection and discourse upon it with what anyone less courteous would probably call the garrulity of age. But space and time are against such a course, and I must be content to notice one song only. It is entitled "The Ladies' Lamentation for ye Loss of Senesino," and is headed by a vignette representing that famous and pampered male soprano, receiving the adieux of his admirers on the quay near which lies the ship in which he is to sail. The artist, who must have known Senesino well, being contemporary with him in London, represents the Italian as a lanky, weak-legged person standing in an affected attitude and waving off the tearful women who are begging him to remain among them. The men in the picture are cheering the popular idol or bowing low before him, while two porters, one a negro, are laden with boxes and bags inscribed "Ready Money." It is necessary to quote discreetly from the words of the song, since the taste of some verses is not that of the present day. The poet meets a weeping lady and inquires the reason of her distress. He continues:—

"I gently requested the cause of her moan,
She told me her sweet Senesino was flown,
And in that sad posture she'd ever remain,
Unless the dear charmer would come back again."

. . . . .

"Perhaps 'tis some Linnet, some Blackbird, said I,
Perhaps 'tis your Lark, that has flown to the sky;
Come dry up your tears and abandon your grief,
I'll bring you another to give you relief."

No Linnet, no Blackbird, no Skylark, said she,
But one much more tunefull by far than all three,
My sweet Senesino for whom I thus cry
Is sweeter than all the wing'd songsters that fly.

Mark now the value of old song-books as throwing light upon the incidents and manners of the past. Nothing in the pages of musical history conveys so strong an idea of the position held in England by the arrogant Italian soprano than the ditty from which I have quoted. Moreover, it throws a flood of light upon the difficulties which beset Handel in having to propitiate these worshipped warblers and their votaries.

Dear reader, I have reached the end of my tether, though there is much more to say about illustrated song-books. When we meet again I shall be ready for another gossip on the subject. W. has just entered my study, armed with Hanslick. He looks combative and there will be an argument, the worst of which he, of course, will get. I lay down my pen for the fray. X.

THE FALL OF BONONCINI.

THE short biographical notice of Bononcini written by [G.] in Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians" contains the following passage:—

"About the year 1731, the discovery that a madrigal to the words 'In una siepe ombrosa,' which had been submitted to the Academy (of Ancient Music) some years previously as his (Bononcini's) composition, was a mere transcript of one by Lotti, led to a long correspondence, and caused a great deal of excitement and much irritation against Bononcini, and was the first step in his fall. It is difficult to understand why a man of his abilities, whose own madrigals were well known and highly thought of (see Hawkins's testimony) should have borrowed from a composer whose equal he certainly was, if, indeed, he did borrow Lotti's music at all—which is by no means certain (Hawkins, ch. 185)."

The doubt raised by [G.] is worth resolving, and the following remarks upon the subject may be read with interest, not only as touching an historic case of alleged plagiarism, but because of its connection with famous names.

I do not understand [G.'s] reference to Hawkins in support of the doubt he entertains. That historian limits himself to a bare statement of the case till in the last paragraph he remarks: "But whether the letters referred to are not evidence of his (Bononcini's) claim, and also of the injustice of it, will hardly bear a question." These words are pretty strong evidence as to the opinion entertained by Hawkins, and I am bound to add that no unprejudiced reader of the letters mentioned by him can avoid the conclusion that Bononcini did endeavour to palm off as his own a composition from the pen of Lotti. With [G.] I cannot conceive why he played a game so dangerous and disgraceful. But it is not always the destitute who are caught at petty larceny.

I will now relate the whole story in detail, premising that my facts are drawn from a rare pamphlet published in London under date 1732, and entitled "Letters from the Academy of Ancient Music at London to Signor Antonio Lotti of Venice with his Answers and Testimonials." This is the correspondence mentioned by Hawkins, who obtained from it the materials for his brief but very fair summary of the transaction. I may add that my copy of the pamphlet is bound up with some others in a volume which once belonged to Dr. Boyce, and was Lot 112 in the catalogue of his sale.

In the year 1710 an institution styled the Academy of Ancient Music was founded in London for the study and practice of vocal and instrumental works. With its early achievements I am not now concerned, but it is important to observe that among its members was Dr. Greene, who seceded in 1828 to set up a rival society at the Devil Tavern, Temple Bar. Before thus—as said the wags of the period—going to the Devil, Greene (vide Hawkins) introduced to the Academy a five-part madrigal, "In una siepe ombrosa," purporting to be the composition of Bononcini, who was in London at the time. Not long afterwards, the Directors of the Academy, among them Dr. Pepusch and Bernard Gates, had their attention called by one of the members to a collection of vocal works bearing the name of Lotti. Within the covers of this volume was the very madrigal before received and performed as Bononcini's! Accepting the evidence of the printed book (obtained from Venice, where Lotti then resided as Organist of St. Mark's), the Directors caused the madrigal again to be performed, but now under Lotti's name. Straightway came a haughty epistle from Bononcini, complaining bitterly of what had been done, charging Lotti with having stolen the composition from him, and asserting that he (Bononcini) had written it thirty years before, at the command of the Emperor Leopold, in whose library it would be found. This statement was so positive and circumstantial that the Directors felt bound, for their own credit's sake and that of the Academy (of which Bononcini was a member), to investigate the matter and, if possible, get at the truth. Accordingly they instructed their secretary, Mr. Hawley Bishop, to communicate with Lotti, and also to enquire of Fux, the Emperor of Austria's Chapel Master, with regard to Bononcini's statement that a copy of the madrigal would be found in the Imperial Library.

On February 5, 1731, Mr. Bishop wrote to Lotti, in Latin, placing before him the circumstances stated above, and adding: "The Academy, entirely impartial between you, not more favouring him (Bononcini), though a member, than you, known to them only from your reputation, but consulting the honour of both, ordered me to write this letter to you, and another on the same subject to M. Fux, Chapel Master to the Emperor, that, the truth being discovered, the real author may receive his deserved praise."

Lotti replied, in French, on March 29. He seems to have been a very amiable and courteous gentleman, who impressed the stamp of fine and delicate feeling on every page of his correspondence. Coming to the matter at issue after some complimentary expressions addressed to the English nation and the "illustrious Academy," Lotti declared himself much surprised at having to prove his right in a work which for six years had been before the public under his name. He added: "Had this been represented to me by any other, I would have appealed to the public notoriety of the fact, and have intrenched myself in silence, but the respect I owe to you, and the illustrious body you represent, obliges me to satisfy your request." In substance, the following is what Lotti had to say:—

The contents of the volume, including the disputed piece, were composed shortly before the book was printed, and several professors and amateurs saw the Madrigal in process of writing, or sang it, or heard it rehearsed, while only a rough copy existed. The verses were written by the Abbate Pariati (poet to Charles VI.), who was then in Venice. Lotti being in the habit of exchanging compositions with Ziani, second Chapel Master to the Emperor Leopold, sent a MS. copy of "In una siepe" to Vienna, where, through Ziani's influence, it was sung at Court, and so pleased the Emperor that Lotti was requested to forward more works of the same kind. Upon this Lotti finished and despatched to Vienna some other pieces. These, with the madrigal, were afterwards published in the volume before-mentioned, and dedicated to Leopold's successor, Joseph I., who rewarded the composer by presenting to him a gold chain.

"This, sir," continued the organist of St. Mark's, "is, in short, the history you required, and, for a reward of my obedience, I only desire you to be very sure that no one, willing to do M. Bononcini an ill turn, has falsely attributed to him the letter written to the Academy in his name, for it is incredible that, learned as he is, he should, merely out of gaiety of heart, adopt my defects for his own."

It was now Mr. Hawley Bishop's duty to communicate with Bononcini. This he did on April 14, sending with copies of the letter to Lotti and that gentleman's answer a short note, from which the following is an extract:—

"The Academy thought themselves obliged in justice to acquaint you with what he (Lotti) says in support of his claim and in opposition to yours. I have, therefore, omitted a post in returning him an answer, that I might have an opportunity of receiving your commands in relation to anything you shall think proper for me to say in reply. I shall wait till the middle of next week in expectation of the favour of a letter from you."

What sort of treatment the secretary's communications met with at the hands of Bononcini appears in the course of a second letter to Lotti, dated June 5. Mr. Bishop said à propos:

"I also wrote a letter to Signor Bononcini, which was delivered into his own hands, in which I sent him copies of both our letters, and told him I would wait a week before I wrote to you again, that he might, if he should think proper, have an opportunity of replying. But I waited a fortnight to no purpose. I then sent a second letter by the keeper of our library, and, Signor Bononcini not being at home two or three times, I ordered it to be left with his servant but, which I am surprised at, was denied, for the servant said he had orders to receive no letters but what came by post. Thus stands the affair with Signor Bononcini."

The secretary added that Bononcini's friends continued to assert his right in the madrigal, to accuse Lotti of theft, and the Academy of slander. He therefore begged, the more because no reply had come from Fux, that his correspondent "would be pleased to send some certificates of the Conte di Par, Abbate Pariati, or some others who saw the madrigal at Venice before it was published."

Lotti replied to Mr. Bishop's Latin letter by one in Italian, observing, after compliments, that he could understand the fuss made "were the dispute about an only child, but for a madrigal indeed it is too much, since Signor Bononcini can make others equal and much superior." He playfully added that all was quiet at Venice and Vienna, and that his friends rallied him upon a work from his pen being contested as though it were the Golden Apple. Coming to business, he said: "For the certificates you desire of me, I should really think I have no occasion for this remedy, because I find myself in health, but I ought to refer myself, and submit to the commands of the Academy; therefore I enclose some papers from Vienna and from Venice, sufficient even for those who have a hatred for truth." We will now examine these documents.

The first opens solemnly: "In the name of the Eternal God, Amen," and is a certificate of Joseph Uccelli, a public notary of Venice, attesting that on Sunday, August 12, 1731, personally appeared before him the following gentlemen: the Rev. Antonio Bisi, Chapel Master of the Most Serene Republic; Gerolamo Melari, Musician of the Ducal Chapel of St. Mark; Claudio Frangioni, also a Musician of the Chapel; the Rev. Clemente Leopoldo de Tarsis and Ottavio, Hereditary Postmaster-General of the Empire at Venice, and Georgio Gentili, first violin of the Ducal Chapel. These persons having taken an oath, "attested, deposed, and affirmed," so runs the notary's certificate, "that the last madrigal which begins, 'In una siepe ombrosa,' in the printed book of Duetti, &c., of Signor Ant. Lotti, organist of the Ducal Chapel of St. Mark, which I showed to each of them, and the music of the said madrigal, as it at present appears in the print, was composed by the aforesaid Signor Ant. Lotti, and this they say they know, some from having seen it composing in the rough draught, some from having sung it, and some from having heard it practised before it was sent to the press; and that this is the truth, they have desired me hereafter mentioned to attest this public instrument of their valid sworn deposition, and they are ready to depose the same before any judge, magistrate, or tribunal whatever." This document was accompanied by another in which two traders on the Exchange of Venice affirm the official character and credit of the notary.

The next certificate is signed by G. Francisco Maria Bettoni, who proves that he saw the madrigal in the rough draught, "with the alterations and erasures of some notes as the work went on"; that he heard it practised, and that he himself sent it to the printer, who gave the author twenty-five copies.

A certificate of Michael Angelo Gasparini comes next. Gasparini asserts that he was a fellow student with Lotti under Legrenzi, and had continued in uninterrupted friendship with him for forty-five years. He remembered reading the poetry of the madrigal before Lotti set it to music, and was one of the first who sang it in Lotti's house and other places. He recollected also the sending of the work to *Z*iani, and deposed to having advised its insertion in the volume of Duetti, &c.

So much for the Venetian witnesses, and now I turn to those of Vienna.

There is, first of all, a certificate jointly made by Pietro Pariati, Poet to his Cæsarian and Catholic Majesty; Giovan. Guiseppe Fux, Chapel Master to his Cæsarian Majesty; Antonio Caldara, Vice-Chapel Master; and Gaetano Orsini, Musician to the Court. These persons say: "We ratify that these musical compositions (the contents of the volume of Duetti, &c., including the madrigal) were all produced by the pen and genius of the abovesaid Signor Ant. Lotti; only the poetry of the Duetti, Terzetti, and Madrigal was expressly made at the request of the said Signor Lotti by Sig. Abbate Pariati (one of the attestants), Poet of his Cæsarian and Catholic Majesty." Gaetano Orsini adds, on his own part, that he has in his possession the MS. sent by Lotti to *Z*iani, and that the music was sung "during a service of the table in the time of the most august Emperor Leopold I., of glorious memory."

Adam Alvera, public notary in Vienna, next certifies to the foregoing document as having been subscribed before him, and the Prætorian Court of Vienna bears witness to Alvera's official character and credit.

The last document in the correspondence is a Latin letter to Lotti, signed by the following directors of the Academy: John Pelling, S.T.P.; Hen. Needler, amateur; Humphry Wyrley, amateur; J. C. Pepusch, Doctor of Music; Bernard Gates, Master of the Children of his Majesty's Chapel; and J. Freeman, Gentleman of the same Chapel. They say:—

"The testimonies, dear sir, you transmitted to us have had their due weight with us, and abundantly confirm us in the good opinion we had before conceived of you. It can be no disagreeable news to you to hear that we have sent them, together with the several letters that have passed between us, to be printed. This procedure will serve eternally to convince you of our good and sincere intentions towards you, and at the same time confound those who have taken upon them to arraign our conduct throughout this affair."

All this while, and after the correspondence appeared in print, Bononcini kept silence. [G.] suggests that he was too proud to speak; it is much more likely that he had nothing to say. What could he possibly urge in defence when, in opposition to his statement that he had composed the madrigal thirty years before, Pariati testified on oath that he had written the words expressly for Lotti at a comparatively recent date? "From that time," says Hawkins, "the reputation of Bononcini began to sink in the world." Able musician though he was, he could not tand up against the opprobrium resulting from a perfectly gratuitous act of dishonesty, and not long afterwards he left England as the dupe and ally of an impostor who pretended that he could make gold.

THE PROPOSED MANCHESTER CONSERVATOIRE.

On Thursday, the 3rd ult., a project was unfolded by Sir Charles Hallé, at Manchester, which calls for the serious and sympathetic attention of all musicians throughout the country. It is true that the realisation or rejection of the scheme depends entirely on the attitude which Manchester and Manchester alone decides to assume, and it is not our purpose to enter on a consideration of its merits in any spirit of partisanship. The practicability of the undertaking is being carefully considered by a well-chosen committee, in which business men are fully represented. We do not purpose, therefore, to do more than view the project in the light of its artistic significance and importance.

The musical situation in Manchester may be thus briefly summarised. At the time of the Art Treasures Exhibition in 1857, Sir Charles Hallé, who was entrusted with the direction of the musical arrangements, got together a professional orchestra, and started his own Orchestral Concerts. The enterprise, which barely paid its way at first, gradually developed into a prosperous concern, and now numbers no fewer than 1,200 subscribers. Sir Charles Hallé, the proprietor, creator, and directing spirit for nearly thirty-five years of this great institution, though still happily hale and vigorous, has already passed his seventieth year, and the contingencies and certainties that thrust themselves before a man in his position and at his time of life have not unnaturally come to occupy his serious attention. As he put it at the meeting in the Town Hall on the 3rd ult.: "It has been a trouble to me for many years to think of what is to become of these Concerts when I am gone, or when my powers have failed to such a degree that I can no longer conduct them with the requisite energy. . . . It has already been suggested to me that in all probability the Concerts will crumble to pieces when I can no longer direct them." To avert this contingency Sir Charles Hallé is desirous, while the concern is at the height of its popularity and prosperity, to make over his Concerts to a company—either the directorate of the Gentlemen's Concerts or some society like it, on a broader basis, retaining his services as salaried conductor for as long as he is able to conduct and direct them. An integral part of the scheme, however, must be the erection of a new Concert-hall, for the Free Trade Hall, in which the Concerts are held at present, may at any moment be permanently secured for other purposes, and the seating power of the Gentlemen's Concert Hall is far too limited. The necessity, or the desirability, of building a new hall, gave Sir Charles Hallé the opportunity for broaching the second and more interesting part of his scheme, which may be set forth in his own words:—

"He must say that from his experience, from what he heard and from what had been written to him, a good many people felt that the time had come when a really great musical Conservatorium should be founded here in Manchester. For establishing such an institution Manchester was never in such an excellent position as now, because they had professors for every musical instrument, and very excellent ones too, that had a name through all the kingdom, resident here in Manchester. No town in the whole of England, with the exception of London, was so favoured in that respect, and therefore with such facilities it must be clear that an enormous number of people desired, or would desire, to study music. Some facts that had come to his knowledge showed this. Only that day he had heard that every week upwards of 600 music lessons were given in one single house (Messrs. Forsyths') in Deansgate. They had a certain number of rooms which they let out to music professors."

After some discussion, in which Sir W. Houldsworth, M.P., Mr. W. Mather, M.P., Mr. J. W. Maclure, M.P., Dr. Hiles, Mr. G. Freemantle, and other gentlemen took part, the matter was referred to a committee, who will, in due course, report to a future meeting on Sir Charles Hallé's proposals. The tone of them was uniformly sympathetic, and one of the speakers actually went so far as to suggest that the Municipality, out of the funds at its disposal, should contribute to the support of the proposed school. A note of useful warning, however, was struck by Dr. Hiles, who, while cordially welcoming Sir Charles Hallé's desire to assist in the establishment of a Music School in Manchester, questioned the advisability of making the school in any way dependent on the success of the Concerts, the popularity of which, when Sir Charles Hallé ceased to conduct them, might be subject to fluctuation. He was not aware, he added, that such a close connection between a school and a concert speculation existed at any of the Continental Conservatoires. To this Sir Charles Hallé replied that he did not consider the two parts of his scheme as inseparably connected, but rather thought of the students of the School of Music being associated with the Concerts, as at the Leipzig and Paris Conservatoires, one benefiting the other.

This being so, and pending the report of the committee, we may take the practical outcome of the meeting to amount to this: that whether in close or loose connection with the Manchester Orchestral Concerts, the continuance of which may be taken for granted, there is a strong feeling in favour of the establishment of a local school of music at Manchester, which if it takes practical shape, should do for Lancashire what the Royal Academy and the Royal College of Music do for London. Even in Manchester, although there are a great many excellent teachers, there are, on the other hand, far too many pretentious and incompetent instructors, musical crammers, and "mock doctors." Now it would be the object of a Conservatoire to gather to itself all the wheat and reject the chaff. All the really first-rate local teachers would probably be attached to the school, and the guileless public would have — what it has not at present—a sure and unmistakable method of distinguishing the genuine from the bogus article. In conclusion, the establishment of such a Conservatoire is to be welcomed on two grounds—one special and one general. There is a great deal of admirable raw musical material in Lancashire, both vocal and instrumental, but it needs to be hewn into shape and form; and it is precisely this desired quality of finish, method, scholarship, or "school," that such an institution is fitted to bestow. The "grit" and enthusiasm are there, but they need to be controlled and guided by the formative influences which, it is to be hoped, will radiate from the new Academy. Lastly, the realisation of such a scheme is eminently calculated to help on the process of decentralisation which is so much needed in the domain of English art. Manchester is already a centre of musical enlightenment, but its power for good would be still further enhanced if to the opportunities of hearing good music which already abound there were added the opportunities of obtaining an all-round musical education without migrating to London or the Continent.

OUR MOZART SUPPLEMENT.

It is with natural and unqualified satisfaction that we acknowledge the generous reception given by the public to our supplement in commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of Mozart's death. Our desire was to do something not unworthy of the homage which we believed the world was ready to pay at the master's shrine, and in the accomplishment of that purpose it was a matter of course that we spared neither labour nor expense. But under the most favourable circumstances there is an element of speculation in all such enterprises. The public may not entertain the feeling with which they are credited, or a mistake may be made in catering for their taste, or what is put before them may be deemed inadequate. We were fortunate enough to escape one and all of these dangers. It would be presumptuous to assume that the entire contents of the Mozart Supplement met with unreserved approval, but of general satisfaction we have the best possible assurance. That is spoken to by the sale of the whole edition within two or three days of publication. Though conscious that our best had been done under the circumstances, we were scarcely prepared for such an emphatic expression of approval —one which demands our gratitude and is regarded as a very great encouragement. But this is not all. The Supplement was noticed by the Press the country over in a kindly and appreciative spirit, some papers, as the Gloucester Journal, giving nearly a column of extract and comment, and none failing to convey a more or less adequate idea of what had been done. Such generous treatment we look upon as a high reward, and as involving an obligation not likely to be forgotten.

Practical recognition of the favour shown to us by the musical public is not more obvious, as a duty, than is the form it may best take. Our aim must be to make The Musical Times more than ever deserving of the support so freely given to it. That may be done in two ways—first, by strengthening the ordinary issues of our Journal in any manner adapted to improve the interest and value of their contents; second, by means of special efforts such as that which produced the Mozart Supplement. We shall keep both courses before us, and pursue them as may seem advisable, the intention being to publish a Supplement, dealing with some matter of particular interest, towards the close of each year. With regard to the regular monthly issues, new features will be introduced as, after due examination, they commend themselves in furtherance of a purpose to make The Musical Times increasingly worthy of the most popular and widely diffused of arts. Should our efforts prove successful, we shall surely receive adequate support from the public who, during so many years, have given us steadfast encouragement. Faith in that result is our best incentive, and in that faith we address ourselves anew to our work.

Apropos of the performance of Bach's "St. Matthew Passion" at the recent Birmingham Festival, it may be interesting to know what Mendelssohn, that true disciple of Bach, thought of the prospects of the great Cantor's work being given in England. Through the kindness of Miss Mounsey—who has inherited from her late sister, Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew, Mendelssohn's letters to Mr. Bartholomew—we are enabled to give the following unpublished letter from the composer to his English translator. A pathetic interest is attached to the letter, in that a week after it was written Mendelssohn was first seized with his fatal illness. On the following November 4 the hand of the great musician letter-writer was for ever stilled. The letter is in Mendelssohn's own English, and it is probably one of the last that he wrote in our language:—

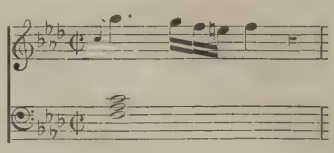
"Leipsic, October 2, 1847.

"My dear Sir,—Many thanks for your two kind letters. I received yesterday the second, and have spoken to Mr. Buxton [Ewer and Co.] about Bach's Passion. But at the same time, I was obliged to give him at full length the reasons why it is impossible to me to do as you wished me. I cannot rescore the work, nor can I point out any alterations, as it has always been a rule for me to leave these works absolutely as they were written, and as I have often quarrelled with those who did not. And at the same time, the circumstance of Christ being introduced in the music, which certainly will not do for England, seems to me so essential to the whole work, to its structure and its meaning—particularly with regard to the Passione, the one after St. Matth.—that I feel convinced these masterpieces cannot for the present moment be made popular in your Country. It will nevertheless be a source of gratitude to all those musicians who are really devoted to that great master, and that you have devoted so much time and pains upon his greatest works; but for the public I fear they will remain unavailable—at least, if they are so in their present form I should not be able to alter them for the public's sake, or for any other reason. All this Mr. Buxton will tell you at length, and will also excuse my writing in so much haste. I have so much work on my hands that I hardly know what to begin with, and it is also for this reason that I must beg you to excuse my writing an Organ-part to the Motetts. It would be impossible, or at least useless, to add anything new to such a part, and whoever writes it should limit himself to making an accompaniment from what he finds in the voice-parts, a sort of arrangement; this might easily be done by every skilful musician, but, as I say, the quantity of business which surrounds me prevents my doing it, much as I should have liked to do as you wished me.

"And have many thanks for all the kind and friendly things which every letter of yours contains, and for which I shall always feel heartily and sincerely indebted to you. And believe me, now and always to remain,—Yours very truly,

"Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy."

There is another fanatic to the fore with an improved system of musical notation, that highly desirable but hopeless scheme on which so many ingenious minds have wasted time and thought. The present invention attempts to simplify music in various directions; but chiefly, and most reasonably, in the matter of time. Time instead of the semibreve is to be made the scientific basis of notation. Notes are therefore fractions of time. The semibreve and minim are dispensed with, and the crotchet made the invariable unit or "beat," having for its binary sub-divisions the quaver and semiquaver, and for its ternary sub-divisions two new characters, not described, called the tierce and semitierce. The only varieties of time, therefore, would be two-time, three-time, and four-time. Rests appear to be indicated by the same characters as notes, but with white (minim-like) heads instead of black. This seems a decided error. The gain in this system is in the abolition of complex time-signatures; but the inventor seems to have made no provision for notes longer than a beat in length. He speaks indeed of "a few signs of prolongation," but the rejected semibreve and minim would surely serve as well as new signs? We have tried to translate a bar of ordinary pianoforte music—say the following:—



into the new notation, and have only succeeded in making it look a veritable scarecrow. Finally, the inventor utterly alienates our sympathies by saying—"The clefs are retained on practical grounds, but their abolition should be urged, so as to obviate the needless difficulty of different readings for the two hands on a pianoforte, organ, &c." Once grasp the idea of a stave of eleven lines and this difficulty vanishes. But our friend proclaims himself an amateur in his opening sentences. He says: "These difficulties (i.e., of notation) have deterred, and must—until removed—always deter, many persons from the study of music, or from subsequently practising it. The proposed simplified notation will curtail the period and expense of tuition, whilst tending largely to increase the number of learners." If for no other reason the system stands self-condemned.

A little while ago the Ménestrel published a most interesting set of articles on the great Napoleon as a patron and lover of music. It had been contended that he was destitute of any real interest in the arts; but the authors of the article in question were able to give convincing proof that his devotion to music was not merely of a personal character, as in the case of Grassini, but occupied his thoughts even when he was campaigning. Not long ago, when Count Moltke died, it transpired amongst other traits of that famous warrior, that he was exceedingly fond of music, and in the habit of attending Concerts in Berlin quite to the close of his long career. Of a very different stamp, in this as in other matters, is the redoubtable Prince Bismarck, whose conversations with the painter Lenbach on this subject have lately been reproduced in a German paper. At the gymnasium which he attended as a boy, his music lessons were the hours which he dreaded more than any other. He had no ear and no aptitude. His memory, so good in other respects, was entirely at fault where crotchets and quavers were concerned, and his lessons generally ended in tears. Neither the Concert-room nor the opera house ever exerted any attraction over him. His favourite instrument is "a good Barbary organ" or a hurdy-gurdy. It would seem as though Shakespeare was right when he declared that music was incompatible with diplomacy. But then we are confronted with the case of Napoleon cited above.

One of the daily papers gave, about a fortnight ago, some interesting information as to the course of study followed by Mrs. Alice Shaw, who came over to London some three years back with the proud title of "La Belle Siffleuse." Mrs. Shaw, to quote the journal in question, "says she began by studying upon exactly the same principles as those upon which one would study singing, practising scales and exercises, and then learning simple airs. Now, after all her perseverance, she states that she finds it increasingly easy to produce her notes and effects, but that it takes far more study to learn to whistle the air of a song than to sing it." Was it not Leech who, in one of his pictures in Punch, many years ago, portrayed the ravages of the whistling mania among the rising generation? Of late years the malady has spread to adult and fashionable circles, but it is highly reassuring to learn, on the authority of such an expert as Mrs. Shaw, that it takes far more study to learn to whistle the air of a song than to sing it. In our ignorance we had thought (and feared) that it was precisely the reverse. This timely word of warning may be most beneficial in restraining those aspirants who are tempted to embrace the arduous calling of the whistling virtuoso. Another serious consideration is this, that in other walks of music good looks are not essential; but in the sibilatory department beauty is indispensable; you must be a belle siffleuse or a beau siffleur—like a beau sabreur—or nothing.

A circular, gorgeous in rainbow hues, lies before us directing, nay, insisting upon attention being given to the advertiser's infallible method of imparting a thorough knowledge of the pianoforte with one term's instruction at So-and-so's Academy of Music, and upon the following reasonable terms: "Classes, conducted by an assistant, 6s. 6d. per quarter (method book gratis); Young Person's (query, servant maid's?) private tuition, one lesson a week, 9s. 6d.; Adults, strictly private tuition under Principal, 14s. 6d., or of a lady tutor, 11s. 6d." It is interesting to know that a lesson from a lady is worth 3d. less than the same instruction imparted by a gentleman. But this tuition must be very remarkable if it at all corresponds with the advertiser's claims. Amongst other things we are told that "all the ledger line notes used in music above treble and bass clefs are taught in one simple lesson," and "Time, under the new method, is made so simple that a child of seven can understand it in the second week." The inventors of infallible systems of tuition would do well sometimes to bethink them that it is very easy to teach principles and facts to a pupil; the difficulty is in getting the pupil to remember the facts she has learned, and the impossibility is in getting her to apply the principles she has succeeded in remembering.

Dr. Stelzner's new instrument, the Violotta, does not seem to have elicited unreserved approval from musical experts, perhaps because the inventor has made it part of a rash attempt to supersede—or, at least, improve upon—the existing model for violins. But there is another inventor to the fore with an instrument far more needed than the Violotta. Mr. W. Wyatt's Perfected Chromatic Double-slide Trumpet should, if it comes anywhere near its maker's estimate, be a real boon to trumpet players. It can be crooked in F, E, E flat, D, D flat, or C, and the double-slide allows all semitones to be obtained perfectly in tune from E flat in the bass stave to top C. Yet there are not wanting authorities who believe that the day of all slide instruments is over. It is always asserted that the tone of a horn, trombone, or trumpet is injured by the addition of valves, but experience entirely fails to corroborate this, and certainly the greater ease with which valved instruments can be learned is an irresistible argument in their favour.

In a recent number of the Allgemeine Musik-Zeitung Herr Otto Lessmann draws attention to a remarkable "thematic coincidence." It appears that at the Mozart Concert given in the Singakademie on the 5th ult. an Offertorium of the master's was performed, and in this the observant critic discovered the theme of the "Ode to Joy" in Beethoven's Choral Symphony. The Offertorium in question is No. 25 of Series 3 in the Breitkopf and Härtel Edition of Mozart's works, and the coincidence referred to by Herr Lessmann is found in a figure which occurs frequently in the course of the work, and which, suggested on the first page, takes this form on the second and third:—

The step just taken by the Morley Memorial College is so emphatically in the right direction that a word of approval in these columns is justly due. The College will open on the 4th inst., and in addition to the usual classes there will be one for orchestral music. Mr. Dove, the well-known teacher at the College, has been appointed Conductor. It is greatly to be hoped that the new venture will prove a success and thus attain permanence. Not only will it help to develop individual talent and be a source of pleasure to the members, but it can scarcely fail to aid largely in the popularisation of one of the most important branches of musical art. It would be a good thing for England—from a musical point of view—if such efforts were made throughout the length and breadth of the land, and we trust, therefore, that all who have influence, and who believe in the civilising influence of music, will give the warmest encouragement to this, the latest indication of our musical awakening.

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

A couple of years ago we had occasion to refer to the very encouraging reception accorded to Mr. Plunket Greene on the occasion of his début before a German audience in Berlin. Mr. Greene has repeated the experiment, and with enhanced success. We translate the following passage from the notice which appears in the Allgemeine Musikzeitung of the 11th ult. After alluding to the interesting nature of the programme, the writer continues: "Mr. Greene's voice has developed both in beauty of tone and compass since his last visit, while his delivery has gained in confidence, warmth, and vivacity of expression. His finely cultivated and remarkably melodious organ exerts the greatest charm in mezza voce and piano effects, and with a right estimate of his artistic capabilities, Mr. Greene does not neglect to make such choice of songs as enable him to display both these gradations of tone to the best possible advantage. His singing is distinguished by refined taste, nobility of feeling, and wealth of dynamic light and shade; his enunciation, even of German words, is excellent, his intonation pure, and his management of the different registers highly finished; in short, his performance bears the stamp of a rare and really distinguished artistic nature. . . . It is especially worthy of note that Mr. Greene was forced to repeat a German song—the 'Feldeinsamkeit' of Brahms; after the Irish songs he was also induced to contribute an encore piece. . . . Mr. Waddington Cooke, the accompanist, deserves especially honourable mention for the admirable way in which, without dominating the soloists or unduly effacing himself, he fulfilled his part of the entertainment, identifying himself in the most delicate and artistic fashion with the conceptions of the singer and the violinist (Herr Johann Kruse)."

Mr. Greene has won many encomiums from English critics, but none more appreciative or eulogistic than the one we quote above. It is pleasant to notice that Mr. Cooke's talents as an accompanist have also been duly acknowledged.

We take the subjoined paragraph from our young contemporary and namesake, The Musical Times, of Queensland. Perhaps some of our readers can give information regarding the gentleman described as "Mr. Jude, a well-known Organist of Liverpool." "We have during the past week had a visit from Mr. Jude, a well-known Organist of Liverpool, and been afforded an opportunity of attending his humorous and musical entertainment. Mr. Jude possesses a pleasing baritone voice, and rendered his own songs (which he says are the best English compositions of this class) with considerable force, and certainly made the most of them. In the course of the entertainment he gave evidence of a neatly-trained hand for the pianoforte, but we cannot think he displayed good taste in bringing into ridicule the mighty works of J. S. Bach and Beethoven; this comes with very bad grace from anyone professing to rank as an organist. To our mind the amusing little anecdote told in connection with Bach's Pianoforte Fugue in D major only served to show the master's great genius, and we were not altogether surprised to hear the word 'shame!' in an undertone, from a gentleman a few seats behind us. When genuine musicians are doing their utmost to raise the standard of music in a young colony, it does an incalculable amount of harm for a visitor from the 'old country' to deride the works of the great masters. We hope Mr. Jude will bear these remarks in mind and endeavour to assist rather than retard the cause of music. We hoped to have had an opportunity of hearing Mr. Jude's organ playing, as he accepted invitations to play at St. John's and All Saints' Churches on Sunday, October 25, which, however, he failed to do."

It has been said of musical artists that they are never satisfied with the press notices they receive; those of a depreciatory character being set down to private malice, while laudatory remarks are not laudatory enough. This is the rule, but Miss Smith, an American flautist, must be the exception since reading the subjoined wonderful eulogy in the Evening World of New York: "The sensation of the afternoon came with Miss Smith in No. 6. Miss Morgan sat at the harp and a dainty little girl with flaxen hair and eye-glasses played first. Miss Smith wore a white gown made baby fashion, with shoulder sleeves and not a trinket of any sort to mar its beauty. When she raised her silver-trimmed flute to her mouth and made the reed pulsate with the inspiration from her pink lips a murmur of admiration ran through the house. Everybody has seen a lady bow a fiddle, but this was the first time a fair flautist had been seen. And so fair, too! She played like an ideal shepherd boy. She had the grace and ease that comes with training and a consciousness of charm, and as a girl and a flautist she was an inspiration for a painter, a poet, and a dreamer." We may remark en passant that a flute with a reed is a decided novelty; or was the critic unable to distinguish between a flute and a clarinet or oboe?

A representative of a Yorkshire paper, having interviewed Madame Marie Roze, came to the conclusion that she is not an easy subject for that operation. The cantatrice says very little, and yet communicates much, by means of which Lord Burleigh's historic nod is the best known example. Unfortunately, the information so conveyed cannot be expressed in words and put into print. The reporter shall here speak for himself on this curious phenomenon: "Her face is so full of expression that she has but to drop a word and you know all she means, but though the answer to your remark or question has been so adequate that it would be ridiculous to ask again, the reply will not go on to paper for it partly consists of the tone of voice, partly of glances of the most beautiful soft dark eyes, partly in manner, partly in a hundred subtle nuances of the language of life that will not go into words, and the wish to give utterance to which is, we think, one of the most potent causes that lead to the production of music, painting, poetry (with its music and rhythm and silences superadded to words), and all the various devices to which creative minds fly in order to make accessible to the senses of others what their souls see."

The reporter shrewdly anticipates a call for an example. He enquired of Madame Roze whether she liked German music or objected to sing it, and the lady answered: "Oh, I am not so patriotic as to object to sing German music. The German music is very fine. Yes, I am a great admirer of Wagner. I do not know German. I know a few words of German." These are plain utterances, but mark what a meaning was given to them by the artist's tone of voice, her "beautiful soft dark eyes," and the "hundred subtle nuances." "They conveyed a recognition of Beethoven as the greatest world-composer, thoroughly felt and understood and of the poetic power of other German composers; memories of life and suffering and joy expressed by such great music all blent with painful and ever vivid memories of that terrible time in Paris when Madame Roze was as a ministering angel among her countrymen, suffering from the havoc Germany had made. They showed the feeling that art is intimately welded into life, and that memories of life and the association of ideas and of music and of life cannot be dissevered, and yet with an artist like Madame Roze no extraneous feelings interfere with a true and measured estimate of music as it is in itself."

We regret to learn that the Monday Popular Concerts at Bristol have had a discouraging season. The matter is thus discussed by the intelligent musical critic of the Times and Mirror: "Sundry reasons have been assigned. Complaint was made that the music brought forward was too classical, and a change was affected whereby the classical compositions were reduced in number, and those of a less severe character were increased. This, it is asserted, displeased the classicists. The position of Colston Hall, its draughtiness, the different arranging of the seats, the inadequate lighting of the building (particularly under the galleries, where it is positively dark), have all been urged as reasons why the audiences do not come in larger numbers. The short season of 'Pops' just closed have by no means paid their way, and it is probable there will be another call upon the guarantors. This must lead to a further change in the constitution of the society, and probably to the committee declining to give any more unless sufficient subscribers be forthcoming to provide against loss." The reputation of Bristol as a musical city appears to be gravely compromised by this state of things.

Miss Mary Green Henshaw, the present holder of the Liszt Scholarship (R.A.M.), will at Easter have completed her two years' study under Professor Klindworth, at Berlin, but by arrangement with the trustees will remain with him until October. This valuable Scholarship will be competed for on April 8. Entitling the successful candidate to three years' free instruction at the Academy, and after that to a yearly sum of about £80 for two years to assist him or her in acquiring musical experience on the Continent, the prize may be spoken of as the most valuable at the disposal of the Tenterden Street Institution. The Scholarship, or, more correctly, Scholarships, for the Liszt and Walter Bache Scholarships have been incorporated, are awarded for composition or pianoforte playing, or, if the candidate wishes, for both. Candidates may be of either sex or any nationality, and must be not less than fourteen or more than twenty years of age. The Liszt Scholarship was founded by subscription on the occasion of Liszt's visit to London in 1886, so that Miss Henshaw is the first holder.

A CORRESPONDENT writes: "Your correspondent's anecdote in this month's number respecting Henry Smart, reminds me of a musical trick Smart practised while organist to St. Luke's, Old Street, when interludes were played between each verse of a hymn. He was urged to use the tune "Miles Lane," but at first he strongly objected; however, at last he said: "As you like, only you will see how badly the singers will get on with that high note in it." Then, when duly playing the hymn in service, in the interlude after the first verse he contrived to modulate so as to end the interlude in accordance with his playing the second verse half a tone higher than the first. This process he continued, so that each verse of the hymn was played half a tone higher than the preceding one. The singing need not be described. After the service he triumphantly reminded his advisers that he had foretold the difficulty in singing that high note."

THE musical reporter, printer's reader, and sub-editor of a provincial contemporary, having combined to afford a little amusement at this festive season, spoke of "Hayden's Trio in A"; and made Mozart a Frenchman, whose Trio in E "reveals all the smooth flour of harmony." Warming to their work, they called a certain artist a "baritome," and complained that he was "most partial to the vibretto mode." Then they credited a lady with making the violin her "special duty"; and finished with a really fine stroke of muddlement. A young lady, according to these wags, "sang the 'Bridegroom's Return' and 'Venezia' with all the style and finish of a thoroughly accomplished artist, and was recalled in the most flattering manner, upon each occasion repeating a portion of the former, and giving 'Killarney' in substitution for the latter."

A CRITIC who writes for a journal published not a hundred miles from the Scottish border is amusing in another way. His strength lies in description, as per sample below: "The next piece was Sir A. Sullivan's 'The long day closes,' sung by the choir. It opens with a weird, eerie suggestion, and soon breaks away in pathetic wails, as quickly followed by some grand swells of rich harmony, but again becomes almost painfully pathetic. Then come in some grand outbursts of the bass voices, on which the treble and alto seize, and more wailing follows. The more powerful bassos again rush in to carry through an exultant pæan, but it is of no use, and the performance expires in low and sorrowful measures—all richly musical and fine, but very, very mournful."

THE fuss made about musical degrees for some time past may have more than one aspect, but one is certainly comical, not to say farcical. Incidents of the same character naturally attend upon it and an example of these we have been asked to bring before our readers. It appears that the Warden of the Church Choir Guild, Mr. J. H. Lewis, styles himself Mus. Doc. and D.C.L. of the University of the South. This fact having come under the notice of a contemporary which plays the part of Colonel Pride in the matter of ornamental and alphabetical appendages, expressed doubts as to the existence of such a body as the University of the South, and, of course, as to the right of Mr. Lewis to call himself Mus. Doc. This was rude, and its discourtesy, or something else, stirred Mr. Seymour Kelly, of Chichester, to make an independent enquiry, the result of which he requests us to make public.

ACCORDING to Mr. Kelly, the University of the South is seated at Sewanee, Tennessee, on its own domain of 10,000 acres. It was chartered in 1858, and has power to confer all degrees. It is under the direction of the Episcopal Church, and its Board of Trustees consists of fourteen Bishops! Its degrees are held by many eminent people in this country, among them the Sub-Dean of the Chapels Royal and the Bishop of Aberdeen. As to its standing, the American Secretary of State, answering an enquiry, wrote: "The University of the South is a regularly chartered institution under laws of Tennessee. It has power to confer degrees, and is the University for the Southern States of the Protestant Episcopal Church of America, has large endowments and property, and is first-class in every respect."

WITH regard to Mr. Lewis and his musical degree, we are informed that the "Mus. Doc." was granted on the recommendation of the Bishop of London, who testified in these terms: "This is to certify that James Henry Lewis is of good standing in the Church of England and that from his moral worth and scholarly attainments is worthy of the degree of Mus. Doc." From all this it fully appears that Mr. Lewis is as much entitled to style himself Mus. Doc. in England as an American citizen holding the corresponding Oxford or Cambridge degree, honoris causâ, would be entitled to call himself Mus. Doc. in his own country. What we fail to understand is, first, why the Warden of the Church Choir Guild should desire such a barren distinction; second, why, since he has chosen to wear it, anybody should feel concerned thereat.

A GOOD time is at hand for the Mascagnis of the United States. The National Conservatory of Music "proposes to award prizes for the best grand or comic Opera (opéra comique); for the best Libretto for a grand or comic Opera (opéra comique); for the best pianoforte or violin Concerto; and for the best Symphony, Suite, Oratorio, and Cantata, all of these works to be composed or written by composers and librettists born in the United States and not above thirty-five years of age. The prizes will be as follows:—For the best grand or comic Opera (opéra comique), words and music, $1,000; for the best Libretto for a grand or comic Opera (opéra comique), $500; for the best Symphony, $500; for the best Oratorio, $500; for the best Suite or Cantata, $300; for the best pianoforte or violin Concerto, $200. Each work must be in manuscript form and absolutely new to the public."

ACCORDING to a trans-Atlantic contemporary, "Cavalleria Rusticana" is nothing better than a bag of tricks: "'Cavalleria Rusticana' is as full of tricks as the monkey on a hand-organ. It is a trick to sing the principal tenor song before the curtain rises; a trick to use the church as a contrast to the passionate scenes before it; a trick to call this singing-pantomime a melodrama; a trick to give the same soft, sweet, sensuous Sicilian song over and over again, as a tenor solo, as a soprano solo, as a duet, as a chorus—now in the minor, now in the major, now as an intermezzo, then as a finale; a trick to pass suddenly from piano to forte, from fortissimo to silence; a trick to add Wagnerian orchestration to tunes that might be whistled."

The following paragraph is taken from the Star: "An Insurance Clerk, who spent two hours in St. Paul's Cathedral in order to obtain a good seat for the performance of Spohr's 'Last Judgment,' complains that he was stopped from reading The Musical Times by a verger or some other official. He asks us if it is illegal to read a magazine in St. Paul's. We cannot say; but the best way to test it would be to insist on reading, and see what action the Cathedral authorities took. There is some force in the suggestion that it is not more irreverent to read The Musical Times than to go to sleep in the Cathedral, a course which is frequently followed and is sometimes induced by the sermon."

The following paragraph contains a Bülow story which we do not remember to have met with before: "Hans von Bülow makes use of satire for the effective correction of his choral and orchestral forces. On one occasion he rebuked the feminine half of an oratorio chorus which he was rehearsing. While the tenors and basses were singing their parts the sopranos and altos indulged in conversation. They were called to order several times, but paid no attention. Finally Von Bülow rapped upon his desk and called out, 'Ladies, Rome does not have to be saved to-night,' which remark produced the desired effect."

The Canadian Musician explains to us: "'The Dominion Musical Journal has a funny editor, who announces: "It is impossible for us to be present at all, or even part, of the performances given in Toronto." Volunteered criticisms are therefore desired.'—Musical Times. [Our trans-Atlantic friend evidently does not understand that the journal it refers to is a comic paper; in fact, the Punch of Canadian literary effort. But so it is."] Really! We perused the paper in question without suspicion of the fact. It is plain we have no sense of (Canadian) humour.

We read in the Journal of the Society of Arts: "Information has been received from Colonel K. Levi Fuller, secretary of the committee appointed by the Pianoforte Manufacturers' Association of New York, to inquire into the subject of uniform musical pitch in the United States, that the committee have reported to the Association, and recommend the adoption of the French pitch, or diapason normal (A 435). The meeting held to consider this report on November 6th unanimously agreed to adopt the recommendation, and this pitch will henceforth be the standard for the United States."

In its notice of a recent Concert the Reading Observer drew attention to the fact that "Mr. Phelps played on a valuable Stradivarius violin 500 years old." A wonderful place, Reading! To a Reading MS. we owe the discovery that secular part-music was known in England quite a hundred years before the foundation by Dufay of the first Flemish School; to a Reading print we are now indebted for the information that "Strads" were manufactured 300 years before Stradivarius himself took to the business! Such is fame.

Anent the Birmingham Festival, we hear from America that "there are varying schedules of rates and other confusing regulations and traditions in vogue there, which must be known before an estimate of the mercantile value of any Birmingham Festival production can fairly be made." The "varying schedules of rates" are, no doubt, a fact; but, in connection therewith, it should be known that the highest charges are made for the standard works, and, as a rule, the lowest for the novelties.

A contemporary (Irish), in the course of a long article upon the question "What is music?" observes: "The very tunes that seem so brilliant in opera, separated by a goodly quantity of padding, when jammed together into a quadrille or an album, are flat, stale, and unprofitable except to the publisher." But if they are profitable to the publisher the public buy them; ergo, the public purchase that which is, to them, stale, flat, and unprofitable. Does our Hibernian contemporary mean this?

A Church newspaper speaks of a certain setting of the "Te Deum" as "a stately and dignified composition for this grand hymn of praise for decorative festivals." The same writer states "The endeavour (an anthem, that is to say) deserves support, and a fair trial among the novelties for enlisting sympathy for the cause of missions will doubtless make it a favourite, as it is very cheap." What would Matthew Arnold have said to this example of "lucidity"?

The following distribution of parts has been made in view of the production of "Cavalleria Rusticana" by the Carl Rosa Opera Company at Liverpool: Turridu, Mr. Hedmondt and Mr. Dimitresco; Alfio, Mr. Leslie Crotty and Mr. Eugene; Lola, Miss Esty and Madame Louise Lablache; Lucia, Miss Yorke; Santuzza, Madame Burns and Miss Esty. The double cast of principal characters is an obviously wise precaution.

Music is looking up in Bristol Cathedral, under the auspices of the new Dean, Dr. Pigou, who, by the way, has joined one of the musical societies of the city. The Nicene Creed is now sung on Sunday mornings, and there have been special Advent services, in the music of which members of the Orpheus Glee Society and Bristol Choral Society have taken part. So there is a stir in the erstwhile valley of dry bones.

An American paper offers a puzzle to its readers: "An exquisitely arch and captivating song by Eugen d'Albert was also sung by Miss Mueller-Hartung. The composer is a native of Scotland, whose father was French and mother British. He was educated in Edinburgh, London, and Germany, and has repudiated his native land. He is left to the reader to classify."

Four prizes of £10 each have been awarded by the Belfast Philharmonic Society as follows:—Class 1, for best Madrigal or Part-Song, to Joseph Seymour, Dublin; Class 2, for Chorus, with Organ, to Thomas Sydney Smith, Clapham; Class 3, for Chorus, with Orchestra, to Joseph F. Adams, Birmingham; Class 4, for Instrumental Piece, to Walter Brooks, R.A.M., Hampstead.

The series of articles on the "Great Composers," which Mr. Joseph Bennett has contributed to The Musical Times during the last seventeen years, has now come to an end, at any rate till the death of still living masters provides further material. The place of those papers, so long a feature of this journal, is now taken by another series entitled "From my Study," dealing with musical literature and kindred subjects of interest.

According to the London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, the Lord Mayor and some of the City Companies will henceforth entrust the musical arrangements at their banquets to the Guildhall School of Music. This in token of the high approval which the students' performance of the "Bohemian Girl" received.

Mr. Battison Haynes, who has been appointed Organist of the Chapel Royal, Savoy, studied at Leipzig for four years, taking a first-class certificate; is Professor of Harmony and Counterpoint at the Royal Academy of Music; and has for some time past been Organist at St. Philip's, Sydenham. He succeeds Mr. Henry F. Frost, who has resigned, after holding the post for twenty-six years.

Sic transit! The Academy of Music in New York is to be turned into a permanent circus. "The clown and acrobat," says an American paper, "will gambol where the greatest artists of the operatic world have been heard." Meanwhile our own historic temple of the Muses remains ignobly shut, save when open for an occasional boxing match.

A Hull correspondent asks the language and meaning of the words "Mutschi, buschi quitle. Etche molape newing," which occur in a letter of Mozart, published in our Centenary Supplement. As far as we are aware, they belong to no language and, therefore, have no meaning. Mozart loved a joke.

In another column will be found a notice of the very interesting speech made by Mr. Barnby at the meeting of the Choral Conductors' Alliance. The brevity of our report is due to the fact that an article by Mr. Barnby on the same subject will be given in next month's issue of The Musical Times.

The Anthem published in our last number is credited by an Irish paper to Beechold Jones instead of Berthold Tours. Apparently the sub-editor had his doubts, and got over the difficulty by putting Beechold Jones within quotation marks.

Jean de Reszké has been talking to Americans about the "conservative dulness" of Englishmen. But there is one thing which sparkles brilliantly in the Polish tenor's eyes, and that is the liberal English sovereign.

Another elaborate pianoforte has just been completed by Messrs. Broadwood. It is a Concert Grand, specially made to order in the Louis 16th style, painted white, carved, panelled, gilded and painted with figure subjects.

Her Majesty the Queen has presented Master Jean Gérardy with a beautiful diamond horse-shoe scarf-pin as a souvenir of his visit to Windsor Castle on Tuesday evening, the 1st ult.

Les extrêmes se touchent. The second Concert of the New York Oratorio Society was largely devoted to selections from Wagner ("Tristan") and Handel.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Most impressive among the London observances of the Mozart centenary was that which took place in the Albert Hall under the auspices of the Royal Choral Society. Special arrangements had been made for the occasion. In the first place, the services of Mr. Henschel were secured; that gentleman sharing the direction of the Concert with Mr. Barnby. The orchestra was considerably increased, and a "trophy" decorated the front of the organ, if the idea of decoration may be entertained in connection with what is funereal of aspect. Within a gigantic laurel wreath was Mozart's name, inscribed in letters of silver on a black ground, while white dependent streamers bore the dates 1791-1891.

The design could hardly have been more simple, but it answered every purpose of an appeal to the eye, as did the music to the ear. A large, though not crowded, audience attended, and the observance was, in almost every respect, satisfactory.

The first part of the programme contained nothing besides the "Requiem," the performance of which thus stood in fitting isolation as the chief recognition of the master's genius. We are unable to say that the work was executed in a manner quite beyond reproach. It may be our fancy, but we had a distinct impression that the choir never warmed thoroughly to their task—that the fire of enthusiasm was lacking. In any case, it certainly was not our fancy that the attack was sometimes wanting in promptitude and force, and that the effect occasionally fell short of just and reasonable expectation. Shortcomings such as these cannot always be accounted for, nor can the best will in the world prevent them. The soloists, Mrs. Henschel, Madame Patey, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Watkin Mills, rose to the level of their task, and the "Benedictus" was beautifully rendered.

At the beginning of the second part, Mr. Charles Fry came forward amid applause and recited the poem written by Mr. Joseph Bennett for our Mozart Supplement. As the verses were printed in the book of words, the audience could easily follow, but, in point of fact, this would have been possible without them, so well did Mr. Fry judge the acoustics of the building. Every line was distinctly heard, and the reciter's admirable delivery seemed to produce the full impression desired. At the close of his task, Mr. Fry was recalled amid every sign of satisfaction. The musical performance then resumed with the "Jupiter" Symphony, conducted by Mr. Henschel, to whom Mr. Barnby resigned his bâton. A better rendering of that noble work could hardly have been desired. The music had, we should say, been rehearsed with great care, in hope of a truly "monumental" performance. As in every such case, zeal met with a full reward. There seemed to be only one opinion on the question whether the orchestra had done its duty on this special occasion. Mr. Lloyd, later on, contributed "Misero, o sogno"—one of the longest and most trying airs in Mozart's catalogue—singing throughout with infinite spirit and rare staying power. The work of the choir in this part was limited to the noble chorus "O Isis and Osiris," from "Die Zauberflöte," and a selection from "King Thamos." In dealing with these Mr. Barnby's singers were themselves again. On the whole, we have described a worthy commemoration.

THE BACH CHOIR.

The Concert at St. James's Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 15th ult., under the direction of Professor Stanford, consisted of Mozart's "Requiem" and the final scene of the first act of Wagner's "Parsifal." The performance of Mozart's monumental composition was fairly satisfying. The choir sang steadily and with the correct spirit, whilst the instrumental portions were effectively given. The solos were entrusted to Mrs. Henschel, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Houghton, and Mr. Plunket Greene. The choice of the "Parsifal" excerpt was not quite happy, since of all the most important scenes in Wagner's works this is least qualified for transference to a platform like that of St. James's Hall. Those who have only heard it with the "maimed rites" which prevailed on this occasion can form little conception of the effect obtained when the Love-Feast music is performed in the manner intended by the composer. With respect to the execution, there was much to praise. The choir and band were commendably obedient to the Conductor. Mr. Henschel sang the music of Amfortas with even more than his wonted perception of the significance of every phrase, the pathos of his utterances being almost painful in their intensity. Mr. Greene, who undertook the parts both of Gurnemanz and Titurel, sang with the excellence now regarded as a matter of course, and also most successfully caught the spirit of the music; and Mr. Houghton acquitted himself creditably in the music of the title-part.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

THE third Concert of the season (Thursday evening, November 26), at St. James's Hall, was not less interesting than either of its predecessors arranged by Mr. Henschel. Opening with the Overture to "The Magic Flute," and including the "Good Friday's Spell" music of "Parsifal," the programme covered a period of close upon a century of musical history. Midway came the glorious Seventh Symphony of Beethoven, and for the finale there was the Huldigungs-Marsch of Wagner. The three styles here indicated are fairly typical of the revolution in idea as well as in execution marking the past hundred years. To the adequate illustration of each phase of musical thought thus introduced Mr. Henschel and the fine orchestra over which he presides were quite equal. In the Overture they seemed to enter as completely into the spirit of Mozart as they subsequently did into that of Beethoven—so massively represented—and of the more modern master. Under such circumstances the satisfaction given to the audience could not but be great. Recognition of the effect created was duly made, so that both Conductor and players knew they had not laboured in vain. In the "Parsifal" excerpt the music of the title-part was carefully sung by Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Plunket Greene exhibited marked aptitude for the delivery of the majestic passages assigned to the old knight Gurnemanz. The solo instrumentalist was that wonderful lad, Jean Gérardy, who selected the so-called Concerto in A minor of Volkmann. The youthful violoncellist has rarely been heard to greater advantage. In the delicacy of the rendering of the more expressive passages, as in the sense of command manifested in the exacting sections, he afforded legitimate excuse for the enthusiastic demonstrations which, joined in by the band, compelled his re-appearance again and again upon the platform.

SIR CHARLES HALLÉ'S CONCERTS.

AMATEURS mustered in fairly strong force at the second of these performances, which took place on the 4th ult., Lady Hallé (Madame Néruda) being then announced to make her first appearance after her lengthened indisposition. Rest is one of Nature's sweet restorers, and it may safely be said that never in the course of her career has Madame Néruda played with more vigour or artistic feeling than on the present occasion in the Adagio and Finale from Vieuxtemps's Concerto in E, in which she first appeared as an adult artist at the Philharmonic Concerts in 1869. The purely orchestral pieces in this programme included Beethoven's "Leonora" Overture (No. 3), which was played with immense spirit; a melodious Serenade in E flat, piquantly scored by Saint-Saëns; and the Nocturne and Scherzo from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" music. The greatest effect was made, however, in the instrumental movements from Berlioz's Symphony "Roméo et Juliette," Sir Charles Hallé always being at his best when conducting the French master's music, which he has helped to popularise in this country. The performances of "Faust," with the Manchester choir and orchestra, on the 8th and 9th inst., promise to be very interesting.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

AT the Concert held on November 28, Jean Gérardy made his second appearance before a Sydenham audience, and played with the greatest success in the Volkmann Concerto, in which he had been heard a few days previously at one of Mr. Henschel's Concerts. The leading subject was given out with rare decision and rhythmical vigour; the recitative passages were, one might say, declaimed with admirable emphasis; while the rendering of the florid embellishments was marked by that charming delicacy and tenderness which is so peculiar a feature in this wonderful young artist. His minor solos consisted of show pieces by Beaumont and Popper, and there was the usual encore. Mr. Manns conducted fine performances of Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony and Handel's spirited Overture to "Giustino," which figured in the programme on the "Selection" day at the Handel Festival last June. The vocalists were Madame Emily Spada and Mr. Philip Newbury. The latter, who made his début at the Palace, has a strong tenor voice, but he lacks distinction of style and variety of expression. The Overture to "Tannhäuser" completed the programme.

The programme of the ninth Concert, which fell on the one hundredth anniversary of Mozart's death, was devoted to a selection from that master's works. The Concert opened with appropriate solemnity with the rarely heard, but very beautiful "Maurerische Trauermusik," an In Memoriam Adagio composed in 1785 on the death of two distinguished Freemasons. This noble piece, which was most impressively played, was followed by the "Requiem," in which the solo parts were sustained by Miss Anna Williams, Miss Marian McKenzie, Mr. Henry Piercy, and Mr. Norman Salmond, of whom the last-named made his mark by an excellent delivery of the bass solo in the "Tuba mirum." The Crystal Palace Choir gave a very creditable rendering of the choruses, and the orchestra, specially reinforced for the occasion in the wind department, was heard to great advantage. Spirited performances were also given of the "Jupiter" Symphony and the Overture to the "Magic Flute," while Mr. Norman Salmond was deservedly applauded for his fine singing of "Non più andrai." Miss Marian McKenzie contributed "Quando miro," and Mr. Piercy "Dalla sua pace." The audience was the largest that has been seen this season at these Concerts.

In the absence of Mr. Manns at Glasgow, the tenth Saturday Concert, on the 12th ult., was conducted by Mr. Cowen. The "Scandinavian" Symphony, which had not been heard for nine years at Sydenham, was appropriately included in the programme, and, under the composer's direction, was rendered in a manner worthy of its many beauties. Mdlle. Kleeberg was brilliantly successful in Beethoven's Concerto in C (No. 1), and Mr. Braxton Smith contributed songs by Handel and Sterndale Bennett. The Overture to "Preciosa" was also included in the programme. The Concerts will be resumed on February 13.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE most devoted lover of variety cannot lodge any complaint against Mr. Arthur Chappell this season for additions to his repertory, and new performers have claimed attention in bewildering succession. The first Concert of which we have now to take note was that of Saturday, November 28, when Miss Szumowska, a young Polish pianist, made her first appearance. She is, we understand, the only pupil whom her distinguished countryman, Mr. Paderewski, acknowledges, and she certainly proved herself an executant of remarkable ability, her rendering of Schumann's Papillons (Op. 2) and Chopin's Ballade in G minor being full of interesting points, though the effect was marred by an unpleasant hardness of touch. Mr. Ysaÿe once more showed himself a superb executant of Bach's music in the Prelude and Fugue in G minor, for violin unaccompanied; and the concerted works were Beethoven's Quartet in E flat (Op. 16), for pianoforte and strings, transcribed by the composer from his earlier Quintet for pianoforte and wind instruments, and Mozart's more familiar Quartet in D minor. Miss Rosina Brandram, the justly popular contralto from the Savoy Theatre, contributed Beethoven's "In questa Tomba," and Schubert's song "The Linden Tree."

On the following Monday Miss Szumowska again appeared and gave a remarkably brilliant rendering of Chopin's rarely heard, though undeniably interesting Sonata in B minor (Op. 58), but the lack of a true singing tone was again perceptible in cantabile passages. Mr. Ysaÿe made his last appearance this season, and beside playing Beethoven's favourite Romance in F (Op. 50), which was of course encored, took part in a superb performance of Schubert's Quartet in D minor and in Beethoven's Sonata in C minor for pianoforte and violin (Op. 30, No. 2). Mrs. Helen Trust revived a pleasing song, "My Days," by Jackson of Exeter, best known as the composer of the once enormously popular Te Deum in F. Jackson lived during what may be termed the dark days of the English Church and his Service music is thin and trivial, but his secular compositions do not deserve complete oblivion.

The Concert of Saturday, the 5th ult., was, as a matter of course, dedicated to Mozart; but occasion was not taken to present any works hitherto unheard, of which there are many. On the contrary, the principal concerted work was the Divertimento in B flat for strings and horns, which has been heard more frequently than any of its companions; Sir Charles Hallé gave in his most refined manner the familiar Fantasia and Sonata in C minor; Madame Néruda and Mr. Straus rendered the Duet in G for violin and viola; and the programme ended with the Pianoforte Trio in E, which has appeared as many times as all the remaining Trios added together. Mr. Santley gave a surprisingly vigorous interpretation of the air "Vedrò mentr' io sospiro," from "Le Nozze di Figaro," but he ought to know that the air "L'Addio" was not written by Mozart. The composer was Gottfried von Racquin, according to Otto Jahn, whose authority may be implicitly trusted.

The interest of the Concert on Monday, the 7th ult., centred in the first performance of Bach's Partita in C minor, by Mr. Leonard Borwick. Of the twenty-three Suites for clavier which were left by the Leipzig Cantor, this makes the seventh performed at these Concerts, though selections from the others have been heard from time to time. For a full enquiry into the history and characteristics of Bach's clavier music we must refer our readers to the masterly biography of Philipp Spitta. Enough that the Partita in C minor, one of six sometimes termed German Suites, in order to distinguish them from the English and French Suites, was well worthy of a hearing, and our young native pianist played it in a remarkably pure, chaste manner, calculated to win the approval of all who object to Bach being made to masquerade in modern dress. The concerted works in this programme were Beethoven's Rasoumowsky Quartet in C (Op. 59, No. 3) and the revised edition of Brahms's early Trio in B (Op. 8). Miss Fillunger pleased greatly in songs by Schubert and Brahms.

On the following Saturday the pianoforte solo was again the most interesting piece in the programme. Weber's beautiful Sonata in A flat had not been heard for sixteen years, and it was played with delightful refinement by Mr. Schönberger. The insatiable audience demanded more, and eventually the admirable pianist gave Chopin's Impromptu in F sharp. Madame Néruda was heard to the greatest advantage in Nos. 3 and 5 of Raff's clever "Cyklishe Tondichtung," and the concerted works were Schubert's favourite Quartet in A minor (Op. 29) and Schumann's Adagio and Allegro for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 70). Mrs. Helen Trust was encored after singing Mr. Cowen's delicate little songs, "Thy Remembrance" and "Snowflakes."

Brahms is always attractive in his light vocal compositions, and the six four-part songs (Op. 112) which were presented for the first time on the 14th ult. may worthily compare with the "Liebeslieder Walzer" or the more recent Gipsy Songs. Indeed, four of the new series form a sort of supplement to the "Zigeuner Lieder," being settings of stanzas by the Hungarian poet, Hugo Conrat. They are delicate and piquant little songs, whereas the remaining two, "Sehnsucht" and "Nächtens," are more serious and more fully developed. The "Yearning" is as beautiful and expressive as anything Brahms ever wrote for voices. The songs were rendered to perfection by Mr. and Mrs. Henschel, Madame Fassett, and Mr. Shakespeare, and were rapturously received, four of them being repeated, The pianist on this occasion was Miss Adelina de Lara, who essayed no less formidable a work than Schumann's Etudes Symphoniques. She was physically overweighted by the task, but her reading was at any rate refined and intelligent. Madame Néruda gave Mozart's Adagio in E for violin in her best manner, and the programme was completed by Beethoven's Quartet in E flat (Op. 74) and Brahms's Sonata in E minor for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 38).

The last Concert before Christmas took place on the following Saturday. Brahms's new vocal quartets were repeated by the same executants as before, and were again very warmly received. The instrumental concerted works in this programme were Mozart's Quartet in G, No. 1 of the set dedicated to Haydn, and Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Trio in C minor (Op. 66). Madame Haas played Beethoven's Sonata in E minor (Op. 90) and Mr. Whitehouse gave an admirable rendering of Dr. Mackenzie's Larghetto and Allegro for violoncello (Op. 60). In connection with the last-named pieces a biographical notice of the composer was inserted which had not been revised for ten years, and the audience was informed that Dr. Mackenzie's last effort of importance was his Cantata "The Bride."

THE "LAST JUDGMENT" AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

A Concert, the excellence of which far exceeded expectation, was given in aid of the North London Hospital on the 11th ult., at St. James's Hall, under the direction of Mr. James Shaw, Organist of Hampstead Parish Church. With regard to soloists, Mr. Shaw had placed himself beyond reach of failure, having secured Miss Anna Williams, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Miss Marian McKenzie, and Mr. Robert Newman; but a choir assembled "for this occasion only," even though backed (fronted?) by an orchestra consisting of London's best in this direction, was not so sure to achieve high artistic results. Mr. Shaw, however, by influence of some kind, obtained a performance of Spohr's "Last Judgment" and of a Selection (vocal and orchestral) from the Handel Festival Music that would have done credit to any organised body after a couple of years' practice together. Such a tour de force necessarily compels admiration of the gifts that made it possible. There was a large and appreciative audience, and it is therefore reasonable to assume that the cause of Charity was as much benefited as that of Art. The entire omission of the Conductor's name from the programme, and the statement upon the first page of that document that Handel's "Lascia ch' io pianga" would be found in "The Messiah," lent humour to the proceedings, not lessened when Mr. Shaw, in a short speech, took the audience into his confidence and told them that the statement in the programme was "absurd." A second Concert will be given in April, when Handel's "Samson" will be performed.

MR. POPPER'S CONCERT.

It may safely be asserted that the more thoughtful among the audience at the Orchestral Concert arranged by Mr. Percy Hutchinson for Mr. David Popper at St. James's Hall, on November 25, left the room with feelings of mingled satisfaction and surprise. The celebrated Bohemian violoncellist was known to be a performer of the first calibre, and his minor solos for his own instrument have long been popular with professors of the violoncello; but the extent of Mr. Popper's powers as a composer was certainly unknown until this occasion, when two important works from his pen were introduced for the first time to the notice of a London audience. One was a piece in F sharp minor for the singular combination of three violoncellos with pianoforte accompaniment, and bearing the equally singular title of "Requiem." "Religious Reverie" or "Elegy" would have been, perhaps, a more appropriate designation; but, at any rate, the music is deeply expressive, and the independent writing for each instrument shows that Mr. Popper is a first-rate musician. He was assisted in the performance by Mr. Edward Howell and Mr. Delsart, the well-known French virtuoso and teacher, who had come from Paris expressly to aid his companion artist. The other work to which reference has been made was a Suite in E flat, entitled "Im Walde," for orchestra with violoncello obbligato (Op. 50). This cannot be described as a Violoncello Concerto, for the solo instrument only occupies a sort of position analogous to that of the viola in Berlioz's Symphony "Harold in Italy," but the music, at any rate, is full of freshness and charm. Of the six movements the first, "Eintritt," is the most fully developed, but the second, "Gnomentanz," the third, "Andacht," and the fourth, "Reigen," are the most pleasing, and the delight of the audience showed itself very plainly. The rest of the programme must be dismissed with brief reference. Mr. Popper included among his solos Saint-Saëns's not particularly interesting Concerto in A minor (Op. 30), Madame Valleria, who was in splendid voice, and Miss Dews, a mezzo-soprano of rich promise, rendered some songs, and a competent orchestra, under Mr. F. H. Cowen, gave effect to Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture and Mozart's Overture to "Il Seraglio."

AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

It is frequently said, and not without evidence in favour of the assertion, that orchestral performances are not generally appreciated by English amateurs; but it cannot be denied that the study of instrumental music has made enormous strides of late years, and during the past month the Concerts given by our leading Metropolitan amateur societies have borne eloquent witness to this fact. The first to take the field was the "Royal," which occupied St. James's Hall on the 5th ult. This was the Mozart Centenary, but the event was not recognised in Mr. George Mount's programme, the principal pieces being Spohr's Symphony "Die Weihe der Töne," Mendelssohn's "Ruy Blas" and Sullivan's "Di Ballo" Overtures, Saint-Saëns's "La Jota Arragonèse," and the Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana." The last-named piece, which was encored, is evidently destined to become popular in the Concert-room. On the whole the playing was highly creditable and testified to the continued earnestness of the Society's labours. Miss Clotilde Kleeberg rendered Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor with delightful refinement, and Madame Valda, for whom indulgence was asked quite unnecessarily, sang airs by Meyerbeer, Verdi, and Francesco Berger in her best manner.

Three days later the Stock Exchange Society gave its first performance for the season at St. James's Hall. Here some reverence was paid to Mozart, a highly creditable performance being given of the "Jupiter" Symphony. Mr. George Hitchin's players were heard to less advantage in Sullivan's "In Memoriam" Overture, the Allegro of which went somewhat roughly. The impressive Prelude to Professor Stanford's music to "Œdipus Rex" and Handel's so-called "Largo" were included in the programme, and also a Choral Ballad for male voices, "The Death of young Romilly," by Mr. J. F. H. Read, the president of the Society. Though somewhat amateurish in point of construction, this is, on the whole, a pleasing work, and it was admirably sung.

On Wednesday, the 9th ult., the Westminster Society gave its first Concert for the season with a programme quite up to the average in interest. Mr. Stewart Macpherson's earnest amateurs were heard to advantage in Mozart's Symphony in C (No. 36), and the Conductor played the solo part of Sterndale Bennett's Pianoforte Concerto in F minor in musicianly style. Another Pianoforte Concerto in D, by Dr. Horton Allison, proved to be a well-written work, and it was capably interpreted by Miss Elizabeth A. Nunn. The most interesting feature of the programme, however, was the first performance in London of Professor Bridge's Ballad for male voices and orchestra, "The Festival," being a setting of Archbishop Trench's poem. It is a thoughtful and effective piece and was well rendered, the solo parts by Messrs. Edward Branscombe and Daniel Price, and the choruses by members of the Westminster Training College. Mozart's Overture to "Cosi fan tutti," Mendelssohn's "Cornelius" March, and songs by Blumenthal and Gerard Cobb were included in the programme.

The first Members' Concert of the Strolling Players Society took place on the 19th ult., and was almost wholly successful. Three movements of Mr. E. Prout's Symphony in F, No. 3 (the Minuet being for some reason omitted), were capitally played, and Mr. Norfolk Megone's forces also rendered Mendelssohn's Overture to "Athalie," the Entr'acte from Gounod's "La Colombe," and a piquant trifle entitled "Ariel," by Mr. Meredith Ball, very creditably. The Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" was, as a matter of course, encored. A Suite formed on themes from M. Wormser's delightful music to "L'Enfant Prodigue" rather missed its mark, the five brief movements being disjointed and without form or symmetry. Mrs. Helen Trust and Miss Marian McKenzie were acceptable in their songs, and Miss Kate Chaplin, a pupil of Mr. Pollitzer, showed considerable aptitude for the violin in two movements from Wieniawski's Concerto in D minor.

CHAMBER CONCERTS.

Performances of classical chamber music, formerly noticeable on account of their rarity, are now so numerous that it is quite impossible to give them the attention their merits deserve. Messrs. Ludwig and Whitehouse gave the second and third of their recent series of performances at the Princes' Hall on November 25 and the 9th ult. On the former occasion the principal pieces in their programme were Brahms's String Quintet in G (Op. 111) and Dvorák's Trio in B flat (Op. 21). Miss Zimmermann was the pianist, and Messrs. G. W. Collins, A. Gibson, and H. Heydrich assisted the Concert-givers in the string parts. Mrs. Helen Trust was heard in songs by Purcell and Massenet. At the last Concert the leading works were Beethoven's Quartet in E minor, No. 2 of the Rasoumowsky set, and Dvorák's beautiful Pianoforte Quintet in A (Op. 81). Miss Fanny Davies was the pianist and Miss Carlotta Elliot the vocalist.

The first of three Concerts was given by Miss Louise Douste de Fortis, the elder of two talented sisters, at the Princes' Hall, on the 1st ult. The programme was interesting, among the pieces being an unconventional but by no means extravagant Trio by the clever French composer, Benjamin Godard; Dr. Hubert Parry's Partita in D for pianoforte and violin, in which our gifted native composer has successfully reproduced the style of J. S. Bach; and Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in C minor (Op. 60), the merits of which are overshadowed by the greater beauty and originality of the earlier Quartets in G minor and A major. The young Concert-giver has greatly improved as a pianist, and she received able assistance from Mr. Réné Ortmans, Mr. A. Hobday, and Mr. Hollman.

At the second Concert, on the 15th ult., the principal works in the programme were Goetz's Pianoforte Quartet in E (Op. 6) and Raff's Pianoforte Trio in G (Op. 112), both of which were welcome, as they have not become hackneyed by too frequent performance. The first-named work, by a composer whose premature death was a severe loss to music, is especially fresh and charming. Mr. W. H. Squire was the violoncellist on this occasion and Mr. Herbert Thorndike was the vocalist.

On the 1st ult. the Messrs. Hann gave the last of their Concerts for the present in the Brixton Hall. Their programme contained Dvorák's String Sextet in A (Op. 48), one of the earliest of the Bohemian composer's works which gained him recognition in England; Rubinstein's Sonata in D for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 18); and Schubert's Trio in B flat (Op. 99). Songs were contributed by Miss Eleanor Rees.

The young Dutch violinist who appeared for the first time in London as Miss Yrrac at the Princes' Hall, on the 18th ult., has, in all probability, a brilliant future before her. It is understood that her friends were averse to her entering the profession, but talents such as she undoubtedly possesses were not meant to be hid under a bushel and her début before an English audience was a noteworthy success. Miss Yrrac has very fine technique, her tone being full and powerful, and her fingering remarkably skilful. These points in her favour were displayed in her rendering of a theme with variations by Tartini and in two movements by Wieniawski. Her programme included Grieg's frequently heard Sonata in F (Op. 8) for pianoforte and violin, in which she was associated with Mr. Schönberger. The pianist was extremely artistic in solos by Chopin and Brahms, and a very favourable impression was made by Miss Gherlsen, a soprano singer with a well-trained voice of considerable volume.

Miss Marianne Eissler may be congratulated on the success of the first of three Concerts which she gave at the Steinway Hall on the 17th ult. In conjunction with Messrs. Collins, Kreuz, and Howell, capital performances were given of Beethoven's Quartet in B flat (Op. 18, No. 6) and Haydn's in D (Op. 64, No. 1). Miss Clara Eissler's ability on the harp is equal to that of her sister on the violin, and her rendering of works by Spohr constituted an enjoyable feature of the Concert.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The programme of the Orchestral Concert given in St. James's Hall, on the 17th ult., was of an unusually interesting character, and the performances on the whole bore eloquent testimony to the excellence of the work now carried on at the Tenterden Street Institution. The first and lengthiest piece was an Ode for chorus, pianoforte, and orchestra, entitled "Die Tageszeiten," by Raff, which had not been heard previously in London. It is in four sections, the first dealing with the brightness of noonday, the next with sunset, the third with the repose of night, and the last with the renewal of daylight. It cannot be said that Raff's music is strikingly original, but it is genial and pleasing, and the fugal climax is effective. Considering the inequality in numbers between the male and the female divisions of the choir, the performance was most creditable. The pianoforte part was divided, Miss Maude Rihll (Thalberg Scholar) taking the first and second movements, and Miss Kate Goodson the third and fourth. Goldmark's Violin Concerto in A minor (Op. 28), though not a particularly interesting work, is brilliantly written for the solo instrument, and it enabled Mr. Phillip Cathie, a very young aspirant, to evince more than ordinary promise. Miss Ethel Barns gave an intelligent rendering of Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in G, and thereby proved herself a student of remarkable natural gifts, for a few months since she won high commendation as a violinist. Among the other young people who took part in the Concert were Miss Edith Hands, who displayed a rich mezzo-soprano voice in the "Inflammatus," from Dvorák's "Stabat Mater," and Mr. Herbert Walenn, whose mastery over the violoncello was proved to a considerable degree in two movements from Goltermann's Concerto in B minor. The Concert ended with two movements, cleverly written, with picturesque orchestration, from a Ballet Suite bearing the curious title of "Rameses II.," by Mr. Granville Bantock (Macfarren Scholar).

The Competition for the Bonamy Dobree Prize took place at the Royal Academy of Music on the 12th ult. The Examiners were Messrs. C. H. Allen Gill, E. Woolhouse, and E. De Munck (in the chair). There were three candidates and the prize was awarded to Herbert Walenn. The competition for the Sainton-Dolby Prize also took place on the same day. The Examiners were Miss Marriott, Madame Larkcom, and Miss Williams (in the chair). There were twenty-four candidates and the prize was awarded to Florence Bethell; the Examiners highly commended Lilian Redfern. The Competition for the Westmoreland Scholarship took place on the 21st ult. The examiners were Madame Lemmens-Sherrington and Messrs. A. Randegger, A. L. Oswald, Arthur Thompson, and Manuel Garcia (Chairman). There were thirty candidates and the Scholarship was awarded to Kate Cove. The examiners commended Mary Hay, Silvia Wardell, and Violet Robinson. The Competition for the Potter Exhibition also took place on the same day. The examiners were Messrs. S. Macpherson, E. Prout, A. Schloesser, F. Westlake, and Walter Macfarren (Chairman). There were eleven candidates and the prize was awarded to Cuthbert Cronk. The Hine Gift was also decided on the same day. The examiners were Messrs. M. B. Foster, E. German, and Hamish MacCunn (Chairman). There were three candidates and the prize was awarded to Elizabeth Ethel Savage. The Competition for the Ritson Prize (contralto) took place on the 19th ult. The examiners were Mr. Watkin Mills, Miss Charlotte Thudichum, and Madame Clara Samuell Rose (in the chair). Nine candidates presented themselves and the prize was awarded to Frances Turner. Helen Saunders and Bicey McLaren were highly commended.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

It was a happy thought of the authorities at Kensington Gore to select for the students' annual operatic performance "Der Barbier von Bagdad," by Peter Cornelius, as no other work more vividly exemplifies the remarkable development of musical art within the last generation. The history of this opera has been so generally detailed since the performance at the Savoy Theatre on the 9th ult. that it would be needless to say much about it in this place. Opportunity, however, may be taken to correct a curious error which has crept into Grove's "Dictionary" concerning the work. It is perfectly true that it was first produced at Weimar in 1858, and only survived one performance at the time. But the statement that the revival took place at Coburg in 1887 is inaccurate. "The Barber of Bagdad" was performed on December 15, 1885, at Munich, and notices of the event found their way into the musical papers. Since then the opera has become a stock piece in most of the leading German theatres, and its popularity is likely to be maintained for a while in spite of the unquestionable feebleness of the libretto. The main idea of the composer was evidently to parody the conventionalities and absurdities of Italian opera, which in the fifties reigned supreme; and for this purpose the story of the garrulous barber in the "Arabian Nights" was as good a foundation as anything else. But the humour is somewhat ponderous, and the want of action in the first act tends to concentrate attention on the music which, happily, is full of charm. Cornelius was no mere copyist of Wagner, as some have asserted, for the simple reason that Wagner's art had, at that time, only been exemplified as far as "Lohengrin"—"Die Meistersinger," which "The Barber of Bagdad" certainly recalls in the concerted music, not having been produced until eleven years later. The only portion in which there is a distinct Wagnerian reminiscence is in the love duet in the second act, which shows that Cornelius was familiar with the bridal duet in "Lohengrin." The bright and spirited Overture, the melodious opening chorus of Nureddin's slaves, the barber's "Patter Song," his mock love song with its absurd cadenza, his intentionally lugubrious ditty anent the misdeeds of woman, the quarrelling scene, and the pompous Finale are all fresh in manner and exhibit no leaning towards any particular composer. The treatment of the orchestra is extremely happy, especially in the more directly humorous scenes, and the entire score gives the impression that Cornelius loved his art and obtained enjoyment merely from labouring in its service. His work was rejected, and he went to the grave in his fiftieth year a comparatively unknown musician. Posterity, however, is now offering atonement, for we read that his grand opera "The Cid" was revived during the last few months at Munich, and has been well received. The Royal College students must have laboured long and zealously in the preparation of "The Barber of Bagdad," for the music, with its tangled rhythms and frequent changes of measure, is far from easy. As regards the general performance they did remarkably well, the chorus and orchestra being beyond reproach. Of the representatives of the principal characters the most promising was Mr. Charles Magrath, who displayed a fine voice and considerable sense of humour as the fussy, talkative barber. Miss Una Bruckshaw, as the heroine Morgiana, who, by the way, is not named in the original story, and Miss Pattie Hughes, as a sort of duenna, both sang brightly, and Mr. John Sandbrook and Mr. William White, in the small parts of the Caliph and the Cadi respectively, were thoroughly efficient. Mr. William Green, who impersonated the lovesick Nureddin, has a pleasant, light tenor voice, but, unfortunately, he evinced a tendency to sing out of tune. This, however, was less noticeable at the repetition performance on the 16th ult. It only remains to be mentioned that Professor Villiers Stanford conducted with much skill and judgment, and that the opera was excellently stage-managed by Mr. Charles Brookfield.

THE GUILDHALL STUDENTS' OPERATIC PERFORMANCE.

The choice of "The Bohemian Girl" by the operatic students of the Guildhall School of Music for public performance at the Shaftesbury Theatre on the afternoon of Wednesday the 16th ult., was probably due to the fact that most of the performers had gone through the same duties in the semi-privacy of the establishment on the Embankment. Feeling they were on sure ground, it may have been deemed advisable not to make changes, the issue of which was doubtful. Next year they will, perhaps, be emboldened to try a work of a less conventional character than Balfe's still unquestionably popular opera, and thus endeavour to keep pace with their fellow students of the Royal Academy of Music and Royal College of Music. Not that much encouragement to pursue another path than that taken was given by the audience crowding the theatre. The airs that have remained favourites through a couple of generations were as heartily encored as usual, and the absurdities of the story did not evoke any more serious manifestation than an occasional titter. True, the opera was very creditably rendered. The stage business had, like the music, been carefully rehearsed; the chorus was strong in numbers and joyous in spirit, thereby presenting a marked contrast to the depression and inertness that so often weigh upon a professional company; and the band was kept well in hand by Mr. Neill O'Donovan (the Chorus-master), who conducted in lieu of Mr. Weist Hill, the esteemed Principal of the School. The efficiency of each of these elements was, of course, vastly helpful to the performance, and the five principal soloists also displayed notable intelligence and zeal, both as regards singing and acting. Madame Eugenia Morgan was a duly impassioned Arline, Miss Jessie Browning was the Queen of the Gipsies, Mr. Wilfred Acfield was an appropriately sentimental Thaddeus, Mr. Albert Thorn sufficiently emphasized the gloom of Count Arnheim, and Mr. Charles Hinchcliff followed custom in making Devilshoof as much a dancing as a singing character.

THURSDAY SUBSCRIPTION CONCERTS.

BRAHMS was the composer to whom, at Princes' Hall, on the 3rd ult., Messrs. William Nicholl, Septimus Webbe, and Hans Brousil devoted the first part of their programme. The admirable pianist and violoncellist played the Sonata in F (Op. 99) with that perfect sympathy which could be the outcome only of previous understanding and subordination of self; and after Mr. Nicholl had given four songs with sustained refinement and feeling Mr. Webbe again distinguished himself by an elegant interpretation of the Scherzo (Op. 4). Each member of the accomplished trio had his opportunity in the miscellaneous second part. Mr. Nicholl introduced a couple of MS. songs by D. Young, and infused into them an amount of sentiment that evoked the heartiest commendation. The two pieces could not have been entrusted to a more competent or earnest exponent. Mr. Brousil's violoncello solos were by Max Bruch and Davidoff, and they gave unalloyed delight to the listeners; and Mr. Webbe again successfully demonstrated his artistic powers, in studies by Chopin and Liszt. Mrs. Trust, who has lately risen into great popularity, sang Giordani's melodious "Let not Age"—it is scarcely needful to say how well. There was a large and enthusiastic audience.

MISS KLEEBERG'S PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

AFTER a considerable period of absence, that talented young French pianist, Miss Clotilde Kleeberg, has returned to this country, and on November 25 and the 2nd ult. she gave Recitals at the Princes' Hall, both performances being well attended. On the former occasion she at once afforded evidence of artistic progress by her intelligent, and at the same time unexaggerated, rendering of two of Bach's Preludes and Fugues, this favourable impression being more than confirmed by her exceedingly fine interpretation of Mendelssohn's Variations Sérieuses. Schumann's Humoresque was also well played, but Miss Kleeberg seemed less at her ease in Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 31, No. 3), by some mischance described as Op. 58, which of course is the number of the Pianoforte Concerto in G. The rest of the programme consisted of minor pieces. Equally successful was the second Recital, the principal numbers in the programme being Bach's "Italian" Concerto, Beethoven's Variations in C minor, and Schumann's Sonata in F sharp minor (Op. 11). Curiously there was another error in the Opus number 36 attached to Beethoven's Variations, that being the number of the second Symphony in D. All the works named were played with much spirit and expression, though the pianist's nationality peeped out at times, particularly in the Sonata. Smaller pieces by Mendelssohn, Chopin, Schubert, Schumann, and other composers were also given, greatly to the satisfaction of the audience.

MR. W. COENEN'S RECITAL.

AT Brighton, on November 27, in the Clarence Rooms of the Hôtel Métropole, Mr. Willem Coenen gave a Pianoforte Recital before a large audience. The most important work in the programme, Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 57), was played with a rare degree of power and intelligence, the passionate Finale especially, and Mr. Coenen's hearers were not slow to express their approval of his artistic skill. Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in F minor (Op. 35) was also finely rendered. An Etude by Rubinstein, and Grieg's "Poème Erotique" enabled the artist to show himself as much at home in the romantic as in the classical style, and his command over the difficult effects conceived by Liszt was manifested in a Rhapsodie Hongroise, in a Gondoliera, and in the famous Campanella Etude. Mr. Coenen has an exceptionally developed left hand, and in a Fantasia from his own pen, for that hand alone, was able to astonish as well as to please. He also gave, with great charm, a pianoforte arrangement of Mackenzie's dainty and tender song "What does little birdie say?"

MUSICAL GUILD.

THE most interesting feature of the third Concert, given on the 1st ult., was Mr. Henschel's "Serbisches Liederspiel" (Op. 32), a delightful work which is not unworthy to be compared with the "Zigeunerlieder" of Brahms, to whom, by the way, it is dedicated. The performance under notice may well serve to direct the attention of music lovers once more to Mr. Henschel's compositions, which have not altogether met with the recognition which is doubtless their due, and more especially to the forthcoming production of his latest work (Op. 50), the music to "Hamlet." Misses McIntosh and Hart, Messrs. Probert and Bailey, who sang the "Liederspiel," acquitted themselves of a difficult task in a highly creditable manner, the first and last-named especially rendering their respective solos with much expression and finish. The composer accompanied. A set of three pieces, "Frühlingsgedanken," for violin and pianoforte, by Mr. Emil Kreuz, were played for the first time and well received. They are less elaborate than the same clever composer's "Liebesbilder," but display a similar vein of charming melody and the same good musicianship. The second of the set, an expressive Poco adagio, alternately tender and impassioned, is a little gem. The performance, by Mr. Arthur Bent and Miss Annie Grimson, was correct, but somewhat cold and soulless, a remark which applies also to the manner in which the first book of Dvorák's "Legenden," for pianoforte duet, was played. A vigorous, but somewhat rough rendering was given of Brahms's rarely-heard String Quintet in F (Op. 88), but Mozart's Trio in E flat for pianoforte, clarinet, and viola received a thoroughly adequate interpretation from Miss Grimson, Messrs. W. H. Hall and E. Kreuz.

The programme of the last Concert, on the 15th ult., included Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio (Op. 70, No. 1), capitally played by Misses Ethel Sharpe, Winifred Holiday, and Maud Fletcher; Schumann's Fantasiestücke for violin and pianoforte; and Mendelssohn's Octet. Mr. Harry Beauchamp was the vocalist.

WIND INSTRUMENT CHAMBER MUSIC SOCIETY.

ALTHOUGH at the second Concert of the season, Friday evening, the 18th ult., at the Royal Academy of Music, the strings more than doubled the wind contingent, the programme was of a thoroughly acceptable description.

Necessarily, the difficulty will each year increase of lighting upon works altogether in consonance with the title of the Society and, at the same time, unfamiliar to the majority of the listeners. Either the clarinet or the flute was a most important constituent of each performance, and not one of the instrumental pieces bore the suspicion of being hackneyed. In Kuhlau's Quintet for four strings and a flute, the wind element was shown to be exceedingly well cared for, and the difficulties presented were completely mastered by Mr. W. L. Barrett. The Quintet is here and there somewhat commonplace, but it contains much that is pleasing to the ear. Played as it was on this occasion by the flautist named, Mr. A. Gibson (violin), Messrs. Emil Kreuz and S. D. Grimson (the two violas), and Mr. Edward Howell (violoncello), the refined and moving Adagio could scarcely fail to make a favourable impression. The clarinet, in the competent hands of Mr. Egerton, had its chances in Emil Hartmann's Serenade (Op. 24) for that instrument, violoncello (Mr. Howell), and pianoforte (Mr. H. F. Sharpe), and in Weber's sprightly Quintet (Op. 34), brimful of captivating tune. The flute was heard for the second time in François Behr's dainty Notturno (Op. 183, No. 1), now in conjunction with violin and pianoforte. This trifle actually evoked an encore, with which Mr. Barrett and his companions were virtually compelled to comply. Mr. Arthur Barlow, as vocalist, selected Vulcan's song from "Philemon et Baucis" and Learmont Drysdale's welcome "Ask not if still I love."

BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE CHOIR.

THE Bow and Bromley Institute Choir gave a performance of Haydn's Oratorio the "Creation" on the 7th ult. Miss Anna Williams, Mr. Edward Branscombe, and Mr. William Bradford were the soloists. There was an efficient band, led by Mr. Arthur Payne. The performance was conducted by Mr. W. G. McNaught, and Mr. H. F. Ellingford was at the organ. A few days later, on the evening of the 12th ult., the Choir was again in evidence with a Mozart commemoration programme, including the "Requiem" Mass, "Splendente te, Deus," "Ave Verum," the Overture to "Figaro," various operatic songs, and a movement from a Quartet, effectively played by Mr. Ellingford on the organ. The soloists were Miss Kate Cove, Miss Edith Hands, Mr. Maskell Hardy, and Mr. Arthur Barlow. There was an overflowing and highly appreciative audience.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

AT the second Meeting, on Tuesday, the 8th ult., held at the Royal Academy of Music, Mr. Edgar F. Jacques read a paper on "The Composer's Intention." It had been prepared, he said, rather as an incentive to discussion than as an assertion of personal views. Accepting Professor Fleming's definition of the word "intention" as "that act of the mind by which we contemplate and design the accomplishment of some end," Mr. Jacques dealt with the contention of those who regard this as describing a state of mind too deliberate to be identified with the inspired condition of genius. He quoted the opinions of Schopenhauer ("Metaphysics of Music"), Wagner ("Beethoven"), Bulwer Lytton, Hazlitt, and Schubert's friend, Vogl, and read Mozart's own attempt to describe the process by which musical works came to maturity in his mind. In all these the unconsciousness of genius during production was insisted on, four of the writers even speaking of it as a kind of "clairvoyance"; and Carlyle had said: "Unconsciousness belongs to pure unmixed life; consciousness to a diseased mixture of life and death: unconsciousness is the sign of creation; consciousness at best that of manufacture." The lecturer, however, urged that this unconsciousness was less mysterious than at first sight appeared, since great practice in any art resulted always in the acquirement of more or less automatic action. The whole theory of training was based on this fact. Wagner's confession that "he had had to gain the capability of musical expression in the same way that we learn a language," and his insistance on the fact that until the forms of the language become unconscious we do not speak it fluently, were read in support of this. The method of composition adopted by Beethoven, as revealed in his sketch-books, was a proof that genius was not always unconscious. Mr. Rockstro affirmed that the difference between Mozart and Beethoven was more apparent than real. Mozart sketched in his brain; Beethoven on paper—voila tout. Mr. Jacques agreed with this, but at the same time pointed out that Mozart's intention seems to have been more purely musical than Beethoven's. The latter had confessed that he always had a picture in his mind when composing, and worked to that. Haydn, Schumann, Chopin, Liszt, and Mendelssohn all meant their music to convey something more than vague impressions of beauty or sublimity. In former times the imperfections of notation had made it next to impossible for composers to record their intentions. In such cases a strict adherence to the text would yield more of the letter which killeth than of the spirit which giveth life. Now, however, composers were much more particular. The creative artist had risen in dignity and importance, and the responsibility of the performer had increased accordingly. At the present day there were two schools of interpretation: one said, "We want the exact intentions of the composer"; the other said, "A finished work of art has, as it were, an independent life of its own, and may deliver a message far other than that which was put into its lips to say." Mr. Cummings (who was in the chair), Dr. Tomkins, Miss Oliveria Prescott, Mr. Shedlock, Mr. Gilbert Coleridge, Mr. Southgate, Mr. Webb, Mr. Wesché, Mr. P. H. Newman, and others took part in the discussion which followed.

THE "LAST JUDGMENT" IN ST. PAUL'S.

THE Cathedral of the Metropolis was densely thronged on Tuesday evening, the 1st ult., when the Oratorio of Spohr most favoured in this country was performed with all the care and effectiveness customary here for many years past on the first Tuesday in Advent. This beautiful work, which makes fresh friends every time it is heard, was gone through with a fervour and devotional feeling that more accorded with a religious exercise than an ordinary performance, and thus afforded no peg on which to hang captious criticism. Except the full orchestra no outside assistance was sought. The choir was that of the Cathedral, and the solos were sung by Messrs. Kenningham, Fryer, Kempton, Miles, and others associated with St. Paul's. Dr. Martin of course conducted, and Mr. W. Hodge was at the organ. From first to last the work could not have been listened to with more reverent attention.

"MORS ET VITA" AT MARYLEBONE CHURCH.

THE Advent musical services at Marylebone Parish Church consisted of selections from "Mors et Vita," a work rapidly coming into vogue for performance at this season of the year as an alternative to "The Messiah" and the "Last Judgment." The suitability of Gounod's composition for such a purpose is unquestionable. The dignity and solemnity stamping every page of the score are calculated to assist the thoughts of the earnest worshipper, whilst the beautiful harmonies pervading the "Requiem" section and the "Vision of St. John" charm and impress many who are less religiously inclined. Experience, too, has shown that no modern composition similarly lofty in aim and thoughtful in execution more surely grows upon the taste as it becomes better known, than the sacred trilogy designed as a continuation of "The Redemption"; and the period may not be far distant when "Mors et Vita" will stand quite as high in the estimation of the general musical public as the most popular of Gounod's productions in this branch of his art. The selections, interspersed with a short address, at Canon Barker's church, commenced with the impressive setting of the "Dies Iræ," and the "Requiem" excerpts, continued consecutively, terminated with the "Lacrymosa dies illa." The "Judgment" section began with the baritone solo "But when the Son of Man," following the vigorous instrumental numbers illustrative of the Resurrection, &c. As might have been anticipated, the "St. John" portion—embracing some of the loveliest strains that have emanated from Gounod's pen—was given almost in entirety. Under the guidance of Mr. Hodge, the Organist, the choruses were praiseworthily rendered, and justice was done to the solos by Messrs. Thomas Sweeney and Francis Lloyd and Masters E. Wicks and F. Bailey.

CHORAL CONDUCTORS' ALLIANCE.

THE annual meeting of this Society was held in the Large Hall of the Young Men's Christian Alliance, Aldersgate Street, on November 28. Dr. A. C. Mackenzie took the chair. He said that if the objects of the Society were properly carried out much good would be done. It was difficult to point to any country in which so much good choral-singing was to be heard as in England, and there was no other country with such good choral bodies. Choral societies were not only increasing in number but in quality. The Conductor was frequently a misunderstood person. The public seemed to think he was simply a time-keeper—that after rehearsals he must not be seen any more, but must leave the performance to go on as it liked! He then introduced the President of the Society, Mr. Joseph Barnby, who said that in this country conducting had no history. He sketched the early state of things until the time had arrived when the Conductor had become necessary. The man came at the proper time in the person of Michael Costa, the "father of the orchestra in England." The Conductor should have abundant technical knowledge, be experienced, have a strong will, and keep his temper. He should have a magnetic influence over his choir so that they felt bound to obey him. He should also possess a good ear, for if he did not hear the faults the public would. Mr. Barnby then described his use of certain characteristic words to his choir, saying that it was a great advantage to a conductor to be able to express his wishes in the fewest possible words. A Conductor should have a good memory, that he need not be always looking at his score. The speaker dealt at some length with the various styles of beating. "My beat is said to be too square," said he, "but I have such a large choir that I am bound to keep to it." After treating of the balance of voices in a choir, and of the manner of rehearsing, Mr. Barnby concluded: "I feel that music should not be treated lightly, but as a thing to fold to your bosom until death part you. The Germans love it, and it returns that love a thousand fold."

Dr. Mackenzie, in proposing a vote of thanks to Mr. Barnby, said that some months back, when he got on the Albert Hall platform, he felt just like a microbe—very small, but able to do a lot of damage.

OBITUARY.

INSTRUMENTAL music is the poorer, it is not too much to say, by the death of Mr. ROBERT HECKMANN. This regrettable event took place at Glasgow on November 29 last, after a very short illness, though it cannot now be doubted that Mr. Heckmann came to Scotland with the seeds of an ailment serious enough in itself, and one, moreover, which called for absolute rest. Unfaltering devotion to duty precluded, however, the idea of cessation from work until it was too late, for Mr. Heckmann was, indeed, prostrated on the very evening he was announced to play in Glasgow. He lingered only a few days, and though the best medical skill was at his command he passed away at the age of forty-three. He was born November 3, 1848, at Mannheim. Mr. Heckmann came originally to Glasgow as leader of the Choral Union Orchestra during the season 1884-85. He formed, of course, the Quartet which bore his name, and though the personnel had undergone a change, the ensemble playing was hardly a whit less artistic than before. Mr. Heckmann was latterly the leader of the Orchestral Institute of Bremen. He was in many respects a loveable man, and will be missed by many friends in artistic circles. An only daughter survives him.

We have to record, with much regret, the death of Mr. THOMAS HENRY WEIST HILL, aged sixty-three, the popular Principal of the Guildhall School of Music, which took place at his residence in Redcliffe Road, South Kensington, on Saturday morning, the 26th ult. As the event occurred at the moment of our going to press, we are unable to do more than state the fact.

On November 24, at Milan, LUIGI RIVETTA, composer and orchestral conductor, aged fifty-three.

On November 27, at Berlin, HEINRICH SARO, musik-director, for forty years the esteemed Conductor of the "Kaiser Franz" regiment, aged sixty-five.

On the 1st ult., at Turin, GUISEPPINA BOBBIA, prima ballerina of the Turin Opera, died suddenly on the stage during a performance of "La Sonnambula."

On the 2nd ult., at Milan, GIOVANNI FIORI, operatic basso comico, once famous throughout Italy, aged seventy-three.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Mozart Centenary was observed here, if not with any special splendour, at least in a reverent spirit. On the anniversary itself (the 5th ult.) the students of the Midland Institute School of Music gave a Concert, the programme consisting exclusively of the works of the great master. Excerpts from masses and operas, orchestral and chamber music, were given by the various classes, the whole being under the direction of Mr. W. Astley Langston. The lecture theatre of the Institute was packed with a highly attentive audience, consisting for the greater part of young people. On the 10th ult., at Mr. Stockley's Orchestral Concert, the "Jupiter" Symphony was performed, and the vocalists—Madame Alice Gomez and Mr. Gordon Fletcher—introduced airs from "La Clemenza di Tito" and "Il Don Giovanni." On the 12th ult. the Choral Union, under Mr. Thomas Facer, gave a Mozart Concert in the Town Hall. The masses and operas again furnished the vocal numbers, the soloists being Miss Annie Taylor, Mr. Hamlyn Crimp, and Mr. W. Bennett; Mr. Perkins played the Overtures "The Magic Flute" and "Figaro" on the organ; and Mr. G. H. Manton gave, as a pianoforte solo, one of the composer's juvenile works. An interesting feature was a brief Lecture on the Life of Mozart, illustrated by limelight views. This was calculated to afford real instruction to the audience.

The month has but a poor record in the way of choral Concerts, but Handel's "Messiah" will have been given three times during its course. The first performance took place in the Town Hall on Saturday, the 5th ult., the Midland Musical Society (Conductor, Mr. H. M. Stevenson) forming the executive; a fortnight later the Association conducted by Mr. G. Halford took up the work, and the usual Boxing Night performance by the Festival Choral Society was given. The only other Concert in which choral music was prominent was the so-called Madrigal Concert given at the Midland Institute on the 14th ult. This was, however, only open to members of the Institute. The small choir gave with taste and refinement a number of part-songs, including Leslie's "Resurgam," Smart's "Cradle Song," and Faning's "Moonlight"; one Madrigal of the olden time, Wilbye's "Sweet honey-sucking Bees," Morley's Ballet "Now is the month of Maying," Beale's Madrigal "Come, let us join," and Meyerbeer's "Pater Noster." Mr. Halford has succeeded Mr. Stockley as Conductor of the Madrigal Choir. At this Concert our clever young violoncellist, Mr. A. J. Priestley, made his véntree, after a two years' sojourn at Frankfort, and met with great success.

A new Cantata by Mr. G. Halford, entitled "The Paraclete," was performed for the first time at Hamstead Road Chapel, on the 1st ult.

Turning to other Concerts, I may revert to that given by Sarasate, mentioned in my last as taking place on November 26. With Madame Berthe Marx at the pianoforte the great violinist gave, with wonderful effect, Mackenzie's "Pibroch," which, heard for the first time here, was very warmly received.

Mr. Stockley's first Orchestral Concert took place in the Town Hall on Thursday, the 10th ult. In addition to the Mozart celebration, already alluded to, interest attached to this Concert inasmuch as it witnessed the first appearance here of Mr. Bernhard Stavenhagen. His performance of LONDON & NEW YORK: NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

Beethoven's Fourth Concerto in G (Op. 58) was in the purest classical style, and—not having been heard here for nineteen years—the work was listened to with the greatest delight.

On the 17th ult. the Masonic Hall was occupied by the Shinner Quartet, the programme including Mendelssohn's String Quartet in E minor (Op. 44) and the Pianoforte Quartet in G minor (Op. 25) of Brahms. Miss Emily Gilloch, pianist, made a very favourable impression at this Concert.

There is a proposal to give free Concerts at the Town Hall, Oldbury, on Sunday evenings, but no particulars are yet to hand. Dr. Swinnerton Heap's Cantata "Fair Rosamond" was successfully performed at Walsall, under the composer's direction, on the 3rd ult.

At a meeting of the Committee of the General Hospital, held on Friday, the 4th ult., Mr. C. G. Beale handed over a cheque for £5,000, the result of the late Festival. There is a probability of a further sum of £400 or £500 being paid when the accounts are finally closed.

MUSIC IN BRADFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Bradford Operatic Society has within the month occupied the boards of the Princes' Theatre for an entire week with productions of Flotow's "Martha" and Lecocq's "La Fille de Madame Angot." The works were given on alternate evenings and received by fairly good houses with approval. Mr. Hartwell Robertshaw, the Conductor, deserves much credit for the excellence of the performances.

The Bradford Amateur Thespian Society brought out a new Comic Opera at the Bradford Theatre Royal on the 17th ult. The work is called "The Professor; or, the cruise of the yacht 'Scholastic,'" the libretto of which is by Mr. G. W. Harwin, and the music by Mr. Arthur T. Akeroyd, both Bradfordians. The opera is constructed on the Gilbert-Sullivan models. The leading idea is that of a yacht fitted up as a boarding school for a number of refractory wards in Chancery. There are some excellent musical features, and the performance went off very successfully.

The Bradford Old Choral Society, which for some years has been content to occupy a second place in musical organisation, invited public attention to its existence in more prominent measure by a performance in St. George's Hall, on November 27, of "Elijah." The performance was a remarkably successful one—well-balanced and adequate in every respect. An admirably constituted and highly-trained chorus was supplemented by an efficient orchestra, which is a feature of some importance in relation to choral performances in Bradford. Madame Conway, Miss E. Rhodes, Mr. H. Beaumont, and Mr. W. Thornton were responsible for the principal solos; and assistance was rendered by Miss Smith, Miss Foulds, Mr. J. Pickles, Mr. R. Fisher, and Mr. A. Roome. Mr. W. Widdop was at the organ, Mr. W. Rees led the band, and the Conductor was Mr. H. Robertshaw.

The month has been an exceedingly busy one for choral societies in the district. At Queensbury, on the 5th ult., the Choral Society gave "Athalie," with the assistance of Madame Annie Saville, Miss B. Sewell, and Miss Margaret Kay, and of Mr. W. Miles as reader, and Mr. Booth Sharp as accompanist. The Conductor was Mr. W. B. Sewell, whose experience was of importance in the general success of the performance. The second part of the programme included compositions by Hatton, Morley, and Caldicott, besides songs for the principals.

Mr. Rook led the members of the Shipley Choral Society through an excellent performance of "Acis and Galatea" on the 15th ult. The choruses were sung with taste and judgment, supplemented by an adequate orchestral accompaniment. Miss C. Marshall as Galatea, Mr. J. Alderson as Acis, and Mr. W. Thornton in the bass part sang with much acceptance. Among the supplementary contributions were songs by Mrs. J. Foster and Mrs. W. M. Gray and a violin solo by Mr. I. Shepherd.

At the Bradford Subscription Concert, on the 11th ult., Sir Charles Hallé's band gave Schumann's Symphony in C. Señor Sarasate, as violinist, had a magnificent reception. Madame Valda, the vocalist, was suffering from cold, but she sang one song.

There have been numerous performances of "The Messiah" of late. The Sowerby Bridge Choral Society presented the Oratorio on the 15th ult., with the assistance of Miss Sellers (soprano), Miss Florence Hallowell (contralto), Mr. J. Mellor (tenor), and Mr. J. Browning (bass). Mr. H. Gaukroger was the Conductor, and the pianist was Mr. Whitaker. The Keighley Musical Union's performance of "The Messiah," on the same date, was one of more than average merit. Principals and chorus were all members of the Union, as, with a few exceptions, were also the band. Mrs. Ambler and Mrs. Robertshaw (sopranos), Miss Margaret Kay (contralto), Mr. Lupton Gill and Mr. E. Redman (tenors), and Mr. F. Dunderdale and Mr. T. Wainwright (basses) divided the solo work. Mr. Arthur Burnley was the Conductor. The Brighouse Choral Society gave its annual performance on the 15th ult., when a chorus of about 120 gave a performance of Haydn's "Seasons" and Macfarren's "May-Day." The solo work was entrusted to Miss Vinnie Beaumont, Mr. C. M. Fredericks, and Mr. R. Hilton. Mr. J. H. Pearson was the Conductor, Mr. J. Bowling, of Heckmondwike, led the band, and the pianist was Mr. J. Bickerdike, of Brighouse. The Woodhouse Grove School Choral Society (Apperley Bridge) rendered Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus" on the 15th ult. The principals were Miss E. H. Wray, Mr. W. W. L. Lishmann, and Mr. F. M. Facer. Mr. G. F. Naylor was at the pianoforte. The Halifax Choral Society gave "The Messiah" on the 17th ult., with Madame Conway, Miss Dews, Mr. Philip Newbury, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint as principals. Mr. W. H. Garland was the Conductor. There was a strong band and chorus, and the performance was one of great merit. The Haworth Choral Society's second Concert was given on the 19th ult., when the "Creation" was performed with very creditable effect. There was a fairly strong chorus, and a band of which Mr. C. S. Haggas was leader. Mrs. Robertshaw (of Keighley) sang the soprano solos, Mr. Tom Child (Leeds) was the tenor, and Mr. W. Thornton (Bradford) the bass soloist. The Conductor was Mr. Handel Parker.

The Bradford Glee Union's annual Concert, given in the Mechanics' Institute on the 16th ult., was in aid of the National Lifeboat Institution. The programme was made up of miscellaneous pieces, largely of the nautical order, the vocalists being the Bradford Amphion Prize Quartet, Miss Amy Summersgill, Madame Armitage, Miss Emily Rhodes, Miss Florrie Parker, Mr. J. H. Sharp, Mr. E. Hammond, Mr. Tom Robinson, and Mr. B. Settle. Instrumental performances were added by Mr. Schrumpf (violoncello), Mr. Harry Sykes (banjo), and Messrs. Penningroth and Mensforth (pianists). There was only a small attendance.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE greatest Choral Concert of the past month was that on the 14th ult., when the members of the Bristol Choral Society, numbering more than 500, assisted at the last Monday Popular Concert of the present series. These performances are generally orchestral, a few songs being added by way of variety; therefore the event under notice was of a special character. The choir sang Mendelssohn's beautiful "Hear my Prayer" and the "Loreley" fragment, the "Evening Hymn" from Sullivan's "Golden Legend," and the Hallelujah Chorus from Beethoven's "Engedi." Long ago the comparatively young Society attained a high degree of efficiency, and that has been greatly improved upon recently. Hence the works now brought forward, which are familiar to very many of the singers, who belong to other associations, were sung with a degree of perfection that won general admiration. The tone was full, pure, and refined (a characteristic of Bristol chorus singing), the phrasing was most intelligent, the enunciation clear, the attack and release sharp, and the tone-shading superb. Miss Bethel and Mr. W. Thomas were the principal vocalists and discharged their duties praiseworthily, particularly the lady, who achieved a striking success on this her first visit to Bristol. The orchestral works were Beethoven's "Leonora" Overture, No. 3, the "Peer Gynt" Suite of Grieg, and the introduction to the first and third acts of "Lohengrin"; and Mr. J. H. Fulford played W. Macfarren's Concertstück in E for pianoforte very finely. Mr. G. Riseley conducted with his usual judgment and accustomed inspiriting style. The Concert was a great success.

On the 16th ult. a vast assemblage gathered in Colston Hall to hear the forces of the Saturday Popular Concert Society give a performance of "The Messiah." The choir and band were about the same strength as usual, and performed the Oratorio with praiseworthy results, but the addition of many voices would have made a greater impression in the more massive choruses. Miss Marianne Fenna, Miss Eleanor Rees, Mr. Harper Kearton, and Mr. Montague Worlock were an excellent quartet of principal vocalists. Mr. G. Riseley was the Organist, and Mr. G. Gordon conducted.

The Bristol Gleemen's "Ladies' Night" fell on the 3rd ult., when a good programme of novelties and familiar pieces was presented. Among the compositions now first heard in our city were "Heave the anchor," which was written for the Society by the late Mr. W. A. Barrett; Franz Abt's "Dancing Song," the words of which Mr. Kidner translated from the German; a "Night Song," of Lorenz; and "Come Fairies," of John Parry. Owing to the severe weather, which seriously thinned the ranks of the singers, the choir was not so strong as hitherto, the weakness being most apparent among the first tenors. There was also just a little want of spirit at the commencement of the performance. Notwithstanding the adverse circumstances, the Concert was highly praiseworthy, and in tone, freedom, finish, attack, and release the Society showed a marked advance since last year. The rendering of Dr. Callcott's "Peace to the souls of the heroes" was the finest achievement of the evening, and for this effort alone the Gleemen deserve great praise. The soloists were Messrs. F. Taylor, E. T. Kidner, W. H. Wickes, W. H. Hayes, and J. Spray. Mr. Walter J. Kidner conducted.

Two other choral performances may be briefly noticed. The Downend Choral Society gave an interpretation of Mozart's Twelfth Mass on the 7th ult. under the direction of Mr. Cedric Bucknall, the principals being Miss Coleman, Miss Grace, Messrs. Hill and Hodge. On the 14th ult. the annual Concert of the Bishopston Choral Society took place. Glees and part-songs and vocal solos made up the programme.

Mr. Gordon, the Conductor of the Saturday Popular Concerts, made an attempt to establish similar gatherings in South Bristol on the 12th ult. He took part of his forces to the Town Hall, and presented an interesting and certainly popular programme, which was greatly enjoyed by the audience. The attendance, however, was very small.

Spohr's "Last Judgment" was the Anthem at a special Advent Service held in Redcliffe Church on the 8th ult. The large choir was augmented, and an orchestral band of nearly forty executants took part in the performance, which Mr. J. W. Lawson directed. The soloists were Messrs. G. Walker, F. Rider, Boddy, and Shellabear. Redcliffe Church has gained renown for taking the lead in such musical services. There are indications that under the new Dean similar ones will be again held in the Cathedral.

The Choral Society of St. John's, Redland, took part in a special Advent Service, held in the Parish Church on the 16th ult., when Gounod's "Out of Darkness" was sung, with the assistance of an orchestral band. The principal vocalists were Misses Harris and Jones and Messrs. Spray and Venn. Gaul's "Holy City" was sung by St. Mary's, Tyndalls Park, Choral Society, and the choir of the church, at a special service on the 18th ult., a string band joining the fine organ in the rendering of the instrumental portions of the work and supporting the voices. The chief vocalists were Misses Street, Mason, Rootham, Boucher, Mrs. Browne, Mrs. Stroud, Master George, Messrs. Fry, Lewis, and Wickes.

Following the example set by some of the churches of our city, a new departure has been initiated in two of the Bristol dissenting places of worship. Augmented choirs and small orchestral bands now take part in the services, and up to the present the experiment has proved a great success.

The other musical events include excellent Chamber Concerts given by Miss Mary Lock, Miss Florence Eyre, and Mr. Liebich respectively. Unfamiliar works were introduced at each. A miscellaneous programme was presented at the Post Office Band Concert on November 26.

Had it not been for Mr. and Mrs. Roeckel the Mozart Centenary would not have been celebrated in Bristol. Those talented artists gave a Chamber Concert for a benevolent object on the 5th ult., and some of the choicest examples of the Salzburg master were played and sung. In the interval Mr. Roeckel gave a short account of the life of Mozart, drawing largely, as he said, from the writings of Mr. Joseph Bennett, whose contributions to the Mozart Supplement of The Musical Times of December he heartily commended to the audience.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

"Mozart alone!" we are told, is the musical creed of M. Gounod, after his successive belief in "myself and Mozart" and "Mozart and myself." "Mozart alone" was the motto emblazoned on the banners of our musical battalions during the past month. First in importance of the Mozart Centenary Concerts was the fine performance of the Twelfth Mass by the Dublin Musical Society, on the 3rd ult., in the Examination Hall of the Royal University, where all of Dublin that is musical was assembled or represented. The choir of the Society, numbering 400 voices, did the fullest justice to the noble choruses. The band too, whose steady improvement in balance and efficiency during the year has already been mentioned in these notes, distinguished itself, both in the accompaniments to the Mass and to the songs included in the second part, and also in the performance of the Overture to the "Magic Flute," by its delicacy of execution and its obedience to the Conductor's minutest indications. Madame Annie Marriott's brilliant vocalisation was effective in the music allotted to the principal soprano; and the remaining solo parts were taken by Mrs. Murray (an amateur), Mr. Edward Branscombe (tenor), and Mr. Robert Newman (baritone). In the second part Madame Marriott was heard in "Batti, batti" and "Dove sono"; Mr. Branscombe in "Dalla sua pace"; and Mr. Newman in "Non più andrai." The Trio "Cosa sento" was well sung by these artists, and the performance closed with the beautiful Motet "Splendente te, Deus"—"O God, when Thou appearest." Mr. Levey led the strings, and Mr. Horan was Organist. Dr. Joseph Smith conducted.

On the 5th ult. a Mozart Centenary Concert was given by the Dublin University Choral Society in the Examination Hall, Trinity College, Sir Robert Stewart conducting. It consisted of Mozart's "Requiem" and "Ave Verum," with band and chorus of about eighty performers. The soloists were Misses Craig and Elssner, Messrs. Weldon and Robertson. On the previous Saturday afternoon a most interesting Lecture on "Mozart: his Life and Works," was delivered in the same hall by Sir Robert Stewart. A large attendance mustered to hear the genial Professor, and the Lecture was pleasantly "illustrated by experiments," as a Collegian observed.

Amongst the other Mozart Concerts was that of the Dublin Choral Union, conducted by Dr. Annie Patterson, which took place at the Antient Concert Rooms on November 28, when the Twelfth Mass was given, with pianoforte and harmonium accompaniment, followed by a miscellaneous second part; and another performance of the Twelfth Mass for the benefit of Mr. R. V. O'Brien, in the same locale on November 25, Mr. Brendan Rogers conducting. An Orchestral Concert at the Royal Irish Academy of Music, under the direction of Mr. Joseph Robinson, included the "Jupiter" Symphony.

At the annual Festival of the Irish Society of St. Cecilia, on St. Cecilia's Day (November 22), Palestrina's "Missa Papæ Marcelli" was performed at St. Peter's Church, Phibsboro', by a large and well-trained choir, under the direction of Mr. Peter Goodman.

The usual Winter series of Chamber Music Recitals commenced at the theatre of the Royal Dublin Society on November 9, and is continued each Monday afternoon at 3.30 and 4.30 p.m. alternately. Signor Papini is leader, and is supported by Messrs. Rawlingson (second violin), Grisard (viola), Rudersdorff (violoncello), and Esposito (pianoforte). These classical Recitals are of great educational value, and are the weekly resort of students and amateurs of music.

An extra "Messiah" Concert was announced by the Dublin Musical Society for the 22nd ult., with Misses Charlotte Walker and Alice Lambe, Messrs. John Weldon and Frangcon Davis as soloists.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH AND THE EAST OF SCOTLAND.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Now that the excitement attendant on the election to the Reid Chair has subsided, it is widely recognised by Edinburgh musicians that the University Court chose wisely among the candidates. And as the Edinburgh Society of Musicians has a right to give voice to the professional opinion, seeing that it includes in its membership every musician in Edinburgh of any importance, a public reception of some kind has been arranged for the 18th inst., at which Mr. Niecks will be offered the congratulations of his professional brethren. This will serve important ends: it will establish and bear witness to a kindly feeling between the Reid Professor and the profession in Edinburgh, and it will show plainly that the right man has been appointed.

Mr. Kirkhope's Choir chose "Bonny Kilmeny" and Rheinberger's "Christoforus" for their annual Winter Concert. Both works have been previously given by this excellent choir, which shows yearly improvement. The general attention to light and shade is remarkable, and the firmness and volume of tone from such a comparatively small chorus can only be explained by a careful choice of voices. An orchestra of local players rendered capital, if occasionally prominent service; and the engagement of such capable and well-known artists as Mr. Andrew Black and Miss Wright added to the artistic success of the Concert.

Messrs. Paterson's series of Orchestral Concerts began brilliantly on the 14th ult. A crowded hall testified to a wide public interest and a full subscription list. Mr. Manns was accorded a hearty reception as he appeared at his old post, and the improvement in the band gained by the addition of a number of strings was at once apparent in the "Zauberflöte" Overture. Altogether it is admitted that Messrs. Paterson have a right to affirm that the orchestra is much improved, and it is to be hoped that they will not lack ample support in their scheme. Madame Marriott sang "Non mi dir," by Mozart; a Cavatina from the "Reine de Saba," by Gounod; and Handel's Recit. and Aria "Lusinghe più care." The Gounod song was most successful and narrowly escaped an encore. The Mozart Centenary was celebrated in the first part of the programme, and by a sketch of Mozart from the pen of Mr. Franklin Peterson.

The programme was repeated in Dundee and met with an enthusiastic reception.

The Edinburgh Amateur Orchestral Society also celebrated the Mozart Centenary, and included "Idomeneo," the Concerto in D minor, "Das Veilchen," and other works, in a well-rendered programme under the direction of Mr. Carl D. Hamilton; and on the 5th ult., the anniversary itself, the Society of Musicians threw open its new rooms for the inspection of friends, who listened to a short Lecture by Mr. Franklin Peterson, and afterwards to the D major Quartet, played by Messrs. Daly, Dambman, Laubach, and Carl Hamilton.

On the 1st ult. Herr Stavenhagen interpreted a programme which, where it was not well worn, was very flimsy ("Puritani," Bellini-Liszt); but his playing was characterised by all the force and originality to which we were accustomed three years ago. He was accompanied on this tour by Madame Stavenhagen, whose rendering of German Lieder charmed her audience.

The same artists appeared in Dundee on the following evening, before a good audience.

The Choral Union of Dundee is one of the most enterprising body of singers in the kingdom. They have already performed the "Dream of Jubal" and the "Story of Sayid," both for the first and, indeed, the only time in Scotland; and this Winter (9th ult.) they produced Berlioz's "Faust," on the evening following the performance in Glasgow. Mr. Carl D. Hamilton conducted with great care and conspicuous success; and if the band of eighty performers was at times rather strong for the chorus, it must be remembered that a full rehearsal had not been practicable. This fact, however, told against the complete success of the choral portion only in the last number, with its curious cross-time and syncopated effects. Surely no higher praise could be given to chorus and Conductor. Mr. George Henschel's wonderful reading of the Mephistopheles music was equal to one of the most sympathetic and effective performances ever heard—Mrs. Henschel's Marguerite. The "King of Thule" ballad was most movingly sung. Mr. Iver McKay gave a good account of the Faust music and was frequently applauded.

Miss Steele's Select Choir at Perth still holds the position it has made for itself in the rendering of unaccompanied glees, madrigals, and part-songs. Miss Steele did wisely in varying the programme of her first Concert last month with selections of chamber music.

The Perth Musical Society is a choral body of larger proportions, with the study of oratorio for its aim, and possessing a skilful Conductor in Mr. F. S. Graves. Cowen's "St. John's Eve" was the work chosen for its recent Concert, and as this tuneful Cantata presents no serious difficulties, a very successful performance resulted. The soloists were Misses Bethell and Berry, Messrs. Durward Lely and Glencorse, all of whom did their work well.

At the second of Messrs. Paterson's Orchestral Concerts, on the 21st ult., the interest was centred round the first performance in Scotland of Dr. Mackenzie's Hymn "Veni, Creator Spiritus." Its broad style and exalted expression, and the intricacies of its extremely clever counterpoint were faithfully reproduced by the Choral Union, under Mr. T. H. Collinson's bâton. The chorus sang in excellent tune, with good volume of tone and precision of attack, as well as the attention to nuance, which tells of skilful and patient training. The "Verse" portions were entrusted to a double quartet of members, who sang with great acceptance. In "Acis and Galatea" and MacCunn's "Cameronian's Dream" the chorus was also well up to its work. Of the solo vocalists, Mr. Andrew Black made a special mark by his excellent singing.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

Berlioz's "Faust" inaugurated what may be termed the regular season of the Glasgow Choral Union on the evening of the 8th ult. True enough the Chamber Concert given in October last was the first of the annual series, but it goes without saying that the real musical life and activity of the season only begin with the arrival of Mr. August Manns and his orchestra. The Crystal Palace chef did not conduct the French composer's work, because, as has before been noted in these columns, the Society's choral concerts are now, and very properly, given under the bâton of Mr. Joseph Bradley, the accomplished choirmaster. But the services of the band were, of course, called into requisition, and, as now augmented by the addition of seventeen strings, the phalanx of ninety instrumentalists was imposing. Mr. Henschel once more asserted his supremacy as an exponent of demoniacal utterances. Mr. Iver McKay sang the tenor solos in his usual cultured style. Mrs. Henschel's refined method is well suited to the music of Margaret, and in Brander's song Mr. J. W. Render, a local organist of good repute, showed no mean powers as a vocalist. The chorus again proved the excellence of its drill in more than one complex example of Berlioz's genius, the tone of the singers was admirable, and, taken as a whole, the large audience had reason to be satisfied with the inauguration of the season's work. The Popular Concert series commenced on Saturday evening, the 12th ult., when Mr. Manns had a cordial reception—a greeting which is only, indeed, reserved for old and valued friends. Max Bruch's Concerto for violin and orchestra

(No. 1, in G minor) was in the programme, and in the slow movement Mr. Maurice Sons's pure and full tone, as also his artistic method, were again abundantly manifest. Beethoven's first Symphony was well played throughout, and the very engaging Intermezzo from "La Cavalleria Rusticana" found numerous friends amongst the audience. Miss Maggie Davies was announced to sing, but an unfortunate accident precluded her appearance. Mr. Render proved an efficient deputy. There was a Mozart programme, so far as part one was concerned, at the Subscription Concert of the 15th ult., when fine performances of "The Magic Flute" Overture and the "Jupiter" Symphony were secured. Part two included a truly excellent reading of the Prelude to "Parsifal" and an exhilarating performance of Svendsen's "Carnival at Paris." Madame Annie Marriott sang, and with special acceptance, "Lusinghe più care."

The Church is again viewing with favour a Sunday evening musical service. Recently, for example, the choir of St. George's-in-the-Fields again distinguished itself by an excellent performance of Mr. Gaul's Cantata "Ruth," thanks to the careful training of Mr. Allan Macbeth, the Organist of the Church, who is also the Principal of the Athenæum School of Music. At another sacred edifice in the North-East quarter of the city the music was, moreover, accompanied by an orchestra in addition to the organ, and it is just possible that other churches may soon follow in the wake of such agreeable progress.

The miscellaneous Concerts of last month were numerous, but we can only give a bare record of the more interesting of these; and, first of all, the Bridgeton Choral Society, conducted by Mr. George Taggart, must be credited with having studied Mr. F. H. Cowen's "St. John's Eve" to some purpose. The choir was in excellent trim, the soloists were good local artists, and Mr. W. H. Cole's orchestra furnished the needful accompaniments. On the 4th ult. Mr. and Mrs. Stavenhagen appeared in St. Andrew's Hall in a by no means uninteresting programme, and Mr. Bogue's Choir gave a Concert in the Berkeley Hall on the evening of the 10th ult., when Dr. Charles Vincent's new part-song was heard for the first time. It is a bright and melodious "Seguidilla," wherein the castanets and tambourines play a characteristic part, and the piece proved so acceptable to the large audience that it had to be repeated. Mr. Guilmant's Organ Recital in St. Andrew's Hall, on the 14th ult., was not so well attended as the many admirers of the famous Trinité Organist could have desired. His programme contained several favourite examples from his own pen, and Mr. Ludwig sang with all his wonted dramatic power.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

Regarding the work of the Philharmonic Society during the past month there is but little to note. On the 8th ult. the "Jupiter" Symphony and other compositions of Mozart served as a centenary celebration; and on the 22nd ult. Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" was given. The prospectus of what is to come is of great interest, for during the second half-session are to be given C. Braun's Cantata "Sir Olaf," the third acts of Wagner's "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin," and Dvorák's "Requiem." Upon such a departure the directorate are to be heartily congratulated.

The two other choral societies immediately hereabouts which stand next to the Philharmonic in importance, numerically at least, are the St. Cecilia, at Birkenhead, and the Rock Ferry, and both have given Concerts of a quasi-public character. The first-named performed, on the 12th ult., Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," under Mr. J. W. Applegard; and the latter gave, the same week, Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" and Mozart's "Requiem," with Mr. J. W. Pemberton, who has conducted this Society for time almost out of mind. Both performances were well up to the high standard previously set for themselves by the organisations concerned. On the 17th ult., under Mr. J. Ross, who has happily again this season taken up the control, the Wallasey Musical Society gave Cowen's "St. John's Eve"; and farther on, in the Wirral district, at West Kirby, the local choristers, on the 21st ult., gave Handel's "Messiah," under Mr. J. F. Swift.

With the same gentleman as Conductor, the Liverpool Musical Association announced Handel's "Messiah" for the 29th ult., at St. George's Hall, and two days previously it was set down for hearing at the Philharmonic Hall, under Mr. Clarke, of Southport. Other smaller local societies have made their presence felt, as usual, at Christmas, but nothing else has been done that seems really worth recording.

The annual Advent Oratorio at the Pro-Cathedral again consisted this year of Spohr's "Last Judgment," which work was given on the 3rd and 10th ult., with Mr. Collins at the organ and Mr. F. H. Burstal in the rostrum. A quasi-novelty was announced by the Liverpool Opera Society for Christmas Day at the Court Theatre, Mercadante's "Seven Last Words" being promised by Mr. J. O. Shepherd.

Among events of more than purely personal importance during the past month may be recorded two Concerts given respectively by Mr. H. Lawson and Mr. A. Krausse. The one consisted of music for string instruments and the other of pianoforte work, a dozen instruments being employed.

At Runcorn Rossini's "Stabat Mater" was given on the 21st ult., with Mr. W. Humphreys as Conductor, and at St. Helen's, during the month, Mozart's Centenary was celebrated by Mr. J. Unsworth with a performance of the Twelfth Mass, the fame and doubtful authenticity of which are alike well known.

Wind chamber music formed the chief attraction of the third Birkenhead Subscription Concert, Sir Charles Hallé and members of his band being chiefly prominent. At the same locality, on the 16th and 17th ult., Dr. W. H. Hunt's clever comic opera "Utopia" was given. The work was first brought out early this year, and its repetition was thoroughly justified.

A large music school has been established in Liverpool with a strong staff of professors and well-known directors, among those concerned being Messrs. Argent, Branscombe, Courvoisier, Carl Fuchs, Hunt, J. Henry, Carl Heinecke, Streather, J. Ross, H. S. Welsing, and others. Commodious premises, with a Concert-room capable of holding 400, have been secured in Hardman Street, a leading thoroughfare, and work is to commence at the close of this month.

MUSIC IN LEEDS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

At last a definite understanding has been arrived at with regard to next year's Musical Festival arrangements. Sir Arthur Sullivan will again conduct, Mr. Alfred Broughton will again fill the post of chorus-master, and great things may reasonably be anticipated in the choral department as the result of a more sensible system of organisation.

The Leeds Philharmonic Society entered upon its twenty-first season on the 9th ult., with a successful performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah." The announcement of this most popular of oratorios, with Mr. Santley in the title-rôle, drew a large audience to the Colisseum, and enthusiasm prevailed. The choral numbers were given with that brightness and vigour which our Northern choirs so well know how to infuse into a work with which they are in touch; and "Thanks be to God" and "Be not afraid" were particularly noteworthy for these qualities. The remaining solo parts were in the hands of Miss Anna Williams, Miss Marian McKenzie, and Mr. Hirwen Jones.

The first Leeds Subscription Concert was given in the Colisseum on the 16th ult. Mr. and Mrs Henschel, Mr. Schönberger, and Mr. Ysaÿe had been announced, but the latter gentleman being unable to put in an appearance, his place in the programme was filled by Mr. Arbos, the Spanish violinist, who scored a success in the face of very adverse circumstances.

A record of music in Leeds would be incomplete without a notice of the first Concert of the recently-founded Symphony Society, given November 30—too late for notice last month. Leeds has long, and justly, been reproached with inability to muster and maintain a complete orchestra of its own; but to judge from the success which attended the new Society's first public appearance, local music-lovers can have no cause for further complaint in this respect.

The programme included Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture, Haydn's Seventh "Salomon" Symphony, Gade's "Ossian" Overture, Meyerbeer's "Coronation" March, and some minor pieces, all of which had full justice done to them by the orchestra of ninety musicians, under the careful conductorship of Mr. John Gutfeld. Mr. Alfred Giessing played Max Bruch's "Kol Nidrei," with orchestral accompaniment, and Miss Marie Lummert contributed several well-chosen vocal selections. A Beethoven Symphony is promised for the next Concert.

On the 1st ult. the Dewsbury Choral Society gave a Concert in the Industrial Hall, Dewsbury. Sullivan's Festival Te Deum, Stanford's "Revenge," and Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens"—wherein the choral and instrumental forces were united—served to display to great advantage the excellent qualities of Mr. G. H. Hirst's body of choralists. The orchestra had naturally more chance of distinction in the two purely instrumental numbers—Rossini's "William Tell" and Mendelssohn's "Ruy Blas" Overtures—and successful advantage was taken of it. Miss Maggie Davies took the solos in the Te Deum and sang two songs.

The first Subscription Concert of the Calverley Choral Society was given in the Mechanics' Hall, on November 30, when Mozart's "Requiem" Mass and Bennett's "May Queen" constituted the programme—the former work being performed in commemoration of the composer's death a century ago. The rendering of both works was successful in every way. Mrs. Hardy, Miss Marie Rhodes, Mr. Child, and Mr. Browning were the principals, Mr. James Hall the Conductor, and Mr. Verdi Fawcett leader of the orchestra.

The Wakefield Choral and Orchestral Society's first Concert of the season was given on the 11th ult., in the City Corn Exchange, the programme consisting of Rossini's "Stabat Mater," Parry's "St. Cecilia's Day," and Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto—the latter excellently played by Mr. H. Wood, who also led an efficient orchestra. Miss Jessie Moorhouse, Miss Bertenshaw, Mr. Charles Blagbro, and Mr. Dan Billington were the soloists, and Mr. J. N. Hardy conducted. Sullivan's "Golden Legend" is promised at an early date.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

WE have now passed through our annual festival performances of "The Messiah," and they have brought certain thoughts which it would be well to note. Most satisfactory is the evidence that the popularity of Handel's great work is still increasing, and that the hold which it has upon our affection is deepening year by year. Ever and anon, because from the programme of some great triennial festival this Oratorio is omitted, and its place occupied by a work less familiar and more beyond the grasp of the ordinary resources of the forces engaged, some critic (priding himself upon his keenness of foresight and his enlarged notions) prophesies the decline of the masterpiece which has grown so intimately associated with Christmas that its regular hearing has become a positively religious duty, without which the season would be robbed of one of its chief marks. But the growing love for the Oratorio brings its dangers. The congregation—as the audience may often properly be called—looks for greater care of performance, and does not find it. Every regular Concert-giver attacks the work, and many outsiders think it safe to venture, and are emboldened by the readiness with which a choir may be collected having some familiarity with its principal choruses. The result is not always satisfactory. No work is so carelessly presented, with its chief points so entirely overlooked. It may safely be said that in every Lancashire town of the slightest pretension two or three performances of "The Messiah" are given in the December of each year, in addition to the selections attempted at the "Services of Song," and the other pretences whereby the craving for music, instead of mere words, is satisfied, without the honesty of calling things by their true names. In this city, in one week, and in one room, we had five performances, attended by crowded audiences; and five more would, probably, not have exceeded the demand. But an oratorio makes very exacting demands upon all its executants. Its Conductor should be an intelligent musician, quick of resource, a skilful accompanist; at once ready to take an imperative lead or to yield just sufficiently to draw together again his sometimes refractory forces. To say that he should be able to read a score and to appreciate the relative importance of all its parts is to state such obvious necessities as almost to cause surprise why they should be asserted. But, without hesitation, it ought to be chronicled that, at many of our most imposing renderings of not only one of the greatest but the best-known works extant, we have repeatedly been dangerously near an utter collapse. "Let us break their bonds" has, more than once, seemed to express the intention of a choir. Another anxiety is caused by the obvious fact that, while our principal oratorio solo singers are growing old—or "experienced and dramatic," as it is the fashion to say—and their powers are waning, we have few new candidates showing themselves qualified to take their places. The fact is that the great demand for music generally, and for Handel's great work more particularly at this season, brings forward a large number of only half-educated vocalists, who are in no degree musicians. The mere record of the names of those who have during the month more or less delighted or pained us is unimportant beside the consideration that Christmas brings its opportunity to almost every ambitious singer, and the regret that so few bring evidence of preparedness.

The Recital of the third acts of "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin" (November 26) needs further notice than I was able to give. The season has, so far, brought us no more interesting Concert, although the soprano soloist was entirely overweighted in the part of St. Elizabeth. In the "Requiem," wherewith the centenary of Mozart's death was commemorated, Sir Charles Hallé's choir was admirable; and on the following Thursday Lady Hallé's re-appearance was welcomed as it deserved to be. Among all our violinists no one is so irreproachable as an executant, so absolutely perfect in intonation, and so finished in style. Having repeatedly heard all the great players of the last half-century, I cannot but feel that among all the services which Sir Charles Hallé has rendered to Manchester, perhaps the very chief is the closeness of the tie whereby he has bound his accomplished wife to our city. At the same Concert Mdlle. Rose Alba established a claim to be again heard, and in music more suited to the concert-room, while still giving opportunity for the display of her evidently keenly dramatic sensibilities.

At Mr. De Jong's Miscellaneous Concerts matters are improving. The young players in the band are becoming more accustomed to their work and the increasing audiences are not slow in recognising the fact. Some selections from chamber music for wind instruments have given a pleasure distinctly encouraging, and have shown the resources at command.

On Wednesday evenings Mr. Lane is prospering. His choir is improving in tone and getting more under control, and the comic music hall element in his programmes is being gradually eliminated in favour of such legitimate singing as many of our local artists—like Miss Ada Lee, Mr. Seymour Jackson, and many others—can render, even when no "Australian nightingales" (rare birds, by the way) and New York dramatic soprani are available.

Mr. Barrett's undertakings are still on the old lines, with an occasional evidence of higher aims. For the 19th ult. a small quasi-quadrille band of nine players (including the pianist) was engaged, and interpreted with great verve and finish some simple music. But the title, the "Viennese Orchestra," was rather too lofty. And the tone of Mr. Edgar Haddock's "famous Stradivarius violin, valued at two thousand guineas," failed to justify the estimate, although the executancy of the player was very elaborate.

In addition to the regular weekly Organ Recitals of Mr. Pyne—which are excellent and very popular—we have had our annual, and always welcome, visit by Mr. Alex. Guilmant, and have admired, as heretofore, the finish of his manipulation, and especially his readiness in extemporisation.

Reference is made in another column to the scheme recently unfolded by Sir Charles Hallé. The speedy establishment of a complete College of Music may be considered certain, as its permanence, usefulness, and entire freedom must not be endangered by any hasty inconsiderateness. The plan startles, not by its largeness, but by its complication. To devote a vast sum of money to building another large hall so long as the finest concert-room in the kingdom—though occupied, as it is, almost every evening—pays only a moderate dividend to its shareholders; and, further, to make the financial success of our College of Music hang upon the continued popularity of Concerts when their present energetic chief retires, may well cause serious misgivings to those who earnestly desire to wipe off from Manchester a reproach, to see the hiatus in our educational facilities worthily filled, and to bring music into a progressive state in a city which, fifty years ago, boasted of its great choral undertakings and of the absolutely secure position (as it then seemed) of the oldest society in the kingdom, established for the practice and performance of chamber and orchestral music.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

A Choral Concert of sacred music interspersed by organ solos, &c., was given at Derby Road Chapel on the 14th ult., conducted by Mr. F. H. Bedells. The programme included Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," a Mozart selection, and two Anthems accompanied by string band and organ. Miss Margaret Clark played Handel's Violin Sonata in A and Mackenzie's "Benedictus," with organ accompaniment. Handel's Organ Concerto (No. 2) and Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G minor were amongst the pieces played by the Organist, Mr. W. Wright.

The Tonic Sol-fa Choir gave its first Concert on the 5th ult., fully sustaining its reputation for finished part-singing.

Herr Ellenberger's second Concert, on the 3rd ult., attracted a much larger audience than before. The artists were the same as for the first Concert of this season.

Mr. Allen's second Popular Concert took place on the 9th ult., when a large audience greeted Sir Charles and Lady Hallé. The Concert was most enjoyable, and apparently augured success for Mr. Allen's experiment in giving classical music performed by first-rate artists at popular prices.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(From our own Correspondent.)

It is difficult to imagine a more difficult and bewildering task than that of attempting to summarise the music of the Michaelmas Term just concluded. Throughout its entire length Concert has succeeded Concert with quite unexampled rapidity, and a very large number of excellent artists have given performances. Here it may be sufficient to note that amongst well-known performers who have appeared during the term are Mrs. Hutchinson (October 29), Mr. Santley (November 12), Mr. Heckmann (November 16), Mr. Ysaÿe (November 26), Señor Sarasate (3rd ult.), Miss De Bunsen (7th ult.), and Mr. Phillips (8th ult.). A bare notice of these facts must be sufficient, unless it be to add that a melancholy interest has been added to the performance of Mr. Heckmann, who was a great favourite in Oxford, by the sad news of his early death, which arrived exactly a fortnight afterwards.

Three points seem to deserve special notice. The first is the successful inauguration of a series of Subscription Concerts by a committee formed of members of the University Musical Club. These gentlemen, with remarkable energy and enterprise, secured their position beforehand by a subscription list of unprecedented dimensions, and great success has attended the first half of their series, which is to be completed next term.

The second feature of interest in the term was a Concert given in the Corn Exchange on November 5, by the combined forces of the Reading Orpheus Society and the Oxford Gleemen. The chief work in the programme was Dr. Mee's "Horatius," which needs no further comment after the exhaustive account given of it in these columns last summer; but the Concert was very interesting as giving an example of an effect very little heard in England—a large chorus of men's voices with orchestral accompaniment. It is rumoured that these Societies propose to give combined Concerts in Oxford and Reading from time to time, and it is to be hoped that the rumour is well founded.

Lastly, the Oxford Choral and Philharmonic Society gave a Mozart Centenary Concert on the 1st ult., under the conductorship of Dr. Roberts. The programme was very like, indeed, almost identical with, similar programmes elsewhere, and consisted of the Clarinet Symphony, the familiar "Non più andrai," and, of course, the "Requiem." The band was the best heard in Oxford during the term, the chorus was good, and the soloists were Miss Carrington, Miss Meredyth Elliot, Mr. Harper Kearton, and Mr. Watkin Mills.

An interesting performance of viol music was given in the Sheldonian Theatre on November 26, by Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch, assisted by members of his family and friends. A more unfortunate place in which to exhibit the beauties of these feeble-toned instruments could hardly have been chosen; but, even so, the programme was one of the very greatest interest and value.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The performance of Mr. H. Coward's "Story of Bethany," on November 26, took place too late in the month to be dealt with in last month's letter, but was in every respect so successful that reference to it now is justified. The Sheffield Musical Union, under whose auspices the performance was given, has speedily attained an important position among the numerous South Yorkshire choirs. In opening the season with "The Story of Bethany" the committee paid a deserved compliment to Mr. Coward, the Conductor. The work, since its first production in May last, has won more than local popularity, and despite the fact of its having been performed by suburban societies in the interval, the Concert under notice attracted a crowded audience to the Albert Hall. The massive choral effects which constitute the backbone of the work were so rendered by the choir (numbering 200) that the chorus-singing became decidedly the leading feature of the performance. To instance the popularity of the Cantata it may be stated that eight of the numbers were encored. The principals were Miss Margaret Hoare, Miss Dews, and Mr. D. Billington. Mr. Phillips was Organist, and the composer conducted.

Sullivan's "Light of the World" was performed by the Amateur Musical Society on the 15th ult., in the Albert Hall. The work has not been heard in Sheffield since 1877, and in reviving it the Committee of the Society did well, the hall being crowded. "The Light of the World" was given with the completeness of ensemble which characterises all the choral performances given under Mr. Schollhammer's direction. The fine body of vocalists on the platform entered with enthusiasm into the task of doing justice to Sullivan's pleasing music, and the chorus-singing was superior to anything the Society has done for a number of years. The principals were Miss B. Holt, Miss M. Elliot, Mr. B. Smith, and Mr. B. Pierpoint. The orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. J. Peck, was beyond reproach, and Mr. J. W. Phillips rendered material service at the organ. Mr. Schollhammer conducted.

A successful Concert was given by the Collegiate Orchestral Society on the 14th ult. Kalliwoda's Symphony (No. 1) in F minor, and other pieces, were performed under Mr. Suckley.

The Sarasate Concert on the 2nd ult. was so pronounced a success that a return visit was at once arranged. The violinist played Mendelssohn's Concerto and other pieces in his best style, and Madame Marx was highly successful in her solos and accompaniments.

Mr. E. H. Lemare gave his fourth Organ Recital in the Albert Hall on the 14th ult. Miss Effie Thomas was the vocalist, and Mr. J. A. Rodgers pianist.

The usual number of "Messiah" performances were announced for Christmas Day.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

New York, December 15, 1891.

The Oratorio Society of New York opened the season of Oratorio Concerts with a fine performance of Brahms's German "Requiem" and the third part of Schumann's "Faust," under the direction of Mr. Damrosch.

The Arion Club, of Providence, R.I., under the direction of Mr. Jules Jordan, gave an excellent performance of Verdi's "Requiem." It is believed that a performance of Mackenzie's "Rose of Sharon" is contemplated.

Mr. William R. Chapman's two choral societies of this city have opened their season with Concerts of miscellaneous music, the most prominent number of the programme of the Rubinstein Club's Concert being Karel Bendl's "The Water-Sprite's Revenge."

The anniversary of Mozart's death gave occasion for a delightful performance of Mozart music by the Philharmonic Society of New York, under Herr Anton Seidl. The chief feature of the programme was the "Jupiter" Symphony.

Great interest is created in the expected performance, by the same body, of Dvorák's Fourth Symphony, which is promised as soon as the work is published. Mr. Theodore Thomas, whose field of activity has been transplanted to Chicago, will also give this Symphony a performance as soon as it is published. Though Dvorák has always been highly thought of in this country, as one of the most prominent living composers, his promised visit and engagement as Director of the National Conservatory of Music has given an additional interest to everything that emanates from his pen. This new Symphony, the "Requiem," his "Patriotic Hymn," the "Spectre's Bride," and the "Stabat Mater" are all promised for this season by various Societies.

Special evening services in our more prominent churches are becoming more and more a welcome and special addition to the musical life of every large city of this country. Many performances of classical and modern oratorios and cantatas are promised. The first of our season was given at Calvary Church, of this city, under the Organist and Choirmaster, C. R. Gale, who, in the short time in which he has had charge of the choir at Calvary, has raised the music at this church to a highly artistic standing. The work performed on this occasion was the "Woman of Samaria."

At the annual meeting of the Plain-song and Mediæval Music Society, held on the 10th ult., at 32, Sloane Gardens, a paper was read by Mr. W. J. Birkbeck on "The Eight Ecclesiastical Modes." The lecturer drew attention, not only to the well-known peculiarities of the modes, but to the necessity for accompanying them in a style distinct from that necessary for modern scales. The vocal illustrations consisted of hymns, introits, &c., in the different modes, well sung by three boys, who thus showed the suitability of plain-song for small as well as large choirs. In the hymns the metre was strictly preserved and the music made to fit it, however numerous the notes to each syllable might be. An especially beautiful Introit—that for the Epiphany—was extraordinarily modern in its dramatic effect. The Lecture, in fact, sufficiently showed that there is more in plain-song than musicians seem to suspect. The Annual Report of the Society reveals a very satisfactory state of things. There are 137 members and associates on the roll, against ninety-three at the corresponding date last year; a scheme is on foot for the provision of a special fount of music-type for printing plain-song; and the first part of a photograph fac-simile of an English Gradual of the thirteenth century is nearly ready for issue to members of the Society.

The Brixton Choral Society gave its first Concert of the season at the Brixton Hall on the 14th ult., when Macfarren's "Lady of the Lake" was given. The solo parts were sustained by Miss Fusselle, Miss Mary Chamberlain, Mr. Edward Branscombe, and Mr. David Hughes. Considering that Miss Fusselle was suffering from a severe cold, great praise is due to her for singing so well in the various portions allotted to her. Miss Mary Chamberlain's solo, the "Lay of the imprisoned huntsman," was highly appreciated and did her much credit. Mr. Edward Branscombe, who sang well throughout the evening, was heard to great advantage in the duet with Mr. David Hughes, given with great spirit. The performance of the choir was good, but more attention to gradation of tone would be an improvement, and the orchestra, selected from the bands of the Philharmonic, Crystal Palace, Royal Italian Opera, and the Academy, was excellent. Mr. W. J. Kipps presided at the organ, while Mr. H. A. Chapman was the orchestral superintendent. Mr. Douglas Redman, the Conductor of the Brixton Choral Society, may be congratulated upon the success of the evening.

The Mozart Centenary was celebrated, on the 11th ult., in the South London Institute of Music by a performance of the "Requiem" and a miscellaneous selection. The principal vocalists were Miss Naomi Hardy, Miss Flora Edwards, Mr. John Bartlett, and Mr. Morgan Wilkinson, who rendered full justice to their respective parts as did the members of the South London Choral Association. Mr. Gatehouse, the leader of the orchestra, was encored for his violin solo, a Minuet and Trio, transcribed by G. Haddock, from Mozart's Third Symphony. Mr. L. C. Venables conducted in his accustomed able manner. The Violin Class Concert at this Institute took place on the 14th ult., under the direction of Mr. T. E. Gatehouse. The students, who numbered over eighty, performed their selection in a most satisfactory manner. The vocal efforts of Miss Blamy and Mr. Ives were well received, and Mr. Gatehouse's violin solos were enthusiastically encored. Miss Biddell, Miss Margaret Doughty, and Miss S. E. Wood acted as accompanists.

At the Orchestral Concert given under the bâton of Mr. Frederic Corder, by the students of Trinity College, at Princes' Hall, on the 2nd ult., a welcome measure of progress was shown. The works heard included Mendelssohn's Capriccio in B minor (soloist, Miss E. Bonavia Hunt), two movements from Mozart's D minor Pianoforte Concerto (Miss L. W. Starling), two from Raff's in C minor (Miss E. M. Shuttleworth), F. David's Andante and Scherzo for violin and orchestra (Mrs. C. S. Fenigstein), and the Andante and Scherzo from Beethoven's A major Symphony. These last were extremely well played. The Andante was given at the beginning, the Scherzo at the end of the first part (!) and the latter was described as "Finale from the Symphony in A." Beyond the remark that no one who knows Mr. Corder will attribute these eccentricities to him, comment is unnecessary. The vocalists were Miss Maggie Pritchard, Miss Maud Williams, Miss May Pinney, and Miss Bertha Ackworth; the accompanist was Mr. Augustus Toop.

The "professional students" of the London Academy of Music gave a Concert on the 21st ult., at St. George's Hall, Mr. A. Pollitzer conducting the orchestra (of strings), and Messrs. Visetti and Denza acting as accompanists. The orchestral pieces were rendered with remarkable grip, precision, and unanimity of expression, and as one of these was Bach's Suite in D it will be seen that this is high praise. The violin obbligato in Bach's work was played with much taste by Miss C. Fisher. Another violinist, Mr. H. Dickason, also reflected great credit upon his master, Mr. Pollitzer. The vocalists were the Misses Daisy Irvine, Teresa Blamey, C. Lynne, E. Foxcroft, C. Fuller, and T. Croft, Messrs. Charles Loder and Mervyn Dene; and Miss Bruckshaw and Miss A. Hayman played solos on the pianoforte. Many of these showed conspicuous merit; all in one way or another giving evidence of having been well taught.

In aid of the Post Office Orphan Homes a Concert was given at Holloway Hall, on the 1st ult., by the Post Office Musical Society (choral and orchestral), under the direction of its Conductor, Mr. Sydney Beckley. Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" constituted the first part, and a miscellaneous selection the second. The playing and singing generally were remarkable for entrain and intelligent appreciation of the composer's meaning, and, were space available, many instances in point might be adduced. The choir distinguished itself further by wholly excellent renderings of a new part-song by W. H. Gill, "Before Dawn," and of the beautiful "O Gladsome Light," from the "Golden Legend." The soloists were Miss Annie Marriott, Mr. Percy Palmer, and Mrs. Henry Clayton. Pianoforte pieces were contributed by Mr. J. Twyford, a flute solo by Mr. J. Finn, and the orchestra played the "Tannhäuser" March.

Miss Kate Cove gave an evening Concert at the Kensington Town Hall on Tuesday, the 8th ult. The programme opened with Mr. J. Thomas's Romance for harp and violoncello, well rendered by Miss G. Williams and Mr. H. Walenn. Miss Williams afterwards played some harp solos, displaying considerable executive ability, and Mr. Walenn was successful in Popper's "Polonaise." Miss Edith Hands sang songs by Lassen and Barnby in a sympathetic and artistic manner. Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Herbert Sims Reeves, and Mr. Henry Pope also appeared. Miss Kate Cove possesses a good soprano voice; in her opening song she was nervous, but was encored in Handel's "Lusinghe più care." She took part in Smart's Trio "Queen of the Night," and also sang "Softly sighs." There was a large and appreciative audience.

At the Hampstead Conservatoire, on the 19th ult., Mr. Harold Bauer, assisted by the Misses Ethel and Winifred Bauer, Miss Daisy Defries, Mr. Carl Engel, and Mr. H. Walenn, gave a Concert of chamber music, which included Beethoven's "Posthumous" Quartet (Op. 127), Rheinberger's Quintet, for pianoforte and strings, in C (Op. 114), and solos—for pianoforte, by Chopin, Schumann, and Rubinstein, played by Miss Ethel Bauer; for violin, by Wieniawski, played with great skill by Mr. Bauer; and for violoncello, by Popper, capitally rendered by Mr. Walenn. The Quintet was very finely played. Miss Defries's vocal efforts, which had the advantage of Mr. Bauer's sympathetic accompaniment, were much appreciated.

The Civil Service Vocal Union gave its first Concert of the season on the 3rd ult., in the Large Hall of the Cannon Street Hotel. The choir, under the direction of Mr. J. H. Maunder, gave an effective rendering of the late Mrs. Meadows-White's Choral Ballad "The Song of the Little Baltung," and contributed various part-songs, &c., including Sullivan's "Long day closes," Maunder's "Thor's war song," Williams's "Song of the pedlar," and Harding's "Flow, thou regal purple stream." Messrs. Bantock Pierpoint, G. Micklewood, and Master Porter were the vocalists; Messrs. Arthur Payne and C. Spencer West played violin and flute solos respectively, and Mr. Frederick Upton and Mr. R. Forbes Young gave some recitations.

Mr. Charles Fry gave his now popular Recital of the "Merchant of Venice" on the 16th ult. at the South London Institute of Music, and on the 19th ult. at the Hampstead Conservatoire. On each occasion Sir Arthur Sullivan's graceful Incidental Music was given—the serenade with much taste by Mr. Edwin Bryant, the orchestral portions by a competent little orchestra led by Mr. T. E. Gatehouse—conducted in the South by Mr. L. C. Venables, in the North by Mr. G. F. Geaussent. Pinsuti's part-song, "Tell me where is fancy bred" (sung at Hampstead by Miss Riversdale, Miss Tombleson, Mr. Bryant, and Mr. Burgess), and the effective "Merchant of Venice March," by Berthold Tours, also formed part of the interesting and varied programme.

The Cecilian Choral Society, Brondesbury, gave its first Concert at Brondesbury Hall, on Tuesday, the 8th ult., when the programme consisted of Lloyd's "Hero and Leander," Smieton's "Ariadne," and songs by Miss Ethel Barnard and Messrs. E. Branscombe and Wilfred Jones, who also took the solo parts in the Cantatas; the part of Phœdra in "Ariadne" being sung by Miss Renwick, a member of the Society. The works were accompanied by Mr. Sydney Cross (pianoforte) and Dr. J. A. Smith (American organ), hon. accompanist to the Society, and the Conductor was Mr. F. Leeds. The Society, which already numbers nearly sixty active members, is to be congratulated on a very promising start.

The Students and Professors of Mr. W. F. Schweir's Academy of Music, at High Barnet, gave a very successful Concert, on the 8th ult., in the Town Hall. The vocalists were Mrs. Little, the Misses Thyne, Mrs. T. C. Kingham, Miss Blake, and Mrs. Schweir; the instrumentalists, the Misses Fleming, Shepheard, Ellis, Tilden, Richards, L. Richards, Crane, Catford, L. Britten, Stevens, and M. Blake, Mrs. Eastman, Mr. F. A. Earnshaw, and Mr. W. F. Schweir, whose efforts were much appreciated by a crowded audience. Between the parts an address was delivered by Mr. H. C. Banister, who spoke in favour of elevated aims in art and study, and warmly praised the successful efforts of his friend Mr. Schweir.

Mr. F. Gilbert Webb read a paper, on the 1st ult., at the College of Organists, on "Psalm accompaniment." He contended that no portion of the Church service demanded more reverent treatment and study than the Psalms; that the lyrical element of each Psalm should dictate the style and manner of its recital; that appropriate and specific tone-colour should be used to show the connection between verses of similar sentiment; and that organists should compare their Psalters verse by verse with the versions of the Psalms given in the marginal and revised Bibles, and base the variations and treatment of the chants on the knowledge so gained, rather than on the figurative language employed by the psalmist in individual verses.

The second of four Chamber Concerts was given on the 10th ult. at St. Peter's Institute, by Miss O'Reilly and Miss Fédarb, two young pianists recently students at the Royal College, assisted by Mr. C. Jacoby (violin) and Mr. T. E. Hill (violoncello). As the programme contained such works as Mozart's Fantasia in C minor, Brahms's Violin and Pianoforte Sonata (Op. 108), Chopin's E flat minor Polonaise, and Schumann's "Faschingsschwank," to say nothing of some trifles by Bach and Mendelssohn, it will be seen that these ladies have high aims. By-and-bye, no doubt, they will realise them; at present it is sufficient to note with pleasure the earnestness, intelligence, and artistic refinement of their performances.

Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was performed by the Streatham Choral Society at its Concert on the 7th ult. The principal vocalists were Madame Clara Leighton, Miss Greta Williams, Mr. H. L. Thomas, and Mr. D. Hughes. There was a full professional orchestra, with Mr. Ellis Roberts as principal violin. The work was rendered in an effective manner; the choral singing was bright, crisp, and expressive. A good word must be said for Mr. David Hughes for his able rendering of the Prophet music. Mr. Stewart Macpherson was the Conductor, and to the earnest efforts of this talented musician much of the success of the Streatham Society is due.

The St. Mary's Choral Society gave a Concert in the Bishop Wilson Memorial Hall, Islington, on the 18th ult., when, amongst other interesting pieces, the programme included an interesting Cantata by Mr. Erskine Allon, entitled "The Child of Eve." The solo portions were sung by Miss France, Miss Dafforne, Mr. Frank Adams, and Mr. Jesse Cooper. A charming part-song, "Come to me, gentle sleep," the composition of Mr. Sidney Hann, the Conductor of the Society, was also performed for the first time and well received. The improvement shown in the singing of the Society reflects the greatest credit upon the Conductor.

A Concert was given by the Hackney Choral Society at the People's Palace, on Saturday evening, November 28, to an audience of 3,000. The programme consisted of A. R. Gaul's Cantata "The Ten Virgins" and a miscellaneous selection, including Macfarren's "Who is Silvia?" Leslie's "Troubadour," and Mendelssohn's Overture to the "Son and Stranger." The principals were Madame Edina, Miss Annie Layton, Mr. James Bovett, and Mr. Charles Phillips. The accompaniments were played by a full orchestra led by Mr. B. P. Willis, the Conductor being Mr. Thomas H. Warner. The chorus-singing was especially good.

A Concert was given under distinguished patronage, in Northfield Hall, Highgate, on the 16th ult., in aid of the Santa Claus Home, when J. F. Barnett's Cantata "The Ancient Mariner" and a miscellaneous selection were given. The soloists, the Misses Barnard and Long, and Messrs. Gostick and Broughton Black gave effective renderings of the portions entrusted to them, while the chorus, supported by a small but thoroughly efficient band, were noticeable for their good phrasing and attack. Miss Constance Long presided at the pianoforte and Mr. Henry J. B. Dart was the Conductor.

SIGNOR LAGO'S opera season at the Shaftesbury Theatre, prolonged a fortnight beyond the period originally specified, closed, on the 12th ult., with a reduced version of "Orfeo" and "Cavalleria Rusticana." The latter was, of course, the chief feature of the whole series of performances, and drew large and appreciative audiences to the last. The only incident to be recorded during the final weeks was the appearance of Mdlle. Marie Brema, the Lola of Mascagni's opera, as Gluck's hero. This promising artist showed intimate acquaintance with the histrionic requirements of the character, and sang the music with considerable judgment.

H.R.H. THE PRINCESS CHRISTIAN distributed prizes to the pupils at the admirable School for the Blind in Finchley Road on the 5th ult. Music prizes were awarded to F. W. Britton, Thomas Stoneham, Charles Goulding, J. W. Brereton, and Arthur Harris, all of whom are pupils of Mr. Barnes or Miss Garden. The three last-named pupils afterwards respectively played organ and pianoforte solos, Miss Standing sang Bishop's "Mocking Bird," and the choir (her pupils) sang glees by Calcott, Jackson, and Sullivan. The Concert was directed by Mr. Barnes, Music Professor at the School.

AT St. Gabriel's, Willesden Green, special Services have been held on the Wednesdays in Advent, when Spohr's "Last Judgment" has been sung. The choir was considerably augmented, the solos being excellently sung by Masters G. Jones, J. Davies, Henry Body, and Merrion Davies; and with the accompaniment of a small string band and a Liszt organ (Mr. F. Charlton Fry) very adequate performances have been given. Great credit is due to the Choirmaster, Mr. Henry Baker, the successful rendering of such a work being no small attainment for a choir of such recent formation.

AT the request of Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, and with the sanction of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, Sir George Grove will become the head of a "Beethoven Society" now in course of formation, the chief purpose of which will be the publication of photograph fac-similes of the scores of the great composers. A beginning will be made with the Symphonies, Overtures, and Concertos of Beethoven. It is intended that one or, if possible, two volumes shall be issued each year. The subscription is fixed at 15s. per volume.

THE Walworth Choral Society gave an excellent performance, on the 8th ult., of Mozart's Twelfth Mass, followed by a miscellaneous selection, at the Lecture Hall, Brunswick Terrace, Camberwell. The principal vocalists, Miss H. B. Fowler, Miss R. Gordon, Mr. Reaveley Long, and Mr. C. Hardy sang their respective parts in a perfectly efficient style, and Mr. F. W. Grant and Miss Carey, at the harmonium and pianoforte respectively, rendered the orchestral accompaniments in an effective manner.

THE Savage Club's experiment of providing Sunday evening Classical Concerts, so happily inaugurated last year, was resumed on Sunday, the 6th ult., when the first of five monthly Concerts was given under the direction of Mr. William Nicholl. Schubert's Pianoforte Trio in B flat was admirably rendered by Messrs. Peiniger, A. Brousil, and Septimus Webbe, and songs by Schubert and Gounod were given by Messrs. Nicholl and Grove. Messrs. Chas. Hargitt and Ernest Lake accompanied.

THE second of the Forest Hill Concerts of Chamber Music, which took place on the 7th ult., included fine performances of the third Rasoumowsky Quartet and of a Mozart Trio for strings. The executants were Messrs. M. and C. Jacoby, E. Schrattenholz, and H. Bast. Mrs. M. Schrattenholz contributed pianoforte solos, and the vocalist was Mr. Fairbairn, who was very successful with Hatton's dramatic "Revenge" and Mendelssohn's "I'm a roamer."

MESSRS. F. BESSON AND CO., the musical instrument makers of the Euston Road, have just introduced a contra-bass clarinet, extending an octave below the usual bass clarinet. The manufacturers claim for their new instrument that it will enable composers to write with greater freedom than before for reed bass parts, and to obtain a quartet entirely of clarinet timbre. Its power, facility, and richness of tone, as manifested by M. Bretonneau, were warmly approved at a private performance attended by many distinguished musicians.

AT Christ Church, Enfield, an Organ and Vocal Recital was given by M. A. Guilmant, Mr. Routledge Smith, Mr. J. Hatch, and the choir. Bach's Toccata in F and Mendelssohn's first Sonata were among M. Guilmant's pieces. The feature of the choral portion was the performance of six carols—two of the fifteenth century, from the recently published collection issued by the Leadenhall Press; two foreign, and two modern English. Mr. Bernard Fison accompanied.

AT a special Service held at St. Anne's Church, Wandsworth, on the 9th ult., Sir John Stainer's Cantata "The Daughter of Jairus" was sung by the choir augmented to seventy-five voices. The solo parts were sung by Master Henton (soprano), Mr. J. Doubleday (tenor), and Mr. Charles Rolfe (bass). Mr. Daniel presided at the organ and the Conductor was Mr. J. M. Ennis, Organist and Choirmaster of Holy Trinity Church, Knightsbridge.

A CONCERT was given at Brooke House, Upper Clapton, on the 10th ult., under the direction of Mr. Spencer Morris. The vocalists were Miss E. Dennett, Miss L. Dafforne, Mr. Wakefield Blenkhorn, and Mr. Neville Johnstone, a very promising young bass. Pianoforte solos were contributed by Miss Beatrice Lewellin, Miss Adams, and Mr. Harvey Löhr, who also accompanied.

THE St. Mark's Choral Society gave a performance of "The Messiah" in St. Mark's Vestry Hall, Battersea Rise, on the 16th ult. The solos were well rendered by Miss Stella Maris, Miss Helen Saunders, Mr. Ager Grover, and Mr. Robert Hilton. Miss Grace B. Smith presided at the pianoforte, Mr. James Connah at the organ, and Mr. H. Bray conducted with his usual judgment.

AT All Saints' Church, South Lambeth, on the 14th ult., "The Messiah" was given under the direction of the Organist, Mr. Walter Attersoll. The soloists were Miss Georgina Tear, Miss Hetty Norriss, Mr. H. D. Warwick, Mr. Charles Rolfe, and Mr. Albon Nash. Mr. Warren Tear presided at the organ.

ON the 3rd ult. an Organ and Violin Recital was given in Holy Trinity Church, Tulse Hill, by Dr. Walmsley Little and Mr. T. E. Gatehouse. A very interesting programme was presented. The choir boys sang Parker's song "Jerusalem," and the full choir rendered two Anthems in an admirable manner.

GOUNOD'S "Redemption," an Oratorio which has lost none of its popularity, was given at the thirteenth Saturday entertainment at the People's Palace last month. The performance was a good one, the best, indeed, ever given by the East London Union. Mr. Henry W. Thomas, the indefatigable Conductor, displayed his usual ability.

A PERFORMANCE of the "Creation" was given by the Kyrle Choir, under the direction of Mr. C. J. Dale, on the 8th ult., at All Saints', Notting Hill. The solos were sung by Mrs. Edwardes, Mr. Herbert Clinch, and Mr. James Blackney.

ON the 12th ult., at the Holloway Hall, Gaul's "Ruth" was performed by a band and chorus of upwards of 200. Miss Ada Loaring, Miss Bertha Read, Miss Jessie King, and Mr. Albert Fairbairn were the soloists. Organist, Mr. Belchamber; Conductor, Mr. George Hare.

AN Organ Recital was given at the People's Palace, Mile End, on the 13th ult., by Mr. B. Jackson. The programme included Mendelssohn's B flat Sonata, Bach's Fugue in B minor, and works by Handel, Merkel, Widor, Guilmant, and others.

REVIEWS.

The Beautiful in Music. A contribution to the revisal of Musical Æsthetics. By Dr. Eduard Hanslick, Professor at the Vienna University. Seventh edition, enlarged and revised (Leipzig, 1885). Translated by Gustav Cohen (1891).

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

This is, of course, a translation of the famous "Vom Musikalische Schönen," which has been spoken of by an eminent authority as "a work that marks an epoch." Its author is so well known for his hostility to the principles and practices of the Wagner party that English readers will, we are sure, welcome the opportunity now afforded of acquainting themselves at first hand with the views on which that hostility is based. Remembering the antagonism evoked in Germany by the book, it is safe to anticipate some opposition here, in spite of English indifference to philosophical investigation in art. But it is permissible to hope that even those who find themselves least in sympathy with the author's views will acknowledge his singularly keen analytical powers, his lucidity, and his unflinching thoroughness in grappling with the problems involved—problems which, we regret to say, are often complacently shirked by those who rank themselves among the enlightened. And to those who will have none of Dr. Hanslick's teaching because they cannot accept the whole of it, we recommend the inward digestion of an extract from an essay by Robert Louis Stevenson, which we have hunted up for their benefit. "Something that seems quite new," says that penetrating writer, "or that seems insolently false or very dangerous is the test of a reader. If he tries to see what it means, what truth excuses it, he has the gift, and let him read. If he is merely hurt or offended, or exclaims upon his author's folly, he had better take to the daily papers; he will never be a reader."

It may be mentioned, en passant, that in a masterly paper read before the Musical Association in 1880, Mr. Eustace Breakspeare, whilst opposing, did full justice to the remarkable merits of Hanslick's work. "It has," he said, "certainly induced writers to examine a little more carefully the boundaries and capabilities of the musical art." This is high praise, for more nonsense has been talked and written on the æsthetics of music than upon those of any other art—which is saying not a little. The volume has another merit—a rare one in works of this character, still more so when it is remembered that its author is a German—that of brevity. Dr. Hanslick says his say in little more than a hundred and fifty pages, the seven chapters into which, with a brief preface, these are divided, being respectively headed as follows: I. Æsthetics, as founded on feelings; II. The representation of feelings is not the subject of music; III. The beautiful in music; IV. Analysis of the subjective impression of music; V. An æsthetic hearing as distinguished from a pathological hearing of music; VI. Music in its relation to Nature; VII. Form and substance (subject) as applied to music. The heading of Chapter II. furnishes the key to the author's system. True, his object, as the title of the book sufficiently shows, is to analyse the beauty rather than the significance of music—two different things; but he is led to deal at considerable length with the emotional effects of the art, because he considers the errors of his predecessors to have been caused by the habit of regarding music as a language. "The principal but negative proposition of this enquiry"—we quote from the preface—". . . is mainly and primarily directed against the widely accepted doctrine that the office of music is to 'represent feelings,'" and this negative proposition is "complemented by its correlative, the affirmative proposition: the beauty of a composition is specifically musical—i.e., it inheres in the combinations of musical sounds, and is independent of all alien extra-musical notions." Hanslick does not, however, deny that music is capable of exciting emotion (or "feeling"), but only protests against the theory that emotion is the subject-matter which it is the aim of music to convey from composer to listener. He regards the emotion rather as an accidental result. "An art aims, above all," he says, "at producing something beautiful, which affects not our feelings, but the organ of pure contemplation—our imagination"; and again: "The mere fact that this particular art (music) is so closely bound up with our feelings by no means justifies the assumption that its æsthetic principles depend on this union." Moreover, he argues, "Definite feelings and emotions are unsusceptible of being embodied in music. . . . Only by virtue of ideas and judgments—unconscious though we may be of them when our feelings run high—can an indefinite state of mind pass into an indefinite feeling. The feeling of hope is inseparable from the conception of a happier state that is to come. . . . The feeling of sadness involves the notion of a past state of happiness. These are perfectly definite ideas or conceptions, and in default of them . . . no feeling can be called 'hope' or 'sadness.' . . . On excluding these conceptions from consciousness, nothing remains but a vague sense of motion, which, at best, could not rise beyond a general feeling of satisfaction or discomfort." "What part of the feelings, then," he asks, "can music represent if not the subject involved in them?" He replies: "Only their dynamic properties." "It may reproduce the motion accompanying psychical action," he says, and adds: "But motion is only one of the concomitants of feeling, not the feeling itself." In the later chapters of his book, Dr. Hanslick treats of the act of composition. "The object of every art," he tells us, "is to clothe in some material form an idea which has originated in the artist's imagination. In music this idea is an acoustic one; it cannot be expressed in words and subsequently translated into sounds. The initial force of a composition is the invention of some definite theme, and not the desire to describe a given emotion by musical means. . . . Nothing great or beautiful has ever been accomplished without warmth of feeling. The emotional faculty is no doubt highly developed in the composer no less than in the poet; but with the former it is not the productive factor. . . . An inward melody, so to speak, and not mere feeling, prompts the true musician to compose. . . . It is not the actual feeling of the composer, not a subjective state of mind that evokes a like feeling in the listener. . . . It is æsthetically quite correct to speak of a theme as having a sad or noble accent, but not as expressing the sad or noble feelings of the composer." These extracts will sufficiently indicate the general nature of Dr. Hanslick's views, though, had space been available, we would gladly have quoted from the chapter on "Music in its relation to Nature," which contains some of the very best things in the book. How Mr. Cohen has done his difficult work of translation will be evident from the intelligibility of the examples we have given. The whole book is equally clear.

My Thoughts on Music and Musicians. By H. Heathcote Statham. [Chapman and Hall.]

In this solid volume Mr. Statham has put together a variety of essays published by him at different periods in the pages of the Fortnightly Review, the Edinburgh Review, and Fraser's Magazine, together with the expansion of a lecture on "Form and Design in Music," and a hitherto unpublished chapter on "The Organ." Mr. Statham is both an able and learned writer, and as such his "thoughts" are entitled to respectful attention. But we fear that the value of the book will be seriously impaired by the writer's attitude in regard to that music and those musicians, with which and with whom he is in imperfect sympathy. The note struck in the preface—when he says: "As Mendelssohn-worship has gone, so will Wagner-worship go, only that the fall of Wagner will be greater, because his principle and method were essentially false (which could not be said of Mendelssohn), and his pretensions much more magniloquent"—this note is maintained throughout the book. Dogmatic assertions are propounded on the most insufficient grounds, as, for example: "The truth about Wagner may, perhaps, be summed up in the conclusion that he was the most remarkable charlatan who has ever appeared in art." On the other hand, if anybody presumes to disparage the genius of Mr. Statham's musical heroes he is up in arms at once. Take, for example, the case of Handel. Here Mr. Statham is immensely indignant with the authors of the article in the "Dictionary of National Biography" for denying to Handel the right to rank as a genius of the first order. Such indignation is perfectly intelligible; for ourselves, we agree with Mr. Statham's estimate. But note that the most effectual of Mr. Statham's retorts is one which recoils like a boomerang on his own head. He lays great stress on the profound veneration in which Beethoven held Handel. That in itself is an excellent point. But it is a point which can be made with equal force at Mr. Statham's expense in the case of Schubert, whom he writes down as a second-rate composer—"bourgeois to the backbone." "Poor Schubert," writes Mr. Statham, "had no touch of the heroic or chivalresque in or about him, and the heroic note is not in his songs." Poor Mr. Statham! But this is not all. "Schubert used to sleep in his spectacles that he might be ready to compose the moment he awoke, either in bed or out of it. The inference as to the toilet is pretty obvious." This fact seems fairly to have overcome Mr. Statham. What possible good could come out of a man who slept in his spectacles? The thought is too appalling! And yet Beethoven—who, by the way, was almost as slovenly in his habits as Schubert—declared that Schubert had in him the divine fire; while Schumann's and Liszt's eulogies are too well known to need repetition. Mr. Statham has set out in this article with the resolve to "smash" Sir George Grove's eulogy of Schubert in his Dictionary. "Foolish," "absurd," "bombastic" are the epithets which he bestows on Sir George Grove's biography. Nothing could be in worse taste than the tone and temper of this essay, unless it be the consistent disparagement of the "Dictionary of Music and Musicians," to which, by the way, Mr. Statham was himself a contributor. All this is the more to be regretted inasmuch as Mr. Statham's appreciations of Bach, Handel, Mozart, and Beethoven are well written and interesting, and the chapter "About the Organ" embodies a great deal of valuable information. If the title of the book is to be taken—as it very well may—to indicate that the contents represent the author's views on music and musicians as a whole, Mr. Statham must be set down in the category of those who hold that nothing of any value has been achieved in the last half-century. Schumann is only alluded to as a critic, and Brahms's name is only mentioned once. The rest is silence. He has not a word for the modern English school, good, bad, or indifferent.

Six Songs. By F. Cunningham Woods (Op. 1). [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE words of these songs have been selected from the poems of Moore, Tennyson, G. W. Thornbury, and Lord Lytton; the music shows a nice feeling for melody if not a distinct declaration of its powers. The several songs are fairly well constructed, but there is a deficiency of original treatment in the voice part and the pianoforte accompaniments are made to be too large a factor in the sum. The attention of the hearer is drawn away from that portion of the song which should claim first consideration as a song, and is almost forcibly directed to that which should be subordinated to the prime design. As the first work of the composer the songs show good teaching well applied and sufficient reason to justify encouragement to pursue the path he has set out upon.

Original Compositions for the Organ, No. 141. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS number consists of a Fantasia Sonata on the ancient melody "Dies Iræ," by Mr. Luard Selby. The composer has transposed the traditional tune to G minor, but he preserves the characteristics of the Dorian mode by avoiding F sharp. His Sonata is in three movements, of which the second, in B flat, an original and charming Allegretto headed "Lacrymosa dies illa," is the most attractive. There is, however, a great deal of effective writing in the extended Finale, the close being especially striking. Mr. Luard Selby's work will please those who like organ music not constructed on conventional lines.

The Day of Rest. A Cantata for female voices. By Josiah Booth. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

PART-MUSIC for female voices only would seem to be in great and increasing demand, judging from the large mass of compositions of this nature which at present come before us. The words of this Cantata, by Mr. Edward Oxenford, are for the most part hymn-like in character, and are studiously simple, being suitable indeed for very young singers. Mr. Booth has written several successful Cantatas for use in school, but not one more pleasing than "The Day of Rest." Of course, the music is unpretentious, but it is at the same time artistic as well as melodious. Two soloists, soprano and contralto, are required, and the choruses are almost invariably in two parts only.

For Home and Liberty. Part-song for male voices (T.T.B.B.). By Frederick Leeds. [Hart and Co.]

THIS is a clever and spirited setting of stirring words, comprising a call to arms, conflict, flight of the enemy, lament over the fallen, and song of victory. Such a poem obviously makes considerable demands on the composer, and the fact that these are well met by Mr. Leeds' music is no slight testimony to his dramatic perception and musicianly skill. The part-writing is thoroughly vocal and of sufficient variety to sustain the interest of a well-trained choir. The effectiveness of the work is enhanced by a clever pianoforte accompaniment.

Short Settings of the Holy Communion Office, No. 19. By J. R. Alsop, in E. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE characteristics of this Service are flowing melody and tasteful modern harmony combined with chaste expression and church-like dignity. Mr. Alsop writes like a musician who is well versed in all schools of sacred music and has culled something from each, preserving, however, the sober earnestness which has ever been a prevailing feature in our National Church music from the time of the Reformation onwards.

Lord of the Harvest. Anthem. By Ethel May Clapton. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE composer has selected a metrical hymn for the words, and has set them to music which is particularly noteworthy for its vigorous and expressive treatment. The opening tenor solo, though melodious, is not altogether so happily dealt with as is that portion in which the chorus is employed as accompaniment. As a whole, however, the composition is good and worthy of high praise.

FOREIGN NOTES.

THE Mozart Centenary was commemorated in a worthy manner at many of the leading musical centres of the Continent. At Vienna the cycle of the master's operas was inaugurated on November 28 with "Idomeneo," which was followed during last month by his remaining great operatic works, and in addition, as had been announced, on the 23rd ult., by the two early operettas "La Finta Giardiniera" and "Bastien und Bastienne." Special performances were also given by the Viennese Philharmonic Society. At Berlin a cycle of Mozart's operas, comprising the seven last operatic works of the master, was begun on the 5th ult., the performance being preceded by a prologue from the pen of Herr Taubert. There was also a commemorative Concert on the same day, given by the Berlin Singakademie, the programme of which included an Offertory, "Misericordias," composed in 1775, the "Adoramus," "Ave Verum," and the "Requiem." Professor Joachim played the A major Violin Concerto. Similar performances, operatic and otherwise, took place at Leipzig, Dresden, and elsewhere in Germany. At St. Petersburg a week was devoted to the interpretation of some of the master's music, including three performances of the "Requiem." There was, however, no commemorative operatic performance here or at Moscow.

Frau Amalie Joachim completed, in the last week of November, the interesting series of four Recitals illustrative of the development of the German Lied, the final one having been devoted to the composers since Schubert up to the present day. The Concerts were attended by a numerous and enthusiastic audience, and the press organs speak in terms of the highest praise of the unique artistic feat accomplished by the lady. The series was repeated by Frau Joachim last month at the Leipzig Gewandhaus.

This year's Bayreuth Festspiele are to be held from July 16 to August 19, and will comprise four of Wagner's operatic works—viz., "Tannhäuser," "Tristan und Isolde," "Die Meistersinger," and "Parsifal."

An Orchestral Suite by Herr C. Kretschmer, a son of the well-known composer of "Die Folkunger," was recently performed for the first time, and well received, at Cologne, under the direction of Dr. Wüllner.

A new opera, "Edelweiss," of the "Volksoper," or popular type, composed by Herr Komzak, was brought out successfully on November 28, at Salzburg.

M. Messager's "La Basoche," recently produced at Berlin with but moderate success, owing chiefly to an inadequate mounting of the work, was brought out, on November 29, at the Darmstadt Hof-Theater, under the direction of the composer, and was extremely well received.

The question as to whether Schumann's Cantata "The Pilgrimage of the Rose" was originally scored with an orchestral accompaniment or intended to be performed with a pianoforte accompaniment only, has been finally set at rest by Dr. Carl Reinecke in an interesting letter recently published in the Leipziger Tageblatt. The veteran Leipzig musician, it appears, was present on the occasion of the first performance of the Cantata at the composer's house, in July, 1851, when Clara Schumann played the pianoforte accompaniment, and when all present were greatly delighted with the work. After the performance Schumann, pleased with the very favourable impression his work had created, requested Reinecke, in the course of their conversation upon the subject, to undertake the orchestration of the accompaniment. The latter, though feeling much gratified by the confidence in his musicianship such a proposal implied, however, declined the task, and the orchestral part was subsequently supplied by Schumann himself—viz., in November of the same year.

A new opera in four acts, and with an epilogue, entitled "Alienor," the libretto by Edmond Harancourt, the music from the pen of Eduard Hubay, was performed for the first time on the 5th ult., at the Royal Opera of Buda Pesth, where it met with great success.

An interesting and successful Concert took place recently at Carlsruhe, under the direction of Herr Arthur Smolian, the programme consisting entirely of compositions by Frederick the Great and Prince Louis Ferdinand of Prussia.

The centenary of the birth of Peter von Lindpaintner, the once highly popular German composer (his music to Goethe's "Faust" is still frequently heard in Germany), was celebrated on the 8th ult. at Stuttgart, where he had been the principal Conductor at the Hof-Theater from 1820 until his death in 1856. Lindpaintner was born at Coblenz in 1791.

It is stated in continental papers that Anton Rubinstein has engaged himself for a series of 100 Concerts to be given in the United States during the present year, and for which he is to receive the sum of £25,000.

A comic opera, entitled "Des Königs Schwert," by the able Capellmeister of the Hamburg Stadt-Theater, Herr Hentschel, was performed at that institution for the first time on the 2nd ult., and was favourably received. The libretto is from the pen of Herr Bittong.

Anton Bruckner's Symphony in C minor, written some twenty-five years since, but recently revised by its composer (now in his sixty-eighth year), was performed at the Vienna Philharmonic Society's Concert of the 13th ult., and in its new form met with a most enthusiastic reception.

The fiftieth performance of "Cavalleria Rusticana" has recently been recorded both at the Vienna Opera and at the Dresden Hof-Theater.

M. Gevaert's opera "Quentin Durward" was revived last month at the French Theatre in the Hague, with complete success.

At the Royal Opera of Madrid a new operatic work, "El Fantasma de fuego," by Señor Fernandez Caballero, one of the ablest of modern Spanish composers, was well received on its first representation there last month. The libretto is based upon Jules Verne's novel, "Les Indes Noires."

The first performance of "Ritter Pazman," the only serious opera from the pen of Johann Strauss, the famous composer of valses and of a number of operettas, has had to be indefinitely postponed at the Imperial Opera of Vienna. At the same theatre the first performance of M. Massenet's new opera "Werther" has likewise been postponed on account of the indisposition of M. Van Dyck, who is to create the titular part.

Tschaikowski's opera "La Dame de Pique," successfully brought out some time since in the composer's native Russia, is in course of being mounted at the National Theatre of Prague.

The popularity which Grieg's Orchestral Suite "Peer Gynt" has obtained must have led many to examine that portion of the incidental music which, in 1874-5, he wrote for a stage performance of Ibsen's drama in Christiania, and which, some years ago, was published as a pianoforte duet. None can have done so without entertaining the wish that this first Suite might be followed by a second, for which the remaining numbers of the incidental music, which have not been drawn upon, furnish abundant and equally admirable material. It is satisfactory, therefore, to learn that this has at length come to pass, a second Orchestral Suite derived from the same source having been brought to a first performance at Christiania in November last, when it was so warmly received that it bids fair to become as widely known and esteemed as its predecessor. The Norwegian master, we may add, was the recipient last month of a public ovation at Christiania, on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of his first appearance as a Concert-giver in that town.

The Stockholm Opera House was finally closed on November 30 with a performance of an opera by Hallström and an afterpiece by Nordquist. The theatre, which was built under the auspices of King Gustavus III. in 1782, is to be pulled down to make room for an entirely new structure.

MM. Stoumon and Calabresi, the directors of the Théâtre de la Monnaie, of Brussels, have had their contract with that establishment renewed for a further three years.

M. Paul Dubois, the eminent French sculptor, who was to have executed the statue to be erected in Paris to the late Georges Bizet, has at the last moment declined to undertake the work on account of failing health. The artist who has now been entrusted with the task is M. Falguière, but he will not be able to take it in hand for some time to come.

Mr. Théodore Dubois, the well-known French composer, having just completed the score of an opera "Circé," the libretto by MM. Jules and Pierre Barbier, has already taken in hand another grand opera, entitled "Frithjof," for which the same authors have furnished the book.

Under the title of "La Musique et ses Représentants," our Paris contemporary Le Ménestrel is just now publishing a very interesting essay, in dialogue form, from the pen of Anton Rubinstein, translated into French from the Russian manuscript.

The one hundredth performance of M. Reyer's opera "Sigurd" was announced to take place on the 30th ult., at the Paris Opéra, on which occasion the principal female singers were to be those who have created their respective parts at the original production of the opera at Brussels—viz., Mesdames Caron (Brunehilde), Deschamps (Uta), and Bosman (Hilda).

In consequence of the recent political disturbances in Brazil the usual season of Italian Opera at Rio de Janeiro has been interrupted, and the company had to be dissolved. The directors (MM. Chiechi and Ducci) are said to be heavy losers in consequence, and much distress has been caused to many of the members of the troupe.

A medallion portrait of Francesco Florimo, the late librarian of the Naples Conservatorio, is to be added to the monument erected to Bellini at that town, the erection of which is almost entirely owing to his individual efforts. Florimo was, it may be added, a personal friend, as well as an admirer, of the composer of "Norma."

The valuable musical library hitherto belonging to the University of Pavia, consisting of some ten thousand numbers, theoretical and practical, has just been presented to the authorities of the Milan Conservatorio, by order of the Italian Ministry of Public Instruction, on account of its being of but little use to the University.

It is announced in Italian journals that Baron Franchetti, the wealthy Italian amateur and composer of the successful opera "Asrael," has taken the Brunetti Theatre, in Bologna, for the purpose of giving there operatic performances on a grand scale.

"Il Diavolo zoppo," a new operetta by the Maëstro Buongiorno, met with great success on its first production last month, at the Teatro Fenice, of Naples. Another novelty by the same prolific composer, the operetta "Il Talismano di Granata," was well received at the Metastasio Theatre, of Rome.

According to Il Secolo XIX., there are just now no less than eight Genovese composers, each having a complete new opera waiting to be accepted for performance at the Carlo Felice Theatre. They are the Maëstri Brignami, Elia, Grimaldi, Massa, Perosio, Ronco, Samengo, and Zambelli.

The coming season of opera at the La Scala of Milan comprises the production of the following works—viz., "Tannhäuser," "Il figliuol prodigso," "Vally," "La Basoche," "Les Huguenots," and "Norma."

A new opera, entitled "Barbarine," the libretto of which is founded upon a poem by Alfred de Musset, and the music composed by M. de Saint-Quentin, was performed for the first time on the 10th ult., at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, of Brussels, where the work had been most carefully prepared for weeks past. The music is said to be graceful and refined, but lacking in dramatic qualities. The work obtained little more than a succès d'estime.

The opening Concert of the season of the Stefano Tempia Choral Society, of Turin, which took place on the 13th ult., was devoted in part to the memory of both the founder of this excellent institution and his immediate successor, the programme including an "Ave Virgo," by Tempia, the "Kyrie," from Giulio Roberti's "Mass of St. Lawrence," and a portion of the Funeral Mass dedicated to the last-named much lamented musician.

Mascagni's new comic opera, "L'Amico Fritz," was brought out on November 28 at the Pergola Theatre of Florence, and was extremely well received, many numbers having to be repeated.

"Cavalleria rustico-romana" is the title of a parody upon Pietro Mascagni's successful opera, which is about to be brought out at the Teatro Rossini, of Rome. The composer of the music is Signor Angelo Piarangeli.

The new opera "Raquel," by the young Spanish composer, Señor Santamaria, appears to have met with a most brilliant reception upon its first performance on November 29, at the Royal Theatre of Madrid. The libretto is founded upon a drama by Vicente Garcia de la Huerta, the subject of which has already been utilised by Grillparzer in his drama, "Die Jüdin von Toledo."

Señor Melesio Morales, a Professor at the Conservatorio of Mexico, has written an operatic work, entitled "Cleopatra," which has recently been performed in that town with conspicuous success.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PETER CORNELIUS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—While the "Barber of Bagdad" is occupying the foremost place in the attention of the London musical world, it may not be amiss to amplify, somewhat, the able remarks of our contemporary critics.

A daily paper remarks that it was not until 1887, at Coburg, that the "Barber of Bagdad" was reproduced. I have, however, before me the playbill and criticisms of its reproduction at Munich, on October 15, 1885, when it was played for the first time there in conjunction with Alexander Ritter's "Der faule Hans" (then given also for the first time), under the able conductorship of Hof-Capellmeister Levi, who was mainly instrumental in bringing Cornelius's work to a hearing. Since that time the "Barber" has simply created a furore throughout Germany, where no operatic répertoire would now be considered complete without it.

The limits of a daily paper perhaps account for the very curt explanation that the opera, when it first saw the light thirty-three years ago at Weimar, was "a complete fiasco," and that it "only survived a single performance"; but the facts are so interesting that they deserve recording here. According to a Dresden paper (of this year) "The Cid," Cornelius's second opera, is a kind of protest against the ill-luck which the "Barber of Bagdad" experienced thirty years ago. The article continues: "At the head of the musical circle of Weimar, at this première of the 'Barber,' stood Liszt; the first-rate Hof-Capelle played, the best possible singers sang; a full house, in which the Grand Duke Carl Alexander was prominent in his box, applauded rapturously. . . . but Dingelstedt, who hated Liszt's influence, had got a good supply of sifflcurs arranged in the stalls, pit, and boxes, so that the opera was hissed down—an unheard-of thing at the Hof-Theater, and Liszt, deeply offended, left Weimar and went to Rome. Cornelius went to Vienna, and, poor as he was, but unbroken in spirit, composed there, and in Munich and Mainz, the opera 'The Cid.' He wished to prove that he was not quenched. The Grand Duke immediately commanded a performance of 'The Cid' in Weimar. In Munich, the veritable cradle of 'The Cid,' the opera was not thought of, although Cornelius became later one of the Professors at the Music Conservatoire there, under Herr von Perfall. This was at the time when Ludwig II. called Wagner to Munich. Herr von Perfall himself related, as an instance of the incredible modesty of Cornelius, that the latter had never so much as breathed a syllable about his dramatic work. Only Richard Wagner, his most intimate friend now that Liszt was gone to Rome, knew about 'The Cid,' and was perfectly enraptured with the poem as well as with the delicacy and nobility of the music; and Wagner, who was not exactly the man to go in for other people's work, proffered his services to bring out and to conduct "The Cid" in Weimar. The reply of the Weimar theatre-management was cutting and impudent, not to say foolish. It has only come to light lately among Cornelius's papers: 'The Weimar Hof-Theater (Dingelstedt!) expresses its surprise that Herr Wagner should offer himself as the conductor of "The Cid," Weimar possessing twoc onductors of its own, and needing, therefore, no extraneous help!' Is not this incredibly cutting refusal—to refuse with such motives a Richard Wagner—really splendid? And is it not a mournful illustration of the fate of genius?"

If any notoriety is better than none at all, Dingelstedt has, at least, earned for himself the renown of the young man who burnt the temple at Ephesus, and his name may be regarded as synonymous with "Dingskirchen"!

To say that Cornelius was a pupil of Liszt is a slight mistake. He was his colleague and friend, as also of Wagner, as the letters that passed between them show. A daily paper says "it is unfortunate that Cornelius accepted for a typical work of this character a plot taken from the 'Barber's Story' in the 'Arabian Nights,' a sketch which might be satisfactory as a drawing-room charade, but is hopelessly insufficient for a whole programme opera." The programme of the first performance in Munich, which I quoted above, is sufficient reply to this, where it will be seen that the "Barber" was the Finale of the evening, after the performance of an equally short (and also comic) piece, entitled "Der faule Hans."

A word about the translation, of which it would be difficult to speak too highly. To render the spirit and fun of one language so closely, so idiomatically, into another is indeed no easy task; but it is one that the Rev. Marmaduke Browne has discharged not only most ably, but con amore; and he is modest, indeed, in calling his work a paraphrase, since he has transcribed most faithfully, and almost literally, the original text, being especially successful in the "patter" songs of the barber, so difficult to render into another language.—Yours faithfully, (Pupil of Peter Cornelius).

CONSTANCE BACHE

"THE VICAR OF BRAY."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—On seeing my letter to you on this subject in the December number of THE MUSICAL TIMES, Mr. W. J. Biffen, of Tenterden, Ashford, Kent, most courteously forwarded to me an old volume of songs belonging to him with a letter in which he pointed out the similarity of one of the tunes in it to the air that I then quoted. The title of the book is "Thirty Scots Songs, adapted for a Voice and Harpsichord. The Words by Allan Ramsay. Book I.," and it was printed and sold by N. Stewart, Parliament Square, Edinburgh. The air in question is the third in this collection, and, omitting the opening and concluding symphonies, is as follows:—

"BESSY BELL AND MARY GRAY."

O Bes'- sy Bell and Ma - ry Gray, They are twa bon - ny Lass - es, They bigg'd a bower on yon burn-side, And theek'd it o'er with rash - es.
Fair Bes - sy Bell I loo'd yes - treen, And
thought I ne'er cou'd al - ter; But Ma - ry Gray's twa paw - ky Een, Gard a' my fan - cy fal - ter.

On comparing this air with the tune to the "Vicar of Bray" given last month, it is at once apparent that it is an exceedingly similar, though not quite identical, tune, and it seems a reasonable inference either that one is a corrupted form of the other or that both are derived from some older air. One of the earliest of Ramsay's productions now known appeared in 1712, when the poet was twenty-six years old, and after 1730 he may be said to have almost discontinued the profession of an author, though his death did not take place till 1757 or 1758. It is, therefore, eminently probable that "Bessy Bell" was printed in Edinburgh within a very few years of the composition of the words of the "Vicar of Bray." If it could be further shown that Colonel Fuller's troop of Dragoons, to which the author of the "Vicar" belonged, was a Scotch regiment, a fair presumption would be raised that the air quoted in your last month's issue was the original tune of the "Vicar of Bray."

I may add that Ramsay's "Bessy Bell" appears to have no connection with the song of the same title mentioned in Chappell's "Popular Music," and also that, by a curious blunder, which escaped more than one pair of eyes, September 4 was printed in my last letter, instead of September 2.—Your obedient Servant,

JOHN H. MEE.

Kettel Hall, Oxford, December 17, 1891.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—May I take the liberty to suggest that in the letter of Mr. John H. Mee, published on the first of this month (p. 745), there is an error of date in your correspondent's quotation in reference to the air of this old song? The last day of the old style was Wednesday, September 2 (not 4), and the next day, Thursday, was the 14th; the intermediate numbers, September 3 to September 13 inclusive, had no place in our calendar of 1752.

Your obedient Servant,

KANT O'PHERMO.

THE VIENNA EXHIBITION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—As the question of finance seems one great impediment in the way of sending the Royal Choral Society to represent English choral singing at Vienna, might not that be partially removed were some of our great vocalists to volunteer their services and assist in a popular Oratorio at the Albert Hall, the proceeds to be given towards the cost of the undertaking? If the orchestra could also give their services and the choir forego their complimentary tickets, the proceeds would be still greater.

THE GRESHAM LECTURES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—In your notice of the Gresham Lectures, delivered in November by Professor Bridge, I observe you give the attendance at the four Lectures as 2,002. Will you allow me to draw the attention of the authorities, through your columns, to the advisability of these Lectures being given in some larger and more commodious building? The Gresham College theatre is doubtless an excellent lecture room for a limited number, but the sufferings inflicted upon those who attend, from the state of the atmosphere and from crowding, are very considerable. Dr. Bridge has, by his learned and interesting style, raised these Lectures to a high degree of popularity; and in spite of the entrance being free, I think that a very small section of those who attend go there for mere amusement, though naturally enough a few may be drawn there simply by the musical illustrations, as a new kind of exhibition, set off by the spice of humour which the learned Professor infuses into his discourses. I do not know what are the exact rules laid down by the Gresham foundation, as constituted at present, or how the locus in quo is limited; but it is not far to go in the City for a larger building, and one of the City Companies, or several in turn, might not be averse to lending their halls, though the point of expense would naturally have to be considered. Another point: the Gresham College exits are, to say the least, peculiar; and an alarm of fire would, at the Lectures I have attended, have had disastrous results.—Yours faithfully, Lincoln's Inn, December 4, 1891. Q.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.*

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music is always kept in stock, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

LAMBERT (Blackfriars).—Madame Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt died at Malvern, November 2, 1887.

L. V. B. (Liverpool).—Schindler's "Life of Beethoven," translated by Moscheles, is the best book; but the article "Beethoven," in Sir George Grove's Dictionary, contains later information, and is, on the whole, the best "Life" available in the English language.

P. S.—Hummel's Mass in D is not published folio size either here or abroad.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

ABERDEEN.—An excellent biographical and critical Lecture on Mozart was delivered by Mr. R. B. Bateman, at Queen's Cross Free Church, on the 14th ult., illustrated by vocal and instrumental selections.

BASINGSTOKE.—A successful performance was given at the Drill Hall on Tuesday, the 1st ult., to a large and appreciative audience, when a new Operetta in two acts, entitled Don Pedro, was presented. The music, which is composed by Mr. Frank Idle, is graceful and most melodious throughout, the concerted pieces being very harmonious and, when the subject demands it, dramatic—notably in the Finale to Act 1. The libretto is by Mrs. Edward Adams, who has succeeded in developing an interesting plot, and in providing Mr. Idle with some charming lyrics. The several characters were admirably represented by Miss Blanche Powell (soprano), Miss Hannah Jones contralto), Mr. William Philp (tenor), and Mr. Musgrove Tufnail (baritone)——The first Concert of this season of the North Hants Amateur Musical Society was given in the Town Hall on the 11th ult. The choir showed much improvement, especially in the singing of the Trios for female voices by King Hall, "April" and "Daffodils." Spohr's Hymn to St. Cecila and Gounod's Gallia, accompanied by the orchestra, were the remaining choral portions of the programme. The orchestra was heard in Schubert's Symphony in B flat, Overtures La Caravane (Grétry) and Don Giovanni, and a Minuet and Trio by W. S. Hoyte. The solo vocalists were Miss Kate Cove and Mr. H. L. Thomas. Mr. Chas. Griffiths and Mr. H. E. Powell divided the duties of Conductor.

BUENOS AYRES.—An entirely successful Organ and Vocal Recital was given in the American Episcopal Church on November 13 last, by Mr. H. G. Wellby, Organist of the Church, the vocalists being Miss M. Lee and Miss Nicholson. The choral pieces included Gounod's "Ave Verum" and "Send out Thy light." The names of Stainer, Barnby, and H. S. Oakeley were also in the programme.

CHELTENHAM.—A Mozart Centenary Concert was given here on the 5th ult., conducted by Dr. Dyer. Mr. Burnett led the orchestra. The programme included Symphony in E minor, and D minor Pianoforte Concerto (solo pianist, Mr. van Holst); the Overtures to Don Giovanni and Figaro, with selections from those operas, also "Splendente te, Deus," "Placido è il mar," and "Godiam la pace," the three latter numbers well rendered by a chorus of picked voices, trained by Herr Lortzing. Mrs. Hutchinson, Mr. de Terras, and Mr. Montagu Worlock were the solo vocalists, who all received well merited encores.

CHESHUNT.—The first Concert of the fourth season of the Choral Society took place in St. Mary's Hall on the 3rd ult. The programme comprised the Hymn of Praise and a miscellaneous second part, including Nicolai's Overture to the Merry Wives of Windsor. A small but efficient orchestra, led by Mr. S. D. Grimson, and assisted by Professor W. A. Todhunter, at the pianoforte, played the accompaniments. The chorus acquitted themselves admirably. The soloists were Miss Florence Monk, Miss Barbara Pearce, and Mr Albert James, all of whom gave complete satisfaction. The choir sang several part-songs with much taste and expression, a pleasing variety being the introduction of Sullivan's "Beleaguered" for male voices. Mr. W. D. Butt, the Hon. Conductor, directed the Concert with conspicuous ability.

DARTFORD.—Spohr's Last Judgment was given in the Parish Church on Monday evening, the 14th ult., by the choir of the Church, assisted by the local Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Samuel Jessop (the lately appointed Organist of the Church), and with Mr. Henry J. B. Dart (Organist of St. John's, Waterloo Road), at the organ. There was a good performance, and Mr. A. Barlow's rendering of the bass solos was especially fine.

DERBY—On Friday, the 4th ult., the Musical Society gave its first Concert at the Temperance Hall. The programme contained Mendelssohn's Motet for female voices "Veni, Domine," Haydn's "Summer," part-songs by Macfarren, Leslie, Gaul, &c. The soloists were Miss Lindley, the Rev. A. Cope, and Dr. F. E. Taylor. Mr. Arthur Wilson conducted as usual.——The Orchestral Union gave its first Concert at the Temperance Hall on the 15th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur Wilson, who has filled the place of Mr. Neville Cox, he having unhappily been obliged to give up for this season owing to indisposition. Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, the Overtures to Don Giovanni and William Tell, Entr'acte from Gounod's Colombe, and Handel's Bourrée from the "Water Music" were the principal instrumental pieces; and Miss Frances Turner, of Burton, was the vocalist. This young lady gave Gluck's "Che faro" so exquisitely that an encore was the result. She also was heard to advantage in "O Lord, Thou hast searched me out" (Bennett), and two charming songs by Miss Horrocks, "An Idle Poet" and "Constant Love." The orchestra was admirably led by Mr. E. J. King.

EASTBOURNE.—Sir Arthur Sullivan's Golden Legend was given, on the 10th ult., at the Town Hall, under the direction of Dr. W. H. Sangster. The solo vocalists were Miss Emily Davies, Miss Jennie Langford, Mr. T. W. Page, and Mr. Frederick Bevan. The important orchestral accompaniments were splendidly rendered by a professional band of forty performers, while the choral portions of the work received ample justice from the choir.

HOUNSLOW.—Mr. G. H. Giles gave his annual Concert at the Town Hall on November 25. His choir of 150 voices deserve great credit for the precision and finish with which they rendered several choruses and part-songs. Misses Burford and Devonshire and Mr. T. W. Turner were the chief soloists, and did well. The same may be said of Miss Talbot (violinist) and Mr. Dimes (clarinet). Mr. W. Tyacke George exhibited high executive skill and artistic expression in Raff's Rigaudon for pianoforte, and in the numbers he accompanied.

LEE.—Spohr's Last Judgment was performed at the Parish Church of St. Margaret, on the 16th ult., by the ordinary choir of the church and a small orchestra of well-known professionals, led by Mr. Alfred Burnett. The solos were admirably sung by Master Willie Gordon, Mr. Colston Regan, and Mr. Macdonald Beaumont. The choruses were given in a manner that showed most careful training. The members of the orchestra contributed in a large degree to the success of the performance. Mr. W. Rayment Kirby presided ably at the organ, and the work was conducted with judgment by Mr. Howard Leask.

LONG EATON.—A Concert was given in the Literary Institute on Tuesday, the 1st ult Miss Marjorie Eaton made a most favourable impression in the "Ave Maria" by Gounod (violin obbligato by Miss Dawes). "Bid me discourse" also gave excellent scope for the flexibility of her voice of unusual range, and she gave an admirable rendering of Dr. Mackenzie's two songs "Hush thee, my babie," and "If love were what the rose is," all of which were enthusiastically encored. The other vocalists were Miss Morris, Mr. Dunkerton, and Mr. Rowland Hill. Mr. J. W. Chambers recited, and an orchestral band played some selections. Mr. E. Swift accompanied most ably.

LUTON.—Farmer's Oratorio Christ and His Soldier was given in Christ Church by a largely augmented choir on Tuesday, the 8th ult., the soloists being Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. Sworder, Miss Foote, Mr. Haberfield, Mr. Wright, and Mr. Locke. The band, under the leadership of Mr. Manning, performed its part with credit, and the chorus did their work remarkably well. Mr. A. Hayward conducted, and Mr. Lambert (Organist of the Church) presided at the organ.

MAIDENHEAD.—On the 1st ult. the Philharmonic Society gave its first Concert in the Town Hall, before a large audience. The programme included Haydn's Seasons (Parts 1 and 2) and a short selection of vocal and instrumental music by Mozart, Schubert, C. H. Lloyd, Salaman, Schytte, Scharwenka, &c. The principal artists were Miss Bessie Holt, Mr. J. Wright, and Mr. E. Jackson. Conductor, Mr. J. G. Wrigley. The performance was excellent, the chorus-singing, as usual, being a special feature throughout. A new part-song by Cowen, "Rowing Homewards," is very well written for unaccompanied singing, and doubtless will soon be very popular.

MALPAS.—The Musical Society gave a Concert in the Jubilee Hall on the 14th ult. The first part consisted of selections from Judas Maccabæus, solos by Miss Marjorie Eaton and Mr. Lloyd James. In the second part (miscellaneous) Miss Eaton had a double recall for her artistic rendering of Dr. Mackenzie's songs "Hush thee, my babie," and "If love were what the rose is." Mr. Edwardes conducted with much skill, the choruses reflecting great care on his teaching.

MIRFIELD.—On the 3rd ult. the Choral Society performed, for the first time, the new Cantata, The Great Day of the Lord, by Mr. W. Clark Ainley, Organist of the Parish Church. The words have been chosen by the Rev. H. Walsham How, Vicar. The Cantata is divided into three parts:—(1) The Preparation for the Great Day; (2) The Coming of the Lord; (3) The Consummation of all things. The composer has entered thoroughly into the spirit of his work, which contains thirty-four numbers. The performers numbered about 100, including the following principals: Madame Hardy (soprano), Miss Helen England (contralto), Mr. Sandwell (tenor), and Mr. William Riley (bass), all of Huddersfield. The composer, who is also Conductor of the Society, was heartily received on taking his position in front of the chorus. The hall was well filled. The work was loudly cheered at the close of an excellent performance.

NANTWICH.—The Musical Society gave a performance of Van Bree's St. Cecilia's Day in the Town Hall, on the 7th ult. The solos and recitatives were throughout admirably sustained by Miss Marjorie Eaton, who gave a careful and accurate rendering of her part. Her voice is of great range, and her execution facile, finished, true, and graceful. In the second part Miss Eaton sang, with much feeling, Dr. Mackenzie's two quaint songs "Hush thee, my babie," and "If love were what the rose is," and joined Mr. Dean in the duet "A night in Venice." Mr. A. J. Smith deserves commendation for the way in which he conducted. Mr. Hassall led the band and Mr. Harry Smith was an efficient accompanist.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—Under the auspices of the London College of Music, Mr. George Dodds has just concluded a series of ten Lectures on the "Theory of Music," which have been given to school teachers in the Young Men's Christian Association on Saturday mornings. The Lectures have been characterised by great clearness of exposition and brilliancy of expression, and the local press have been unanimous in their praise. Mr. Dodds will commence a second course of Lectures on "Harmony" in February.——The Giglio Concert at the Theatre Royal, on the 18th ult., proved one of the most brilliant events in the busy Northern city. Signorina Giglio is the daughter of Miss Emily Cross (Mrs. Ernest Jobling), the well-known actress; she studied in Italy, and before returning appeared on various Italian stages. For so interesting a début the theatre was packed from floor to ceiling. The young lady was naturally somewhat nervous in her first song, the Rondo from Sonnambula, but later on her pure and sweet and well-trained voice was heard to great advantage in Gounod's "Ave Maria," and in Blumenthal's "Venetian Boat Song," which she sang with Miss Marian McKenzie, and in a duet by Goring Thomas with Mr. Orlando Harley. Signorina Giglio has every reason to be satisfied with the brilliant reception accorded to her. Madame Hildegard Werner's clever "Mignon" string orchestra contributed to the attractions of the evening. Mr. Carrodus was another great attraction, and his solos were received with enthusiastic applause. He also played the violin obbligato to the "Ave Maria." An amusing little sketch by R. W. Walker, entitled "Her New Dressmaker," was admirably played by Miss Emily Cross and Mr. F. W. Wyndham.

NICE.—Mr. Alfred Alexander gave an Organ Recital at the American Church on the 10th ult. His programme included Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor and Mendelssohn's Sonata in D. Part-songs were well rendered by the choir, and solos were sung by Miss C. Partridge, Miss E. Kelly, Mr. Hagyard, and Mr. F. Freeman.

PENRITH.—A performance of Handel's Messiah was given in the Market Hall, on the 11th ult. The soloists were Miss Marjorie Eaton, Mrs. Mornington, Mr. T. E. Gledhill, and Mr. Rickard, who all sang their solos excellently, Miss Eaton giving a beautiful rendering of "Rejoice greatly," and "I know that my Redeemer," which she sang most devotionally. The band was led by Mr. Crozier, of Carlisle. The singing of the choruses showed the great care which the Rev. W. J. Marsh had bestowed upon the training of the Choir.

Portsmouth.—Mozart's Requiem, and songs, choruses, &c., from his operas and sacred pieces were given by the Philharmonic Society's chorus and orchestra at the Town Hall on the 16th ult. Mrs. Mason, Miss Annie Wilson, Mr. E. Houghton, and Mr. A. Tucker were the soloists, and Mr. J. W. D. Pillow the Conductor.

Reading.—On November 25 a Violin and Pianoforte Recital was given in the Town Hall by Messrs. W. H. Phelps and J. W. Speaight; vocalist, Miss Caroline Jannings. The first movement of Max Bruch's Concerto in D minor and a new Sonata (MS.) by Dr. Alan Gray, in G major, and pianoforte solos—Ballade in A flat (Chopin) and Polonaise in A flat, together with Mendelssohn's "Spinnerlied," were the chief works performed. Several songs were contributed by Miss Jannings. Mr. J. W. Speaight accompanied.——A Morning Concert was given on the 5th ult. by the Berkshire Amateur Musical Society, at which Romberg's Lay of the Bell and a miscellaneous selection were given. Vocalists, Miss Aylmer Jones, Miss Katherine Allen; Messrs. Harry Stubbs, F. Gomer Waterer, and Col. Colebrooke Carter; solo pianoforte, Fräulein Hubert; solo violin, Miss M. Venables; leader of orchestra, Mr. Chas. Griffiths; Conductor, Mr. J. C. B. Tirbutt.——The first Subscription Concert of the season of the Philharmonic Society was given on the 8th ult., Mozart's Twelfth Mass and Sullivan's Prodigal Son being the works performed. Soloists, Madame Agnes Larkcom, Miss Minnie Kirton, Mr. Charles Chilley, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint; leader of the orchestra, Mr. A. F. Rippon; Organist, Mr. J. C. B. Tirbutt; Conductor, Mr. W. H. Strickland.

Ryde.—A highly successful Mozart Centenary Concert was given at the Town Hall on the 14th ult., by the Choral Union, aided by Miss Kate Flinn, Madame Schluter, Mr. Phillip Tomes, Mr. Charles Tinney, and a small orchestra. The Conductor was Miss Margaret F. Fowles; Miss Kate Spanner was at the pianoforte, and Mr. Rutland at the organ.

Sherborne.—Spohr's Last Judgment, Part I., was sung in Sherborne Abbey by the choir, on Thursday evening, the 17th ult. Mr. G. E. Lyle presided at the Organ.

Sydney.—The City Organist, Mons. Auguste Wiegand, has given a large number of Organ Recitals in the Centennial Hall during the past six months, to the great delight of lovers of the king of instruments. His répertoire has been very extensive, all styles, schools, and epochs being represented. The artistic and executive powers of the famous Belgian organist are so well known in Europe that criticism is unnecessary; it is sufficient to say that M. Wiegand always sustains his reputation.

Swinton.—The Vocal Society gave its third Concert on the 15th ult., consisting of selections from The Messiah and songs. The principals were Miss Marjorie Eaton, Miss Wolstenholme, Mr. Lawton, and Mr. S. R. Cookson. Miss Eaton deserved all the applause which she received. Mr. Cookson was successful in "Why do the nations?" The singing of the choir evinced great care on the part of the Conductor, Mr. Makin.

Theydon Bois.—A highly successful Concert was given, on the 12th ult., on behalf of the organ fund of St. Mary's Church. The soloists were Madame Clara West, Madame Millard, and Mr. Charles Prickett; violin, Miss Rosabel Watson; violoncello, Miss Lillian Watson; cornet, Mr. Arthur Slade; pianoforte, Mr. William West; organ, Mr. Horace Norton. A select choir also gave some excellent part-songs.

Windsor.—The Windsor and Eton Choral Society inaugurated its season on the 2nd ult. by a fine performance of Haydn's Creation, which drew a large and appreciative audience. The soloists were Miss Maggie Davies, Mr. Harry Stubbs (a local tenor of rising repute), and Mr. Watkin Mills. The orchestral accompaniments were chiefly rendered by the members of the Windsor and Eton Amateur Orchestral Society. The band and chorus numbered 120, and had been excellently trained by their Hon. Conductor, Mr. W. Parratt, Organist of St. George's Chapel. The Concert was in every sense a great success, and as the first of the fifty-first season of the Society, augured well for its continued prosperity.

Organ Appointments.—Mr. James Griffin, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Saint-Austell, Cornwall.—Mr. J. Welsh Leith, Organist and Choirmaster to Dundas Street E.U. Church, Glasgow.—Mr. R. H. Parkerson, Organist and Choirmaster to the Congregational Church, Bexhill, near Hastings.—Mr Ernest H. Smith, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Bede's Church, Liverpool.—Mr. John George E. Leach, Organist and Choirmaster to Talgarth Parish Church, Breconshire.—Mr. R. H. Whall, to St. Mary's, Huntingdon.—Mr. Arthur Briscoe, Organist and Director of Choir, Highbury Quadrant Congregational Church.—Mr. Charles W. Setchfield, Organist and Choirmaster to Wesleyan Church, Caledonian Road.—Mr. Hugh Richard Owen, Organist and Master of the Choristers in the Private Chapel of the Countess of Craven at Ashdown Park, Shrivenham, Berks.—Mr. T. Smith, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Peter's, Highgate Hill.

Choir Appointments.—Mr. F. L. Kett (Choirmaster), to St. Mildred's, Lee.—Mr. Nelson J. Stokes (Alto), Manchester Cathedral.

AN ORATORIO, COMPOSED BY

GEO. SHINN, MUS. BAC., CANTAB.

(SUITABLE FOR CONCERT ROOM OR CHURCH.)

Price 2s. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; Sol-fa, 1s.

The Work has been performed in various parts of London; also at Bristol, Brighton, Boston, Chelmsford, Chesterfield, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Gloucester, Hastings, Ipswich, Liverpool, Leicester, Manchester, Portsmouth, Sheffield, Wigan, Whitby, and other places, having been repeated in many instances.

"May be highly commended as an interesting and valuable addition to our shorter Oratorios and Cantatas, and contains several solos of much beauty; also duets, quartets, and choruses in great variety."—Sunday School Chronicle.

"The music is appropriate, interesting, melodious, and but of moderate difficulty. The work is one of Mr. Shinn's best efforts, and we all know that Mr. Shinn has written some charming music."—Essex County Chronicle.

"In our judgment no better work of the kind has yet been published. It is brimful of pretty melodies, and the harmonic effects show the skill of a painstaking and talented musician."—Free Methodist.

"The libretto is well chosen, and forms a good base whereon to compose a first-rate work. With regard to the music we feel we can hardly do it justice. . . . Where all is so good it is difficult to mention any special numbers."—United Service Gazette.

"It is cleverly written, and in an attractive style. The music is of a varied and pleasing character, so that it is likely to become very popular."—The Portsmouth Evening Mail.

"Mr. Shinn is well known, and deservedly so for his musical talent. Continuity of design and freshness of conception are apparent throughout the work. It contains many effective solos and choruses, and the music is not difficult."—South London Press.

TO BE SUNG AFTER EVENING SERVICE

WRITTEN AND COMPOSED BY

GEORGE KETT.

Peace for the soul that is weary,
With trouble and sorrow opprest;
Peace for the heart that is yearning
For freedom from sin and for rest;
Peace which the world cannot offer,
An earnest of Life that's Divine—
Jesu, we pray for Thy blessing,
And long for the peace that is Thine.

THE EPIPHANY

OR

MANIFESTATION OF CHRIST TO THE GENTILES

A Sacred Cantata

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

H. J. EDWARDS.

VOCAL SCORE, OCTAVO, PAPER COVER, TWO SHILLINGS.

MORNING POST.

The music composed by Dr. H. J. Edwards is a most suitable work for choral societies as well as for use in church during that season of the year for which it is designed. The matter throughout is excellent, the arrangement and adaptation of the words instructive and edifying. The solos are vocal and most effective, and the part-writing for the chorus well laid out. The Cantata is so arranged that it can be performed either in a sacred or secular building. It is also calculated to enlist attention as well as sympathy, for it is suggested that the congregation join in the opening hymn and in various other portions of the work. The whole shows the composer to be gifted in many ways, not least in the art of writing dignified and reverent melody and harmony.

MUSICAL TIMES.

Dr. Edwards in this new Church Cantata has so arranged his music that it is quite within the capacities of those choirs of moderate aspirations of which so many exist in the country. The vocal parts are easy yet full of well ordered effect, the organ accompaniment is massive and appropriate, and the whole work is full of beautiful thoughts in music, answering to the expressive and devotional words written and selected from Holy Scripture by the Rev. Thomas Russell.

CHURCH TIMES.

The music is highly reverent in style, and beautifully harmonised. Part II. is full of delicious strains, and the solo in A flat, "O Heaven-sent Star," must delight all who hear it, as will also the chorale immediately succeeding, "O Thou that dwellest"; and there is a charming "full" setting of Nunc dimittis at the close of the work. Conductors of choral societies and classes will do well to procure this Cantata.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

In this work we have a Sacred Cantata of no ordinary merit, and it is a pleasure to peruse a composition so finely conceived and so well wrought out. . . . There is not a single point in the work which we could wish altered; it is a worthy addition to the long line of compositions treating of various aspects of the life of Christ.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

May be strongly recommended for either performance by a church choir or small choral society. It is written in a straightforward, musicianly manner.

BRADFORD OBSERVER.

The work is divided into three sections—the Prophecy, the Journey of the Magi, and the Adoration. For principal voice parts there are two soprano recitatives and a solo, an important solo and aria for tenor, and trios for the Magi (T.T.B.), with slight incidental music for a second bass voice (Herod). Of the work for combined voices, one attractive feature is to be found in the admirably constructed recitatives, which alternate most appropriately between the tenor and bass and the soprano voices. The music of the Adoration, which forms Part III., is joyfully attuned though never blatant. The part opens with an unaccompanied quartet, "All hail," and also contains a chorus of great spirit, culminating in triumphant phrases, to which the subdued devotional setting of the Nunc dimittis, which closes the Cantata, makes a very fine contrast.

ENGLISH CHURCHMAN.

The music is descriptive, and the beautiful harmonies will well repay a careful study of the parts. The whole concludes with the grand chorus, "The Lord, even the most mighty God," while, if sung in a church, the inspired Nunc dimittis will, as is justly observed, be found a "not unsuitable end for this scene of joyful and triumphant adoration."

THE TEN VIRGINS

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

(OP. 42)

COMPOSER OF "THE HOLY CITY," "RUTH," "PASSION SERVICE," "JOAN OF ARC," &C.

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"The Cantata is replete with charming music of that school which every one can appreciate, and which found so distinguished a master in Mendelssohn. If composers would have their works popular with choral societies, it is only reasonable to expect that they will bestow a fair share of their attention upon the choruses. The old masters knew this, and there is no doubt that the fact has much to do with the long-continued popularity of their works; and there is equally little doubt, we think, that the principal cause of the failure of so many works produced now-a-days is the uninteresting nature of the choruses. Compare the choruses of the three most popular works ever produced—'The Messiah,' 'Creation,' and 'Elijah'—with a large number of modern works, and our meaning will be clear. If we mistake not, such thoughts as these passed through Mr. Gaul's mind when he set himself to compose those works which have placed him in the front rank of English composers—the 'Holy City,' 'Joan of Arc,' and 'The Ten Virgins'—and that the public endorse his views is proved by the enormous sale which these works have had."—Newcastle Daily Journal, Dec. 17, 1890.

"The subject is an excellent one for a Cantata . . . a stronger work than 'Joan of Arc.' . . . Melodious, vocal, and of moderate difficulty, and, like Mr. Gaul's earlier Cantatas, will be eagerly welcomed by societies in search of new works having these characteristics."—Newcastle Daily Leader, Dec. 16, 1890.

BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE CHOIR.—"The hall was overcrowded by an audience that was disposed to encore every other number of the work. If the verdict of a miscellaneous audience, that could have no possible reason for being favourably prejudiced, is of any account in estimating the merit of a new work, a career that will rival that of the same composer's 'Holy City' may be predicted for 'The Ten Virgins.' That Mr. Gaul should have secured this undoubted popular success with a work far more contrapuntal than any of his former works, is a remarkable tribute to his power of welding science and beauty into one whole."—Musical Times, Dec. 1, 1890.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

The above Cantata has been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral, including three numbers for Sopranos and Contraltos (The Virgins).

JOAN OF ARC

A DRAMATIC CANTATA

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

THE CHRISTIAN PILGRIM

A SACRED CANTATA

COMPOSED BY

J. E. NEWELL.

PREFACE.

The growing custom of performing complete works in places of public worship has led the composer of the "Christian Pilgrim" to hope that his Cantata may be found acceptable in choirs, where the larger and more difficult works of the great masters are often inadmissible; it contains twenty-four numbers of Solo and Concerted Pieces, and can be effectively rendered, with either Pianoforte or Organ Accompaniment.

The words are selected passages of Holy Writ and well-known Hymns, and are intended to portray the life of the Christian Pilgrim through the many trials and temptations that beset him on his heavenly way, to the final triumph of eternal life.

PART I.

1. Prelude.
2. Pilgrims here and strangers we (Chorus and Soprano Solo).
3. Grant that in the stranger's land (Chorale).
4. As when the weary traveller (Contralto Solo).
5. I was wandering and weary (Tenor and Contralto Solo and Chorus).
6. Love not the world (Quartet).
7. Beset with snares (Chorus).
8. Oft as I look upon the road (Bass Solo).
9. Lead us not into temptation (Chorus).
10. Blessed is the man (Duet—Tenor and Bass).
11. Flee from evil (Chorus).
12. The Pilgrims' March.

PART II.

13. Fight the good fight (Chorus).
14. I'm but a stranger here (Soprano Solo and Chorus).
15. Strangers and Pilgrims (Chorus).
16. Prepared the trumpet's call to greet (March Chorus).
17. The Lord my pasture shall prepare (Tenor Solo.)
18. Yea, though I walk (Quartet).
19. It is near, it is near (Chorus).
20. Dear Lord, I see my home (Soprano Solo).
21. Blessed are the pure in heart (Chorus—Female Voices).
22. I have fought a good fight (Bass Solo).
23. Thine for ever (Duet—Soprano and Contralto).
24. The gates, the gates are open (Chorus).

THE MUSIC
MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS
SOUTHERN INDIA AND THE DECCAN

BY

C. R. DAY

CAPTAIN, OXFORDSHIRE LIGHT INFANTRY

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.

The book is illustrated by a series of admirable drawings of Indian Musical Instruments by WILLIAM GIBB. They form seventeen plates, printed in the highest style of chromo-lithography under the direct superintendence of the Artist, and will, the Publishers believe, in themselves fully justify the publication.

THE IMPRESSION IS LIMITED TO

SEVEN HUNDRED COPIES, printed on finest Plate paper, handsomely bound .. .. .. net £3 13 6

AND

FIFTY COPIES, Plates and Letterpress entirely printed on finest Japanese paper .. .. .. „ 7 7 0

The Publishers undertake not to print further copies nor publish any smaller edition, and reserve the right to raise the price after a certain number have been sold.

"A book of immense scientific as well as artistic value."—Times.

"No more interesting and at the same time authentic account of an art which, in the forms treated of, is hoary with antiquity, exists within the repertory of English literature."—Daily Telegraph.

"There is no book of the kind existing comparable with this one to which an inquirer about Indian music can turn."—Athenæum.

"The book is a splendid example of intelligent and original research."—Daily News.

"Nothing that has yet been written on Indian music, by either Hindoos or Europeans, can be compared in professional merit with the present work by Captain Day."—St. James's Gazette.

"Nothing has ever been published that can at all approach the present volume in interest. . . . One of the most sumptuous publications of recent years."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The most cursory perusal of his pages will amply bear out this modest description of the wide and exhaustive nature of Captain Day's investigations. . . . The result has been given to the world in a volume of unique importance to students of national musical literature and to scientific investigators into the origin of the scale, of melody, and of rhythm."—Daily Graphic.

"How admirably he has availed himself of his opportunities can only be fully appreciated by those who have made a personal perusal of the exhaustive and masterly treatise just issued by Messrs. Novello in sumptuous édition de luxe form, with a set of magnificent coloured plates representing nearly forty different instruments. . . . Apart from the very great value of the work to the scientific historian of the evolution of music, we make little doubt that it will meet with a cordial welcome in India."—Globe.

"As the work of an enthusiast, this elegant volume is a valuable addition to the histories of national music. . . . The illustrations in music type, the drawings, and the coloured plates are perfect examples of what instructive embellishment should be. In every respect the work has obtained a superb setting."—Daily Chronicle.

"Captain Day's elaborate volume will be welcomed by musical antiquarians and readers as the first English publication in any way worthy of the subject. . . . The accompanying plates, printed in the highest style of chromo-lithography from drawings of Indian musical instruments by Mr. William Gibb, are among the finest examples of colour printing we have seen, and on their account alone the book would be well deserving of preservation. . . . No future explorer of Eastern song, and no historian investigating the origin of Greek and Hebrew music, can afford to ignore Captain Day's researches, which throw considerable light on the problems suggested by the scales and modes employed among primitive peoples, and are a precious contribution to the paleology of instrumental music."—Manchester Guardian.

MADAME CONWAY (Soprano)
53, Robert Street, Chorlton-on-Medlock, Manchester.
RECENT PRESS NOTICES.
"ELIJAH."—"Madame Conway sang the soprano music in her usual effective style, the scene with the Widow and the Prophet (Mr. Andrew Black) being finely rendered. She also did full justice to the great solo 'Hear ye, Israel.'"—Manchester Courier, October 29, 1891.
"MESSIAH" (Halifax).—"Madame Conway has the advantage of a simple manner, free from any affectation or exaggeration. In the brilliant bravura, 'Rejoice greatly,' she sang with an ease and absence of apparent effort which were most agreeable, while the pathos of 'I know that my Redeemer liveth' brought out still higher, if less showy, qualities."—Yorkshire Post, December 18, 1891.
"Madame Conway was the star of the evening, her rendering of 'My dearest heart' and 'Bid me discourse' being equal to anything the Chester public have heard of late. She was enthusiastically encored on both occasions."—Chester Guardian, December 19, 1891.
"ELIJAH."—"Madame Conway thoroughly justified the choice of the Society in her rendering of the soprano music."—Northwich Guardian, December 26, 1891.
"Madame Conway's singing of 'My dearest heart' was magnificent, her phrasing and perfect articulation, combined with a voice of great power and beauty, made this the treat of the evening."—Mexboro' Times, December 11, 1891.
"We have never heard Madame Conway to better advantage, her powerful soprano voice filling the theatre; expression, taste, and feeling being most prominent, and classifying her as an artist of the first order."—Wigan Examiner, January 13, 1892.

MISS EMILY DAVIES (Soprano)
Address, Severn House, Seven Sisters' Road, Finsbury Park, N.

MISS ELEANOR DAY (Soprano)

MR. JAMES LEYLAND (Tenor)
(Of St. Andrew's, Wells Street, W.)
Walsall Philharmonic Society, December 26, 1891.—"The tenor, Mr. James Leyland, was in splendid voice, and really I liked him the best of the Quartet, though the other artists were indeed excellent. Mr. Leyland was very impressive in 'Comfort ye,' and in 'Ev'ry valley' he was brilliant. The touching recitative 'Thy Rebuke' was beautifully rendered; and the great tenor show song, 'Thou shalt break them,' fairly aroused the enthusiasm of the audience. We shall all be very pleased to hear Mr. Leyland again."—Walsall Observer.

Extract from Daily Telegraph, Thursday, July 26, 1888.
Chester Triennial Musical Festival.—"Golden Legend."—"Great praise was also deserved by Mr. Grice, a young baritone, whose appearance in the part of Lucifer marked him out as one before whom, in all probability, there is a considerable future. Speaking for myself, I do not wish to hear Lucifer's music better sung than by this artist. Mr. Grice's method and intelligence, as displayed this evening, frankly encourage sanguine hopes of the service he will render in time to come."

MISS

MARIE HOOTON

(CONTRALTO)

(Late Westmoreland Scholar and Parepa-Rosa Gold Medalist of the Royal Academy of Music) begs to announce that after February 1 she will permanently reside in London.

For particulars as to terms for Operas, Oratorios, Cantatas, At Homes, and Miscellaneous Concerts, please address (in first instance) to 37, Torrington Square, Bloomsbury.

N.B.—Miss Hooton will be happy to quote special en route terms for the North of England and Scotland during March.

"Miss Marie Hooton has a lovely Contralto voice, perfectly even throughout its entire register, and uses it with the utmost skill. Her rendering of 'He was despised' was very fine indeed, and the same remark applies to 'O rest in the Lord,' but her best effort was Cowen's lovely 'Light in darkness,' which was perfectly sung. Miss Hooton created a profound impression, and all who heard her will be glad to hear her again. If she fulfils her early promise we predict for her a successful career, and one which will reflect great credit to her native county."—Derbyshire Advertiser, September 27, 1889.

"The Recit. 'Elijah, get thee hence,' was exquisitely rendered by Miss Hooton, who possesses a Contralto voice, rich in quality and powerful enough to suit any hall, however large. Miss Hooton's singing is artistic and full of expression, and that she will ere long become one of our best Contraltos if, indeed, she is not entitled to that distinction already, I have not a shadow of doubt. Miss Hooton's rendering of 'O rest in the Lord' was an exceptionally fine effort, and had the Conductor permitted it the audience would have had it repeated."—Northern Review, December 11, 1889.

(Principal Tenor of the new American Opera Company)

Returns to America for the Grand Opera Season, Philadelphia, at the end of May.

For Concerts, Oratorios, &c., address, 36, Percival Street, C.-on-M., Manchester.

"CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA."

Produced for the first time in English at the Lenox Lyceum, New York, October 1, 1891.

"The numbers which aroused most enthusiasm last night were the Barcarolle, exquisitely sung behind the scenes by Mr. Clarke; the poignant Duo of Santuzza and Turiddu; the Intermezzo, the Drinking Song, and Turiddu's Farewell."—New York Herald, October 2, 1891.

"We could not choose but feel with Mr. Payne Clarke and Madame Jannchowsky in the admirable scenes which they interpreted together. They appealed not only to our ears, but to our hearts."—New York Herald, October 4, 1891.

"Mr. Payne Clarke made a fine impression, and easily sustained the high reputation he brought to Mexico. Within the memory of the 'oldest inhabitant' can be found no such tenor voice."—Anglo-American, City of Mexico, April 6, 1891.

"The sensation of the evening was the singing of Mr. Payne Clarke as Lohengrin."—The Two Republics, City of Mexico, April 10, 1891.

"Payne Clarke is making an excellent impression at the Grand Opera House. He is the best English tenor heard here for a great many years. He must be credited with a really fine success as Don José in 'Carmen.'"—The Item Philadelphia, August 23, 1891.

"Payne Clarke made a splendid Lohengrin."—St. Louis Globle Democrat, May 14, 1891.

"A beautiful rich tenor voice."—Evening Sun, New York, May 26, 1891.

"Mr. Payne Clarke gave us the pleasant surprise of a genuine 'Verdi' tenor of delightful timbre and peculiarly fluent and agreeable delivery, which somehow took us back to the palmy days of Italian Opera, when the tenor seemed to 'pour' his notes upon our ravished ears, instead of straining them painfully through our tortured sympathies."—Daily Critic, Washington, November 19, 1890.

"MESSIAH," St. George's Hall, Liverpool.—"Both in the reposeful and declamatory passages which fall to the tenor soloist, Mr. Clarke, whose voice is of the rarest quality, was eminently successful."—Liverpool Mercury, December 30, 1891.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

FEBRUARY 1, 1892.

MUSICIANS IN COUNCIL.

Whatever the National Society of Professional Musicians may have done, or is doing, in matters with which we are not now immediately concerned, all who are interested in the art have reason for satisfaction with the Annual Conferences, the latest of which was held in Newcastle last month. Judiciously managed, these gatherings may have an important influence upon the art; serving also to dissipate some prejudices regarding its professors. Musicians are popularly looked upon as quarrelsome, impracticable folk; and in that capacity even worthy of scientific examination. It is not unusual to meet with suggestions pointing to reasons, psychical or physical, or both, why the spirit of discord should be so much at home with the ministers of a gentle art. We are unable to say that the common belief is altogether groundless, but its intensity should abate as, year by year, the National Society of Professional Musicians holds its conferences and presents the edifying spectacle of brethren who, pro tem., dwell together in unity and pursue a common object with one mind and soul. But consequences more important are possible. This musical parliament is neither legislative nor executive beyond its own limits. It cannot make laws or enforce the observance of laws; but it can talk, and if it talk well there is hope of good results for the art in general. We propose now, in brief space, to consider what was said at the Newcastle Conference, in so far as it had an interest for outsiders.

Mr. W. H. Cummings introduced as a subject for consideration, "The Relation of Poetry to Music." It is time that this matter should be considered, because there is an obvious tendency at the present day to push reaction against what was objectionable in the practice of the past to an extreme calling equally for regret and reprehension. It would, perhaps, be rash to say that at one time composers gave no heed to the words for which they wrote music. We do not suppose any of them went quite so far as that, but it is true that they made poetry unduly subordinate to their own art. Musical form and effect were with them a first and chief consideration, and of the two divine sisters, one was treated as a poor relation, ordained to "fetch and carry" for the other. Against this inartistic state of things there was bound, sooner or later, to be protest; and protest, when it did come, met with so much support from enlightened opinion that reform followed. In proportion to the felt need of any change is the danger that it will be pushed too far. As a rule, however, the wise and thoughtful men by whom reform is set on foot do not carry it to extravagant lengths. The mischief is done by those who join the movement when it becomes strong, and are neither wise nor thoughtful, of which truth the story of the French Revolution affords a striking and terrible example. But, be this as it may, we now find, instead of the undue subordination of poetry to music, a state of things exactly the reverse. The pendulum of change has swung past the juste milieu, or, as we sometimes call it, the golden mean, and has reached a point on the opposite side as high as the one from which it started. That is the way of pendulums. Music is thus being degraded to a condition of abject servitude, in which there are neither privileges nor rights—in which, as presented by some composers, music lacks the qualities entitling it to the name it bears. This, to reflective minds, presents a serious consideration, and we are glad that Mr. Cummings, in a judicial manner and with proper moderation of thought and word, laid it before the Newcastle Conference. Its main proposition appears to be stated in the following:—"The thought, the sense, and the sentiment of poetry can be conserved, nay, enhanced, within the limits of musical composition." We take it that by "conserved" Mr. Cummings meant adequately expressed, and by "musical composition" he intended that art as practised by the classical masters. So put, the thesis is one for the dispassionate consideration of all who are interested in music, and the object should be to establish some compromise between the extreme claims advanced on both sides. We may depend upon it that truth is to be found about midway. In commending the subject to reflection, let us express an individual opinion that the pretentions of music should always be considered in a very liberal spirit. In point of theory, it may be proved up to the hilt that the rights of poetry are equal to those of the allied art; it may even be shown that they are superior, but we all know that in effect music takes precedence. In any work claiming our acceptance, the poetry may be good; the music must be good. The attention we instinctively give to the one is beyond comparison greater than that bestowed upon the other, and in determining the verdict upon opera, oratorio, or cantata, music must be the first consideration. This belongs to the very nature of the case and cannot be changed. It is, therefore, a matter not to be overlooked in the process of arriving at a conclusion as to the relative claims of the two arts when in alliance.

The Newcastle Conference had before it also the subject of the musical education of children, introduced by "A Few Thoughts" from Mrs. Roskell, who has, if our information be correct, recently removed from Penarth to London, where she is likely to do good service as a professor of the pianoforte. From the report of Mrs. Roskell's paper, and the remarks of the Chairman (Mr. W. H. Cummings), the fact seems pretty clear that attention was called to further materials for a "royal road" into the domain of our art. We do not believe much in royal roads. The story goes that when a ruler of Russia (Catherine of dubious memory?) proposed a certain progress through her dominions, the favourite minister of the day had the route made very smooth, and the view from it liberally embellished with sham villages, in appearance both picturesque and prosperous. The Czarina, no doubt, enjoyed her fool's paradise. Nevertheless, much can be done with children by varied application of the principle exemplified in the parable of the donkey and the bunch of carrots. Mrs. Roskell has faith in the carrots, and, perhaps, she is right. Let us add, however—since we have stooped to homely illustration—that "you cannot make a silk purse out of a sow's ear." The musical faculty is a gift. A child not endowed with it vainly studies music at all; a child who has it scarcely needs enticing. Discussion of this subject can never be very satisfactory. Everything depends upon the teacher, and the true teachers of children are, like poets, born, not made.

We note a paper on "Intonation" by Mr. Carl Courvoisier, only to say that it is too technical for discussion in this article; while, for various reasons, we pass with simple mention Mr. Ions's remarks upon "Anomalies of Notation"; those by Dr. Rea upon "Northumbrian Ballads"; and those by the Rev. Dr. Bruce on "Northumbrian Pipes."

The most important paper of the week was that read by Mr. George Riseley, who, at the Conference of 1890, drew attention to the subject of local orchestras, and on this occasion followed up with some practical proposals. We need not argue in favour of local orchestras, whether professional or amateur. The more there are of them the better for music. In point of fact, the need of them is extreme, if we are to complete our equipment for the campaign against ignorance and bad taste. It may be said that the public continue to show indifference as regards orchestral music. That is true enough, and it is indifference which musicians desire to assail and utterly rout. We sometimes hear that you can never properly know a man till you have lived with him. On the same principle, we want to bring orchestras and orchestral music into close, every-day association with the public. The result would be better acquaintance ripening into growing friendship.

The need of local orchestras granted, how does Mr. Riseley propose to satisfy it? He is quite aware of the fact that Orchestral Concerts are of no good as a business speculation. Save under very exceptional circumstances, they do not pay. If they did, keen-sighted entrepreneurs would everywhere spring up and provide them. As they don't, somebody has to make up the losses entailed. Wanted, therefore, a fund upon which to draw in such cases. Mr. Riseley suggests the subsidisation of local orchestras out of the rates, for that is what his proposed municipal grants come to. We have nothing to say against it. It would give us the greatest possible satisfaction to hear that the "conscript fathers" of every city and town in England had set apart an annual sum for the encouragement of instrumental music. Such news would be very welcome, not only for artistic reasons, but as showing that the British ratepayer, whom Disraeli charged with "an ignorant impatience of taxation," had shaken off some of his materialism and risen in spirit to heights commanding a larger horizon than that which usually bounds his view. But the change has not come, and, looking at the case with a practical eye, we see very little to encourage hope that Aldermen and Councillors will yet awhile figure as the nursing fathers of local orchestras. We all know the class from which these functionaries are taken, and they know equally well the tone and temper of their constituents. Assistance on anything like an adequate scale from municipal corporations is, we fear, hopeless for a long time to come, though it may be that a few isolated cases, in which a beginning has been made, are symptomatic of a change from the Philistinism of the past.

Mr. Riseley further advocates an application to the Government for State aid to local schools, and to County Councils for grants in furtherance of musical education. By all means let us try what can be done in such quarters. We have a good cause, and though it is true that the eagle of Victory does not always perch on the banners of the right, a good cause nerves the arm of those who fight for it. If Mr. Riseley and the Professional Musicians will only bombard Whitehall, and lay siege to every County Council in the land, we are ready to cheer them on. Only let there be no sanguine expectations such as, when disappointed, end in discouragement.

We look with entire favour upon Mr. Riseley's very practical proposal to restore orchestral instruments to the Church, and put them on the same footing as the voices. In advocating this change, it is not necessary to run down the present state of things. The practice of church music, as carried on with the means now at disposal, has wonderfully improved of late years, and the only question is whether it be possible to increase the means still further to better the results. That it is desirable to introduce orchestral instruments, we take for granted. They are necessary to the proper effect of much of the music now used in churches on festival and other special occasions, and under ordinary circumstances, as supplemental to the organ, they add much to the beauty and interest of public praise. With reference to the matter, Mr. Riseley says:—

"In the Christian Church, from the earliest time down to our own day, orchestral instruments have been employed in her services with more or less regularity, and would probably have never fallen into the desuetude that was prevalent twenty or thirty years ago had it not been for the great perfection to which organs had been brought. Of course, it saved much trouble to find one instead of many executants, and no doubt the services of the Church in small country parishes gained in dignity by dispensing with the aid of the bass viol, flute, clarinet, &c., which used to do duty as accompaniments; but although none of us, probably, would care to see that state of things revived, yet these village church bands served to keep alive a certain amount of musical talent in our rural districts, and the universal introduction of organs proved a great check to the spread of the knowledge of instrumental music, and also deprived many of the keen personal interest which they before took in the Church services. I therefore trust that my present proposal will meet with approval, and I hope to be spared to see the day when perfectly trained orchestras, well disciplined and up to their work, shall take their places in Cathedrals and other large churches side by side with the choirs, and add a fulness and completeness to the music which can never be attained by the organ alone."

We go farther than Mr. Riseley and hope to see the revival of the orchestra elsewhere than in Cathedrals and churches that are "large." The "village church band" should come back again; not, of course, as it was forty or fifty years ago, but in a condition commensurate with the general advance in musical skill. It will never do to draw a line excluding the average parish church from the scope of the proposed reform. We should, in such a case, reap for orchestral music only a fractional advantage, and leave the "musical talent in our rural districts" uncultivated and barren. The matter mainly rests with the parochial clergy, who, we sincerely trust, will regard it as favourably as do their superiors in the ministry. There is reason for special solicitude on this point, because every church that opens its doors to orchestral instruments becomes the source of a very powerful musical stimulus, working the whole year round, strengthened by religious feeling, and that pride which congregations naturally and justifiably take in the efficiency of their services. Here, we cannot but think, lies the answer to the question how best we can popularise orchestral music and instruments throughout the land, and because the National Society of Professional Musicians has been the means of securing attention for Mr. Riseley's proposals it deserves well of all who love the art.

SCHUMANN'S SYMPHONY IN D MINOR.

Students of Schumann have been given to understand, from a note prefixed to the first edition of the full score of this Symphony, published by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel as his "fourth" (Op. 120), that it was sketched in 1841, shortly after the appearance of his "first" Symphony (in B flat), but was not fully instrumented till 1851, by which time his two other Symphonies, No. 2, in C, and No. 3, in E flat, had been published, and that therefore this "fourth" Symphony, having regard to the order of its composition, should more properly be known as his "second."

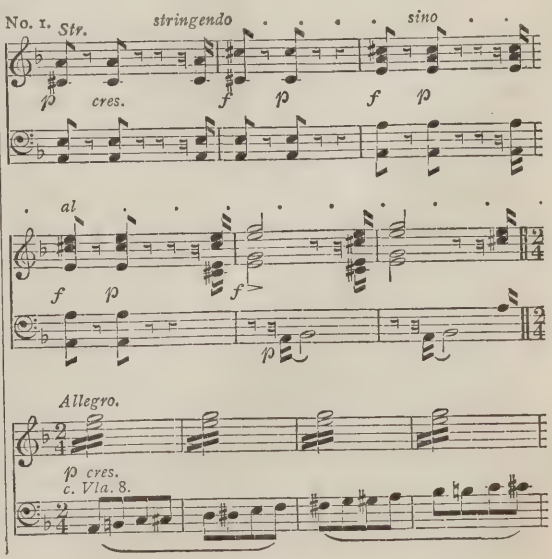
In its original form, which, as it turns out, was no mere sketch, but a complete and fully instrumented score, it was performed at Leipzig for the first time on December 6, 1841, and then, as stated above, was laid by for ten years before it received its final revision at Schumann's hands. Dr. Johannes Brahms is the fortunate possessor of the manuscript in its original form. This he confided to Dr. Franz Wüllner, of Cologne, where, on October 21, 1889, it was brought to a performance, and excited so much interest that, at Dr. Brahms's instigation, and under the editorship of Dr. Wüllner, it has recently been published by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel in their complete edition of Schumann's works.

From Dr. Wüllner's preface to the recently published edition we learn that the first page of the score is inscribed, in Schumann's own hand-writing, "Symphonie in D moll von Robert Schumann," and that the outer covering bears in pencil the direction: "Auf den schnellen Wechsel von p. und f. vorzüglich zu achten"—i.e., "The sudden changes of piano and forte should be strictly observed." It is dated on the first page June 7, 1841, and at the end September 9, 1841. This first draft of the score is a hastily written one, containing many alterations, which, however, are perfectly legible. A large number of these alterations, some of which are completely written in and some only slightly indicated, seem to have been interpolated at a later date, for the most part in red ink, now much faded, and partly in black or red pencil. These alterations, which are certainly to be regarded as improvements, have been incorporated in the new edition of the score, in the preface to which numerous examples in music-type of passages altogether struck out or amended by Schumann are also given. The new version of the score has been issued as the "Erste Bearbeitung aus dem Jahre 1841"—i.e., "The first version of 1841"; but from what has been said above it is, more strictly speaking, to be regarded as Schumann's "first corrected version, revised by Drs. Brahms and Wüllner," for in one or two instances the instrumentation of the later version of 1851 has been adopted. Thus it will be seen that it has not been the editors' aim to furnish an exact replica of the first version of the score, as might have been done by photographing it, and, as it is to be hoped, will be done some day when it comes to be included in the "Fac-similes of the Autograph Scores of the Great Composers," about to be issued, at the suggestion of Sir George Grove, by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel. They seem rather to have been prompted by the wish to supply an edition which shall not be open to objection on the ground of over-thickness of scoring, arising from too liberal a reduplication of parts, and one which eventually may be accepted as the preferable version of the two. Their good intentions probably will not be questioned, for even Schumann's most devoted admirers admit that instrumentation, especially in his latter days, was not his strongest point, but to what extent their hopes will be gratified remains to be seen. It is much in its favour that the earlier version is more thinly instrumented than the later one, that a more due observance has been shown to light and shade, and that consequently the more fully scored passages will probably stand out with enhanced brilliancy.

A comparison of the newly-issued score of 1841 with the later version of 1851, with which all lovers of Schumann are familiar, has proved a far more interesting task than the oft-repeated statement of Schumann's biographer, Josef W. von Wasielewski, that the alterations in the version of 1851 were confined solely to the wind parts and to the elimination of a guitar from the Romanza would lead one to expect. Such a statement turns out to be quite unfounded, for the later version abounds in alterations both for strings and wind; the guitar in the Romanza is conspicuous by its absence; more than one passage of the subject-matter has undergone revision; and the first and last movements must have been entirely rewritten. To furnish a complete view of the points of resemblance and difference of the two versions would therefore involve a transcription of both scores in parallel columns. This being impossible, it must suffice to call attention to some of their most salient points of difference.

Externally these two versions of the score of this Symphony differ widely in appearance, both in the order in which the instruments stand and in the marks of expression. In this earlier version of 1841 the wood-wind stands at the top of the score and the marks of expression and tempi directions, &c., are given in Italian. In the later, but first published, version of 1851 the very reverse is the case, the brass and drums standing at the top and the marks of expression, &c., being given in German. Here it seems not unworthy of the passing remark that the early version in its plan of arrangement accorded with that of his first Symphony (in B flat), but that in the "Overture, Scherzo, and Finale," which immediately followed, and in his subsequent Symphonies, Schumann adopted the more old-fashioned plan of placing the brass and drums at the top of the score. But why he should have reverted to this plan on revising and publishing his work in 1851 will probably ever remain a mystery.

On revising his score, Schumann started at once with an important alteration, adding at the commencement one-third of a bar and excising the harmony from the initial chord, and thus making it begin with the striking unison passage we are already familiar with, and, further, twice converting a single drum-tap into a roll of four bars. Further alterations in the Introduction are not of much importance until we come to the passage leading to the first Allegro. Here ten bars are reduced to seven and entirely altered. In the first version, omitting some reduplication by the wood-wind, they may be thus sketched:—



The corresponding passage in the later version starts—and, seeing that it so well prefigures the pervading figure of the Allegro, to which it directly leads, is a manifest improvement.

In the quick movement, marked Allegro di molto in the earlier version and Lebhaft in the later one, two bars of the former are compressed into one of the latter, and the inner parts are of a much more lively character. This will best be made apparent by quoting the commencement of each. The early version stands thus, the melody being sustained only by the first violins—

No. 3. Allegro di molto.

while the later one takes the following more elaborate form—

No. 4. Lebhaft.

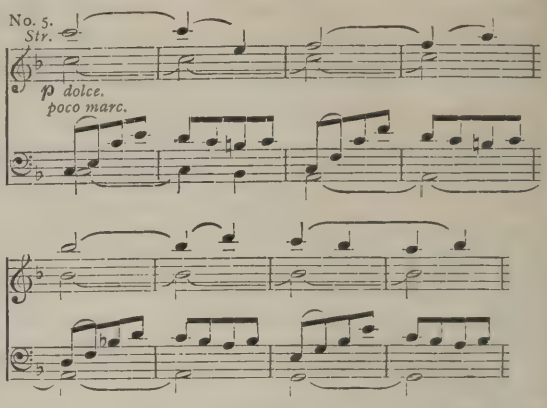
Both versions grow thicker as they proceed, but in the earlier version the melodic figure is far less seldom doubled than in the later one. In the transitional passage immediately following the first tonic full-close, as well as in the second subject proper, the doubling of parts is so much resorted to that the character of the harmony is sometimes changed—e.g., as when the root is added to a chord of the second. In the earlier version the first section is not directed to be repeated.

Throughout the remainder of this movement the same plan of reinforcing the melody by doubling it, or assigning it to a different class of instruments, has been generally followed. Indeed, on coming to revise his work, Schumann seems to have experienced the same feelings with regard to the orchestra as those which, in 1839, prompted him to write to the late Heinrich Dorn that he often wished to smash his pianoforte, which he found had become too restricted a vehicle for the full expression of his ideas. He must now have felt that his subject-matter, especially as regards its melodic side, could not be set forth in too strong a light; and hence his treatment of the orchestra with more fulness than it had received before.

We cannot forbear calling attention to an important alteration made in the accompaniment of the following charmingly melodious passage, which is marked, in the earlier version, animato, and stood thus—

No. 5.



Schumann must have been loathe to drop the motive of the first subject of the movement which he here cleverly utilised as a contrapuntal figure of accompaniment. He was right, however, in doing so, as a short relief from it at this point is by no means unwelcome, and greater freshness is added to its subsequent re-entry. The later version has—

No material alteration was made in the Romanza. It is satisfactory, however, to be able to account for Wasielewski's statement that a guitar part which he supposed existed in the first version was excised from the later one. In point of fact, Schumann left the lower stave of his earlier version blank for a guitar part, but this he never wrote in.

The Scherzo was originally prefaced by a passage of eight bars for trumpets and horns. This Schumann amended for one for trumpets only, but subsequently struck out both. Except, therefore, for the reinforcement of a few isolated passages, of no great importance, it remains pretty much the same as in the first version.

Considerable changes were made in the Introduction to the Finale. The oft-repeated figure from the first Allegro is thinned down in the later version, and the last four bars of the first version, which end with a running scale passage, leading directly to the Finale, have been extended to seven and complemented with a long pause on the chord of the dominant seventh.

The Finale, which originally stood in 2-4 time, by the excision of every other bar-line was altered to common time, and at the commencement was subjected to many changes, especially by the interpolation of the figure from the first Allegro. Thus the first four bars, which, omitting doublings by the wind, originally stood thus—in the later version were altered to—

In continuation the passage last quoted is repeated a tone lower, in substitution of the following much simpler passage from the first version—by repeated doublings of the melody, loses much of the conversational character which it originally had. But its close here, as well as on subsequent repetitions, is vastly improved by the ante-penultimate chord being changed from a commonplace "six-four" to a more vigorous "six-five." The remarkable trombone passage, which closes the first section, together with its accompanying scale passages, is treated with more fulness, and the entire section is directed to be repeated. Similar fillings up and interchanges of parts occur in what follows, and in one or two instances in the "working-out" section a nice example of "imitation" by the flute and oboe—has been eliminated in the later version.

As regards the melodious episodical passage commencing—the editors of the recently published edition have adopted a combination founded upon both the earlier and later versions. This they have done in view of the greater beauty of effect attained by allowing the melody to be given out by a solo clarinet, as in the first draft, and keeping its gradual reinforcement by other instruments for subsequent repetitions. From this point to the end, the alterations being restricted to sundry fillings in, there is no need for detailed comment.

Inadequate as a comparative analysis of the two versions of this Symphony the above remarks, from want of space, necessarily are, enough has been said in proof of the enormous pains which Schumann must have taken to render his work as far as possible perfect according to his own views. At the same time, it seems to reveal the fact that from a technical point of view his mode of working was not altogether that of the best composers, who have generally maintained that, to insure perfection of workmanship and effect, melody, harmony, and instrumentation must be simultaneously conceived.

It is satisfactory to be able to state that an opportunity of listening to a performance of this Symphony in its original shape will be accorded by Mr. August Manns (for the first time in England) at the Saturday Concert at the Crystal Palace on the 13th inst., when those interested may satisfy their curiosity by oral demonstration, and without the labour of instituting a comparison between the two scores. THE ART OF CONDUCTING.

By Joseph Barnby.

The enormous development of choral singing is one of the remarkable features of our time, and it is not too much to say that where there was one choral society twenty years ago there are now ten. Still more remarkable has been the increase in church choirs. Many will remember the church choir (if it may be dignified by such a name) of twenty or thirty years ago, when one or two hysterical females and an equal number of men, ensconced in a pew near the "three decker," or in the gallery in front of it, used to take their cue from the parish clerk on the lower deck, and ruin the one or two hymn tunes which formed the staple of the Sunday music. Nor will the school children, massed on each side of the organ—boys on one side and girls on the other—be forgotten, either for the quality of tone they produced or the startling nature of their accent. Compare these with the decorous procession of white-robed choristers which now makes its way at the beginning of service to the carved stalls in the chancel and takes its dignified part in a musical service of so ornate a character that it would put an average Cathedral choir on its mettle, and we shall see at once that in these matters we have fallen upon quite "other days"; that the practice of choral music in the concert-room, as well as in the Sanctuary, has become much more widely spread; and that, in spite of the rarity of the gifted and trained conductor or choirmaster, societies have been increasing in number, at least, if not in efficiency.

Seeing that there is no school for the training of choral conductors, it is strange that the development of choral societies has been so regular and so considerable, for it is an odd thing that in no school in this country—so far, at least, as I am aware—are any means provided for the training of choral conductors or choirmasters. It is, in fact, much to be desired that the heads of our great musical institutions should take some steps towards this end; for, of church choirs alone, there must be thousands in England in which the services of a choirmaster are necessary. Students are worked up in organ playing and pedalling to a marvellous pitch of proficiency, yet, in nine cases out of ten, clergymen express their desire for a good choir-trainer in preference to a brilliant organist. It is strange in face of such facts that more provision is not made for training choirmasters.

Let me now say what I consider the qualifications of a conductor. A conductor should possess (1) Abundant technical knowledge; (2) Experience; (3) A Strong Will; (4) Magnetic Influence; (5) A Quick Ear; (6) A Sharp Tongue; (7) A Good Memory; (8) A Clear Beat.

Abundant technical knowledge it is clear he should have, and experience will teach him the best means of utilising that knowledge. A strong will is essential to bind all the various elements together and to enforce obedience. A quick ear is indispensable, for otherwise mistakes may pass that the public would be sure to detect. With regard to a sharp tongue, I have something to say. A conductor should not begin by apologising. He should state, in as few words as possible, and these of the strongest kind, what he wishes; for example:—"Attack," which explains itself; "Short," in preference to "Staccato"; "Massive," "Veiled," "Smooth," "Stately," "Heavy," "Declaim," "Speak," "Whisper," "Tender," "Crashing," "Gaily," "Murmur," "A stage whisper," "Sinister," even "Slimy." Let me give illustrations: "Attack," "Short," and "Sharp" need none; "Massive"—"Worthy is the Lamb"; "Veiled"—"Upon your faces fall" ("Elijah"); "Smooth and sustained"—"He that shall endure to the end"; "Declaim"—"Take all the prophets of Baal, and let not one of them escape"; "Speak"—"Thou art Elijah, thou art he that troubleth Israel"; "Plaintive"—"He counteth all your sorrows"; "Tender"—"He, watching over Israel, slumbers not nor sleeps"; "Gaily"—first chorus in Berlioz's "Faust"; "Murmur"—"Dream, happy Faust." A "Good memory" is essential, for a conductor should not always be looking at his book, but should be en rapport with his singers; and a "Clear" beat, is more essential in the case of choral conducting than under other circumstances.

Armed with these the conductor needs to get his choir together. He first advertises for voices; if he be well known he will find plenty of candidates. He then settles upon the time for testing the voices, and having satisfied himself as to the quality and compass of the voice and the ability to read of the candidates, he accepts or rejects them as he thinks fit. Having got his voices, it is necessary that he should consider the subject of an approximate balance of parts. In a general way I have come to the conclusion that the sopranos should form one-third of the whole number, the basses one-fourth, the tenors one-fifth, and the altos the remainder. I subjoin details of the composition of five choirs of various sizes.

Sixty voices—Sopranos, 20; altos, 11; tenors, 13; basses, 16.

Eighty voices—Sopranos, 28; altos, 15; tenors, 17; basses, 20.

Ninety-six voices—Sopranos, 33; altos, 18; tenors, 20; basses, 25.

210 voices—Sopranos, 70; altos, 40; tenors, 45; basses, 55.

310 voices—Sopranos, 100; altos, 60; tenors, 70; basses, 80.

Respecting the disposition of voices on the orchestra, the basses should be on the conductor's right, at the back; the tenors on the conductor's left, also at the back; the sopranos in front of the tenors, and the altos in front of the basses. For this arrangement there is more than one motive. In the first place, the compass of the soprano is approximately an octave above the tenor, as the alto compass is above the bass; but there is another and equally important reason. The sopranos should be on the left of the conductor because the first violins are on the left of the conductor, and the altos on the right because the second violins are on the right of the conductor. There are cases—for instance, that of the Royal Choral Society—in which it has been found advantageous to have a complete choir on both sides: the sopranos in front of the altos, behind them the tenors, and the basses at the back.

With regard to the position and height of the conductor's desk:—these will, of course, always be regulated by personal taste or physical reasons; but a few words on the subject may not be out of place. It would be well that the desk should be placed a little to the conductor's left, seeing that he conducts with his right hand. By this means he would secure greater freedom for his beat. It is equally necessary that the desk should not be so high as to conceal the conductor's face from any member of the choir.

Coming now to the first rehearsal: it is better that a conductor should not expect too much from his forces at first. He would be wise to ask for accuracy alone. Accuracy in time and tune once gained, he should call attention to the marks of expression—last of all to "phrasing" and what may be called the "finer touches." One conductor, not very experienced, will take the opportunity of stopping his choir at intervals of every few bars, the only effect being to tire out his forces. Another will ask them to try the same passage over and over again without giving them the slightest indication of what is wrong and what should be righted. A third will begin by taking each section through its particular part without the slightest necessity other than the fact that he feels himself incapable of detecting mistakes when all are singing together.

With regard to marks of expression: there is a great tendency to think that when a mark of expression has been carried out, everything has been done that is necessary. This is a great mistake. A mark of expression should be the "outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace," and unless it is sung from the heart, it is a mere matter of taste and not of "expression" at all. Following out this idea, there is a great advantage in getting one's forces into the "dramatic position." They will, for instance, produce the great cries of "Baal, hear us," with far more effect if they are told to imagine themselves exactly in the dramatic position.

The art of phrasing as applied to choral singing was, until comparatively recent times, little understood or practised. It was usual in early days to "pound your way" through choruses without any attention to that which is well understood by orchestral players as phrasing, and is indicated by slurs and other signs. But a whole volume, rather than a short article, might be written on phrasing, and it would appear to be wiser to leave the subject for the present than to deal with it imperfectly.

The efficiency of a choir depends upon its conductor. It is told of a composer, long since dead, that on the occasion of the first choral rehearsal of a work of his which he was to conduct, he held his bâton in the air while the accompanist waited with hands ready over the keys, and the whole proceedings remained at a standstill. An onlooker, seeing the difficulty, called to the composer "Beat, and he'll go on." This solved the difficulty, and the rehearsal began. Here was a case in which the conductor waited to be conducted.

Another instance:—Having heard great things of the playing of a band in a Continental city I went, anticipating the treat that had been promised me; but was surprised to find the playing ragged and ill-balanced, the phrasing unsatisfactory, and the general tone indifferent to bad. It had been pressed upon me so forcibly that this was the finest opera band in that part of the country that I went a second time, and found the performance in several respects as bad as on the former occasion. Leaving that city for a week, on my return I attended these Concerts for the third time. The members of the band were the same, but a younger man stepped up, and glancing round with the eye of a master, gave a sharp rap with his bâton, which called the attention of every man round him, and started with a swing and precision that were simply delightful. Now in each case exactly the same band was playing. In the first instance, under one of their own number, their performance was quite third-rate; yet immediately the born conductor appeared it became first rate at once.

To return to our choir: I consider the following to be the essential tests of efficiency in the singing of a choir: — Tempo, Intonation, Balance of Parts, Quality of Tone, Marks of Expression, Clear Articulation, Phrasing, and Feeling. I put tempo first because all the other qualifications would be as nothing if the wrong tempo were adopted. Although the metronome marks in compositions cannot always be relied upon, yet I would strongly urge upon inexperienced conductors the necessity of using the metronome to ascertain the composer's intentions with regard to speed. I have met with so many instances of compositions being absolutely ruined by the pace at which they have been taken (quick or slow), that I speak very feelingly and strongly in urging the use of the metronome, if only it may be as a "point of departure." I am quite aware, in urging this, that there are many instances which can be brought to show that composers were not always the best judges of the pace at which their compositions should be taken. But this applies rather to compositions of a high and complex kind than to the music sung by ordinary choirs. To show how easy it is for choirmasters to make mistakes in comparatively small matters, I have heard hymn-tunes of a penitential character sung at a racing pace, and others of a jubilant nature sung as slowly. I have likewise heard part-songs in which every phrase, I had almost said every note, should have been taken at a slow, or at least, deliberate pace, taken at such racing speed as to suggest that "getting through" the work was the first, if not only consideration.

Coming to intonation: when a conductor finds that there is a tendency to sing out of tune in a certain section of his choir it should be his duty to find out the delinquent as quickly as possible. There should be no question about it—for the good of the whole choir that member should be eliminated. There are, however, occasions on which a passage may have been written so awkwardly for voices that, instead of an individual, the whole section would be singing out of tune. For instance: a passage that dwells upon D, E flat, E, or F is sure, sooner or later, to produce a lowering of pitch on the part of the tenors. In such a case the only possibility of keeping in tune would be to enjoin upon the tenors to use the head-voice. Next, as to balance of parts: if the parts are ill-balanced, that is to say, if one part is more robust—has greater body of tone—than another, I would say level up, don't level down. Add to the other parts; don't reduce that particular one, except in the case (not frequent) of some particular voice that, by its raucous or unduly robust quality, stands out in glaring relief, when the only plan is again to "eliminate."

In marks of expression it is necessary to be careful to make a regular gradation; for example, a piano should be less soft than a pianissimo, a forte less loud than a fortissimo, and these in due proportion. A crescendo should begin and end exactly where it is marked; a diminuendo, ritardando, and accelerando also. Clear articulation is a quality sadly lacking: indeed, the use of the lips, tongue, and teeth seems, in the majority of cases, to be the last thing thought of.

I have already said that the art of phrasing, as applied to choral singing, is of that subtle nature that it could only be adequately dealt with in a pamphlet; but it may be said that "ragged edges" should be avoided both in the beginning and at the end of the phrase; the attack should be simultaneous, and the release of the last note equally so. Indeed, it is not too much to say that, for a choir to pass a general test of efficiency, it should sing, as it were, with one heart and one mind.

It is obvious that this result can be attained only by the influence of a conductor who unites in his own person all the qualities to which I have drawn attention.

FROM MY STUDY.

The history of the renowned Don Quixote de la Mancha, chapter viii., contains thrilling particulars of a mighty combat between that knight and a certain Biscayan, whom, though he was no gentleman, the Don condescended to chastise. At the most critical stage of the encounter, it is said: "Don Quixote advanced towards the wary Biscayan with his uplifted sword, fully determined to cleave him asunder; and the Biscayan awaited him with his sword also raised, and guarded by his cushion. All the bystanders were in fearful suspense as to the event of those prodigious blows with which they threatened each other." Such was the position of my readers when, last month, the pen of the writer fell from his hand—or, to be more literal and less magniloquent, was carefully wiped and put aside—that all his energies might be given to wordy warfare with W. on the matter of Hanslick's book. The result of the fight was not then recorded, out of respect for a well-known practice in story-telling. Don Quixote's biographer, having got his combatants in the attitudes above shown, leaves them there while he makes a rambling discourse concerning documents. I shall improve upon that by keeping absolute silence, even at the risk of a suspicion that winged Victory deserted me and alighted on the standard of my opponent. The affair is a month old and belongs, therefore, to the ancient in serial literature, though, no doubt, it is a pity mankind should lose the examples of acuteness, logic, eloquence, and, on W.'s side, prejudice which made the argument memorable. My antagonist, it grieves me to state, remains in a state of obstinacy and irritation. How do I know that? Because he has written protesting against my calling him W. on the ground that the run upon capital letters as an appendage to names has made them very cheap, and he objects to be a capital letter only. As for his obstinacy, I gather it from the following atrocious stanzas which were enclosed in the same envelope and made it over-weight:

What! am I ne'er again to hear the whistling wind
As up and down the scale chromatic rush the strings?
Are drums well hammered, double-basses' rasping grind,
No more to speak of thundering bolts that great Jove flings?

Must gently swaying measures from the breathing flute
Now cease to tell me that a nurse the cradle rocks?
And when a cor inglese in six-eight doth toot,
Am I forbade to think of shepherds mid their flocks?

No doubt you'll strenuous urge that I am wrong to see
The Old One when "mi contra fa" strikes on mine ear!
And perhaps you'll say the tam-tam's hideous crash to me
Must never mean that something somewhere's out of gear!

Such teaching's very like an egg in state of addle,
And here comes in a rhyme that's most appropriate—twaddle!

I have been told that after posting this stuff to me W. went home and took the influenza.

When rummaging a bookcase the other day, I found, modestly hiding away in the darkest corner, a thin volume bound in panelled calf. It contains six monthly numbers (August to January inclusive) of "The Gentleman's Journal or the Monthly Miscellany, by way of Letter to a Gentleman in the Country, consisting of News, History, Philosophy, Poetry, Music, Translations, &c." Invaluable Lowndes tells me that this periodical was born in January, 1692, and died in 1694, the thirty-three numbers making three volumes, price eighteen shillings. It was edited by Peter Motteux, playwright and translator. I give these particulars for a reason which the courteous reader will note presently. Each number of the Journal contains one or more songs contributed by Henry Purcell, King, and other composers of the day. I may refer to some of these another time, but am at present solely concerned with a notice of the "Music Feast on St. Cecilia's Day," which appears in the number for November, 1692. Nine years before that date certain worthy souls (I am sure they must have been worthy) formed themselves into a body called "The Musical Society," for the purpose—perhaps not the sole purpose—of properly celebrating the patron saint of music. "Their practice," says W. H. H. in Grove's Dictionary, "was to attend Divine worship (usually at St. Bride's Church) when a choral service and anthem with orchestral accompaniments (often composed expressly for the festival) were performed by an exceptionally large number of musicians, and a sermon, usually in defence of cathedral music, was preached. They then repaired to another place (commonly Stationers' Hall), where an ode in praise of music, written and composed expressly for the occasion, was performed, after which they sat down to an entertainment." The Gentleman's Journal of the date already named makes reference as below to the Festival held in 1692:—

"In my first journal I gave you a large account of the Musick Feast on St. Cecilia's Day, so, to avoid repetitions, I shall only tell you that the last was no ways inferior to the former. The Stewards chosen for the next year are, the Right Honourable the Lord Kennedy; — Norton, Esquire; Sir John Woodhouse, Baronet; Philip Weake, Esquire; Mr. Godfrey Finger, and Mr. Bingham. The following Ode was admirably set to music by Mr. Henry Purcell, and performed twice with universal applause, particularly the second stanza, which was sung with incredible graces by Mr. Purcell himself. Though I was enjoined not to name the author of the Ode, I find a great deal of reluctancy to forbear letting you know whom you must thank for so beautiful a poem."

Elsewhere the author in question is referred to as Mr. B——y. Who was this gentleman? But the matter I have been all along coming to is the public or quasi-public appearance of Purcell as a vocalist, and I wish to ask whether this was an exceptional case, or did Purcell often display his powers as a singer, with or without "incredible graces"? Query, also, whether any one among my obliging readers owns a copy of the Gentleman's Journal for January, 1692, and will be good enough to send me the notice of the St. Cecilia Festival therein contained?

This is the place to say that I particularly desire my readers to correspond with me on the subjects referred to in these discursive papers. By that means, and only by that means, a mass of valuable information may be accumulated. Apropos, let me thank a courteous Oxford correspondent for an advertisement of the Musical Entertainer—one of the illustrated song-books mentioned last month—which he has copied from The Champion, or Evening Advertiser, of July 24, 1740. Apart from the information it gives, this announcement is worth inserting as a sample of its kind, temp. George II., and for the amusing naïveté with which the advertiser praises his own wares:—

"The Copper Plates being entirely finished of that beautiful work, entitled, 'The Musical Entertainer,' consisting of the most Favourite Italian, English, and Scots Songs, Cantata's, &c., &c., extant. The Words by the Best Poets; and set to Musick by Purcell, Handell, Corelli, Green, and other eminent Masters. Adapted to the Voice, Violin, German and Common Flute, Harpsichord, &c., all neatly engraved on Copper Plates; at the Head of each of which is a beautiful Picture adapted to each Song, designed by Gravelot and others, and engraved by George Bickham, Jun. Now Corrected, and a figured Thorough bass added to each Song, and made entirely complete, by Mr. John Frederick Lampe. The whole making Two Volumes in Folio, containing 200 Plates, besides Frontispieces and Tables, is proposed to be delivered by Subscription on the following Conditions:—

"I. That it shall be carefully printed on a Superfine thick Genoa Paper.

"II. That a Number containing Four Plates shall be punctually deliver'd every Saturday, sew'd up in Blue Covers for Six-pence.

"III. That the First Number shall be delivered on Saturday, August 23rd, 1740.

"IV. That at the end of each volume shall be given gratis a Beautiful Frontispiece and a Table of the Songs.

"V. That a List of the Subscribers shall be printed and given Gratis at the End of the Work.

"Subscriptions are taken in by Charles Corbet, Bookseller and Publisher, at Addison's Head, over against St. Dunstan's Church in Fleet Street; and by the Booksellers, Picturesellers, and Musicksellers in England, Scotland, and Ireland; where a Specimen of this present beautiful Edition may be seen.

"Those Gentlemen and Ladies, therefore, who are willing to become Subscribers to this Work, so universally admired, now faithfully corrected, the like of which never was before (nor in all Probability ever will be again) publish'd, are desired to be speedy in sending in their Names to any of the above persons, the Proprietor intending to print no more (or at least very few) than what are really subscrib'd for.

"N.B. Those Persons who rather choose to have this beautiful Work altogether, than by the Week, may be furnished therewith any Time before the Twenty-third of August next, after which no complete Sets can be sold until the whole Subscription is gone through."

Another correspondent points out, "more in sorrow than in anger," that my first paper contains no reference to Tom D'Urfey's "Wit and Mirth; or, Pills to Purge Melancholy." He should remember that I am dealing with illustrated song-books only, and that D'Urfey's work can hardly be so classed on the strength of that worthy's portrait, which forms the frontispiece to the first volume. A single plate may, however, entitle Tom's very free and easy collection to courtesy notice. I hesitated before writing the word "courtesy," the thing represented by it seeming so out of place in connection with bare-faced licentiousness. To us of the present day (though we may not at heart be much better than the men and women who constituted English society in the days of good Queen Anne), it appears wonderful that the general circulation of songs such as many of those in D'Urfey's collection should have been allowed. At the same time, regard must be paid to the very different standard of taste then existing, and, in any case, the "Pills to Purge Melancholy" have come down to us as a curious and singularly vivid illustration of the social and patriotic lyrics which were not only tolerated but applauded nearly two centuries ago.

I was wrong, by-the-way, in speaking of D'Urfey's portrait as the only plate. The title-page of each volume presents a bust of Shakespeare, whose connection with the work, however, is roundabout and remote. Jacob Tonson, publisher of the "Pills," carried on business "over against Catherine Street in the Strand," under the sign of the Shakespeare's Head, and the features of the bard consequently grace the frontispiece of many books congruous and incongruous. I have before me the five chubby, calf-bound, red-edged volumes promised in the general title-page, issued 1719, and followed by a sixth in 1720, which I possess only in the reprint published a few years ago. The collection is undoubtedly of value from a musical point of view, in its capacity as a store-house of genuine English melody, while some of the lyrics are not wanting in unpretentious charm. By way of sample I take the following stanza from the lament of a forsaken maid:—

Farewell each Shepherdess,
Ye bonny Lads adieu;
May each his Wish possess,
And to that Wish be true:
Your Oaten Pipes cou'd please,
But Jockey then was kind;
Your bonny tunes may cease,
The Lad has changed his Mind.

I take from behind the glass which protects them six pretty volumes, resplendent in red morocco and gold, and having inside each cover the gorgeous Hailstone book-plate. These are the complete "Musical Miscellany, being a Collection of Choice Songs, set to the Violin and Flute, by the most Eminent Masters. Printed by and for John Watts, at the Printing Office in Wild Court, near Lincoln's Inn Fields. 1729." The volumes were separately issued, like those of D'Urfey ten years earlier, and a perfect set is now exceedingly difficult to find. Till the other day I had managed to secure only two of the six, clad in their original calf and somewhat the worse for wear. At last, however, patience was rewarded, and into my hands passed, after a monetary transaction which would have made Mr. John Watts open his eyes, a complete and spotless copy. The work is dedicated to "all Gentlemen and Ladies, Lovers of Musick," and, from the very self-satisfied preface, it may be gathered that many of the songs were, in the first instance, separately published. Its illustrations consist of a frontispiece to each volume, designed by Vanderbank, and engraved by the well-known Van der Gucht, whose cuts are found in many books of the period. The plate represents a female playing upon a harp from a music-book held open by a winged boy. At the back is another female figure, while, above, Apollo sits among the clouds, lyre in hand, his head surrounded by a lustrous aureole. The figures are all well drawn, and the general effect is good. There are many tail-pieces scattered through the volumes, the most notable representing Apollo, around whose head the sun forms a nimbus, and an ornate design showing many lightnings zig-zagging from a cloud. These and others are frequently repeated in the customary manner. It is worthy of note that Vanderbank made two designs for the frontispiece, one showing the principal figures in a changed attitude and with an altogether different boy. As in D'Urfey's collection, only the melodies of the songs are given, but, where necessary to bring them within compass, a transposed version for the flute is printed apart. Decidedly the most gratifying feature in the "Miscellany" is its comparative freedom from licentious verse. So great is the contrast in this respect between the "Miscellany" and "Pills to Purge Melancholy" that we must either believe in a vast improvement of public taste between 1719 and 1729 or that there were two publics at that period, the one fairly decent, the other dissolute. Of the tunes, many are traditional, others bear such names as Cary and Galliard, while many more were composed by men unknown to fame. Nearly all, however, have the frank, manly, straightforward character which distinguishes purely English airs. Not a few of the lyrics, collected from a variety of sources, are worthy of admiration, and I could fill my space with charming examples comparing very favourably with average "words for music" of the present day. But a couple of stanzas must suffice. I take them from the gloomy legend of "Lucy and Collin," by Mr. Tickel:—

Of Leinster, fam'd for Maidens fair,
Bright Lucy was the Grace;
Nor e'er did Liffy's limpid stream
Reflect so sweet a Face.
'Till luckless Love and pining Care,
Impair'd her rosy Hue,
Her coral Lips and damask Cheeks,
And Eyes of glossy blue.

Oh! have you seen a Lily pale,
When beating Rains descend?
So droop'd the slow-consuming Maid,
Her Life now near its End.
By Lucy warn'd, of flatt'ring Swains
Take heed, ye easy Fair;
Of Vengeance due to broken Vows,
Ye perjur'd Swains beware.

This is homely verse, no doubt, but it rings true all the same, and I value my "Musical Miscellany" because the volumes contain a good deal equally of the right sort. They are none the worse for occasional satire and cynicism, such as this:—

Give me a Lass with a lump of Land,
And we for Life shall gang together.
Foolish or wise, I'll ne'er demand,
Or black, or fair, it makes not whether

. . . . .

Love tips his Arrows with Woods and Parks,
And Castles and Riggs and Moors and Meadows;
And nothing can catch our modern Sparks
But well-tocher'd Lasses or joynter'd Widows.

For the finest examples of illustrated song-books published in the eighteenth century we must go to France, where, during the decades of splendour and luxury immediately preceding the Revolution, great artists such as Eisen, and accomplished engravers like Moria and Baquoy, ministered to the taste for magnificence in books. Who that has seen the Fermier-Général edition of La Fontaine can readily forget it? But I must not wander, though sorely tempted, into the region of general literature, so, to fix my thoughts, I take down and place before me a work in four volumes, entitled: "Choix de Chansons mises en Musique par M. de la Borde, Premier Valet-de-Chambre ordinaire du Roi, Gouverneur du Louvre, ornée d'Estampes par J. M. Moreau." Paris, 1773. "What!" exclaims a reader who knows, "are you so fortunate as to own an original copy of that work?" I am not Crœsus, nor even a modern millionaire; otherwise I should long since have been in a position to answer "Yes." Once I saw a copy for sale, the sum demanded being £100. Of course, the treasure was not for a poor scribe, who could only sigh and go his way; but happily, I afterwards discovered that a publisher in Rouen had issued a fac-simile reprint (1881), using the original plates. Even that was hard to find, and, when found, cost money. However, it lies before me, each volume in sheets, unbound, and enclosed in a separate portfolio. What a luxurious thing it is! Looking thereon, one begins to see uses in a fermier-général—which Laborde once was—and how even money wrung from the poor and wretched can bear good fruit. I fancy Laborde must have been a favourable specimen of his kind, both before and after he attained the dignities mentioned on the title-page of his magnum opus. His Chansons prove him a melodist; he wrote fairly well for the stage, and his "Essai sur la Musique Ancienne et Moderne," in four portly volumes (Paris, 1780), shows that he was industrious in research. That work, also, is splendidly illustrated in the highest style of art. Laborde, in fact, gave nothing to the world without putting it in a magnificent dress; and he was wise, for his productions are mainly preserved on account of their costly trappings. He came to a melancholy end, poor man. It was his unlucky fate to live on into the storm of the Revolution, and to believe that he, an ex-farmer of taxes and a high Court functionary, could brave it out. No fermier-général escaped on whom the Revolutionary government could lay its heavy hand. It is not probable that Laborde was one of the number of those functionaries who, accepting an invitation to appear at a final audit of their accounts, were bagged in a body and hurried to the guillotine. He had long ceased to be a tax-gatherer. But the government laid hold of him all the same. On July 22, 1794, he was condemned to death and promptly executed; all his belongings being no less expeditiously seized by the State. In a book recently published, "Un Inventoire sous la Terreur" (Paris, 1890), there is a list of the musical instruments found in his house. It includes two harpsichords, two harps, two cors de chasse, three guitars, and "une boîte de fer blanc avec des chords," whatever that may have been. But let us leave Laborde himself, and take up his "Choix de Chansons."

As already indicated, the luxury of these volumes is extreme. It meets us on the beautiful title-page, with its glowing vignette representing a lyre in a circle of flowers and foliage, from which light streams all around, and with its lovely border of nymphs and fauns and cupids. On the next page a medallion portrait of Jean Benjamin de Laborde himself shows a pleasant, handsome profile. Dedicatory and other designs follow (I now refer to the first volume), and then come the songs, each illustrated by plates printed in duplicate with ink of different colours. Those who know Moreau's talent will take the charm of the designs for granted, and it is easy to understand why £100 should be asked for a copy of the first edition. Even the reprint is a feast for the eye—such a feast that I strongly suspect poor Laborde's music, though pretty enough in its Watteau-like style, receives scant attention from those who turn over the leaves.

Here I must stop because of interruption. This time it is not W., but Y. who disturbs me. I will introduce Y. to my readers next month. No, there is no occasion for alarm. He does not write doggerel verse. X.

Prime donne and operatic artists generally are looked upon as the spoiled children of the musical world, and indeed a diva is generally accorded a divine right to do just as she pleases. But outside the ranks of the stars of the first magnitude the case is very different. The lot of the lyric artist who perambulates the globe is a chequered one; even the heroes and heroines of one public often meet with a very different reception from that to which they are accustomed when they seek to cull laurels in fresh woods and pastures new. Where this is a matter of taste, the artist has no choice but to acquiesce in the verdict. What is one man's meat, musically speaking, is another man's poison, and this holds good of composers as well as executants. But there is a wide gulf between the honest expression of feelings which are often a matter of national temperament and the petulant prejudice and ungenerous caprice for which some towns have earned so unenviable a notoriety. Paris was bad enough thirty years ago, when the fate of composers and artists rested with the Jockey Club, but the state of affairs at Antwerp at the present moment would seem to be, if anything, worse. The Ménestrel in a recent issue told a story of a tenor who, previous to his début at the Theatre Royal in that town, attended a performance at the house in question, and was so upset and unhinged by the attitude of the audience that he packed up his traps and fled from Antwerp by the next train. One might be disposed to discredit this and other stories of the rowdiness and violence of the Antwerp public it they were not confirmed by the circumstantial accounts given in the Belgian Press. It is the exception rather than the rule for a performance to be carried through without a "ruction." Within the last fortnight, M. Ambroise Thomas's "Hamlet" was announced for representation, but the attempt to perform the work was abortive. A new bass—the sixth who has dared to face the Antwerp public since the opening of the present season—assumed the title-rôle, but it transpired that he had sung in Antwerp twenty-five years previously, and, on the strength of this, the exacting public refused to give the unlucky artist a fair hearing, hooted him off the stage, and demanded back their money. In some respects, the English opera-going public is a great deal too tolerant, but we may thank our stars that at least it is free from the spirit of cabal and jealousy, and, per contra, the "stars" may thank us that such is the case.

At a meeting of the Court of Common Council held on the 21st ult. in the Guildhall, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, Mr. Deputy Rogers moved, and it was agreed: "That the subject of the duties and emoluments of the post of Principal of the Guildhall School of Music should be referred to the Music Committee for consideration"; and it was further unanimously agreed "that the Court should place upon record its appreciation of the late Mr. Weist Hill's eminent services in the interests of the Guildhall School of Music." From these resolutions it is plain that the City Fathers have no intention of playing into the hands of those who desire to see the Guildhall School reduced to the level of a concern worked in the interests of a small minority. As men of the world they recognise the supreme importance, to such an institution, of its chief. There have been rumours of late that a serious attempt would be made to carry on the School without the aid of a principal. It is no secret that the enormous success of the School has been achieved in the face of exceptionally trying difficulties, Mr. Weist Hill's illness being such that most of his work during the past twelve months has devolved upon others. Certain short-sighted persons have thereupon flown to the conclusion that these others could have done without him altogether. They forgot that no Institution of the rank to which the Guildhall School aspires has ever in any country been left without a head of acknowledged musical eminence, whose name would carry weight in the artistic world. They forgot that the Guildhall School, in spite of its phenomenal success, was as yet but an infant—prodigious indeed, but still an infant—of whose future no man could compass the possibilities; and that to leave it without a strong and influential guardian would therefore be perilous in the extreme. And they forgot that men able to achieve so much under a chief, who was practically hors de combat, would necessarily achieve ever so much more if led by a general in full possession of his powers. It is satisfactory to know that the sound sense which characterises commercial minds has seen the matter in its right light. The appointment of a successor to Mr. Weist Hill is obviously no light matter, but it will assuredly receive due consideration and care. Among the candidates who have already offered themselves are Mr. Barnby, Mr. Prout, Mr. Wingham, Mr. Orton Bradley, Dr. Warwick Jordan, and Mr. W. Carter.

The thoughtful musical critic of Vanity Fair recently drew attention to the hap-hazard style of making up Concert programmes, which, even in "high places," now so generally prevails. Neither is the fault limited to "unmusical" England. At the second Concert of the New York Oratorio Society the programme is said to have consisted of "selections from Wagner ('Tristan') and Handel." Particulars are wanting, so we do not know how the selections were placed, and this might modify the atrocity. It is, of course, not always possible that a Concert should present only co-temporaneous works, nor would it always be desirable; but even if, for some strong reason, music of such violently contrasting styles as the above should be performed, the least that could be done would be to put the modern work, with its profuse resources of instrumentation and harmony, last. To hear Mozart played after Wagner or Mendelssohn after Beethoven, is like eating fish after joint or reading Wordsworth after Browning. Mendelssohn used to be very severe on Concert-givers who made up incongruous programmes, and declared, with perfect truth, that the selection of the pieces demanded the utmost thought and care, both as regards contrast of style and tonality. In a miscellaneous Concert, if we may judge from our own experience, the entrepreneur's entire energies are exhausted in so arranging the pieces as not to give dire offence to the so-called "artists" who all want the best place in the programme. Considerations of style and tonality are of very little weight compared with the convenience of a prima donna who has a train to catch, or a tenor who has to sing somewhere else at half-past nine.

A Concert programme, it is evident, should be a work of art, in the sense that it owes its existence to "selection" (rejection is therefore implied), and "arrangement" according to some clearly defined principle or principles. Of these, Unity and Variety, in fairly equal proportions, are indispensable. Clearly, therefore, violent contrasts are undesirable, since the first of these principles is thereby violated. Yet it is obvious that such contrasts may be utilised with excellent results, especially for purposes of artistic education. Thus the juxtaposition of specially chosen works to represent two opposite schools, with a view of exhibiting their individual characteristics in a strong light, and enabling hearers to realise the points of difference, is not to be regarded as inartistic merely because unity is absent and only variety present, for this last quality is, in such cases, made use of, not for its own sake, but for a purpose with which unity would be altogether incompatible. So, also, while it is evident that monotony should be avoided whenever the highest object sought is merely the composition of an artistic programme, it is equally clear that, with a view of exhibiting peculiarities common to a school, an epoch, or a nation, a programme may include several works so similar in style that, to those who judge it apart from this consideration, the result must appear monotonous. In this, as in most other matters connected with art, it is difficult to lay down a hard-and-fast rule which will release Concert-givers, or their critics, from the dire necessity of using their brains, if they intend to remove the reproach which now attaches to the art of programme-making. But the fact is, that in these days, when musical enterprises are so formidably expensive, the first question the Concert-giver asks himself is, "Whom shall I engage?" and the second, "What are the most attractive works?" (if more than one is to be done). He cannot afford to let such a matter as suitability of style weigh with him against the question of the hard dollar.

A correspondent of the Liverpool Mercury calls attention to a nuisance which for many a long year has caused anguish to the sensitive musician. Apropos of the programmes of the Philharmonic Society in that town—and the same remark holds good of all Concerts where programmes are provided—the complainant stateth that "it almost invariably happens that the words of songs are so arranged that at least once during each performance the turning over of a leaf has to take place during the progress of a song. The noise occasioned by the simultaneous turning over of leaves by 1,500 or 2,000 people is sometimes sufficient to almost drown the music, or, at any rate, to distract the attention of the listener, and most often is very embarrassing to the singer whose song may happen to be so rudely broken in upon." There is no questioning the fact that the complaint is well founded. No more excellent illustration of the old saying "Many a mickle makes a muckle" can be found than that afforded by the multiplication of the rustle caused by the turning over of a single leaf. But how is the difficulty to be got over? No doubt something can be done by the disposition of the contents of a programme so that the necessity for turning over may not occur at some "psychological moment." The ideal programme from this point of view would consist of only a single page; but just think of the dimensions to which it would run when some new and important work, calling for detailed analysis, was to be performed! If England were Germany and the matter came to the knowledge of the Emperor, no doubt he would settle the matter summarily by abolishing all programmes inside a Concert hall. In default of so heroic a solution of the difficulty we must look forward to the introduction of some new and noiseless substitute for paper. Perhaps Mr. Edison might help us if his attention were drawn to the subject.

In the course of an action brought by Signor Ferga, the author of the play from which the famous "Cavalleria Rusticana" was pirated, the publishers' statistics of profit and loss on that work were mentioned. Of course these may not be more accurate than the average Briton's annual statement submitted to the Income Tax Commissioners, but, accepting them with all reserve, they are interesting. Signor Mascagni is said to have been paid lire 47,865, which, reckoning twenty-seven paper lire to the sovereign, is about £1,773—a handsome amount for a one-act opera and a first work. Sonzogno, the publisher, is stated to have lost about £2,300, a statement which we find considerable difficulty in swallowing when we remember the huge sums which have been paid for performing rights alone in this work. Some light is thrown upon the vivid interest in the "Cavalleria" by the press when we read that £1,250 were spent in advertising and £1,200 in "general expenses." But even were the loss as great as the publishers declare, they would have little to complain of, for any subsequent work by Mascagni could hardly fail to recoup them.

Edinburgh has not had long to wait for evidence of the activity and intelligence of its new Professor of Music. In order to carry out more fully General

Reid's desire that the annual Concert should "show the taste of music about the middle of last century," Professor Niecks has arranged an "historical" programme, "not one however"—we quote his own words—"of compositions, dead, buried, and past reviving, but one of compositions as fresh and living as they were in the early days of their existence, and as are the best productions of to-day and yesterday." Among the works promised are Bach's Orchestral Suite in D, Mozart's Twenty-third Pianoforte Concerto (solo by Mr. Max Pauer), Handel's Concerto in G minor for strings, Haydn's E flat Symphony (No. 1, B. & H.), and Cherubini's Overture to "Lodoiska." Miss Macintyre and Mr. Ffrangcon Davies will sing, and the orchestra, led by Mr. Maurice Sons, will consist almost entirely of musicians resident in Scotland. Professor Niecks hopes that this may be the first step towards the establishment in Edinburgh of a complete resident orchestra. We hope so too. Other cities, please copy!

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

THE Philharmonic Society's eightieth season will be inaugurated, on March 10, by a Mozart Centenary Concert, consisting exclusively of works by the Salzburg master. The dates of the six subsequent Concerts are March 24, April 7 and 27, May 11, June 1, and (this a morning Concert) June 15. Only three absolute novelties are, as yet, announced—viz., Dvorák's new Triple Overture, Miss Dora Bright's second Fantasia (in G minor) for pianoforte and orchestra, and Grieg's baritone scena "Die Einsame"; though Max Bruch's Third Violin Concerto, Rheinberger's "Demetrius," and Villiers Stanford's "Queen of the Seas" Overtures may be spoken of as comparatively new. The Symphonies promised are Beethoven's Nos. 6 and 7, Brahms's in F, Mozart's in G minor, Schumann's in C, and Raff's "Lenore." Among the artists engaged are Madame Sophie Menter, Miss Dora Bright, MM. Joachim, Ysaÿe, Hugo Becker, De Greef, F. Lamond, and Sapellnikoff. Mr. F. H. Cowen of course retains his place as Conductor.

THE Reform daily paper of Hamburg, dated November 27, 1891, reports: "Mr. L. E. Kruse was summoned to-day to answer a charge of fraud in which he had been assisted by his late manager, Mr. H. Schmidt. It was established that Mr. Kruse obtained pianofortes and affixed to them labels with names invented by himself, and closely resembling that of an eminent firm. These "famous" pianofortes were exported to England and elsewhere, and sent to auctions, where they were sold at various prices. One lady who had been imposed upon by Kruse appeared as principal witness. She had purchased a pianoforte from him for £45 bearing the name of C. H. Bachstein, believing that she was buying a genuine Bechstein. Kruse and Schmidt were both found guilty and Kruse's practices severely commented upon by the judge, who sentenced him to two months' imprisonment and a fine of £50; and Schmidt, as an accomplice, to two months' imprisonment, with the option of a fine of £30.

A STORY of a cock and bull—no, of a skull and a gravedigger has lately appeared in the Vienna Neue Freie Presse. There are many stories of skulls. The cranium once owned by Oliver Cromwell exists, we believe, in two or three places at the same time, which is a remarkable thing; but still more wonderful seems to us the report that somebody possesses the skull of another historical personage as it was when he was a boy. All this, however, is neither here nor there in relation to the Vienna story, to which we turn. A certain Dr. Frankl is the narrator, and he deposeth as below.

PROFESSOR HYRTL had a brother, Jacob, an engraver and an eccentric, who, falling ill a good many years ago, and believing he was going to die, sent for the professor that he might unburden his mind of a weighty secret. The eccentric truly had a remarkable tale to tell. It was to this effect: After the death of his mother, Jacob Hyrtl frequently visited the cemetery of St. Mark, and there made the acquaintance of the gravedigger, who, like himself, was devoted to music. Now this gravedigger, believing he had not very long to live, had a confession to make and a present to give. Who but Jacob, the eccentric, should receive both?

As to the confession, the gravedigger said that he was one of those who assisted at the funeral of Mozart, a part of his duty on such occasions being to note the position of the coffin in the common fosse and enter the same in a book. Mozart's body was placed on the top layer, first on the left. Ten years passed, and the pit had then, in accordance with rule, to be cleared of its mouldering relics, to make room for fresh bodies. This was the gravedigger's opportunity, and, in his capacity as a musical devotee, he watched for the skull of Mozart, secured it, and took it home, where he had ever since kept it concealed. So much for the sexton's wondrous tale.

JACOB HYRTL, the eccentric, having received the precious relic from the moribund expectant who stole it, hid it away in turn, till, being himself a moribund expectant, he gave it over to his brother, the professor. The engraver, however, did not die that time, and the skull was reclaimed, to pass again into the professor's hands when, after a while, Jacob was actually gathered to his fathers. The professor had it mounted on a stand with a glass cover, and, in 1868, showed it to Dr. Frankl, who now tells the story after a lapse of twenty-four years.

THE foregoing is a most doubtful tale. It may be asked, in the first place, why the possessors of the skull, contrary to all precedent in such cases, made a secret of their treasure. If they did so, as alleged, out of consideration for the relatives of the sacrilegious sexton, we are bound to note the existence of an almost incredible feeling on the part of a relic owner. But the secrecy observed is a minor matter. Here is one far more important: Otto Jahn tells us that when Mozart's widow visited the cemetery a little time after the funeral "she found a fresh gravedigger, who was unable to point out Mozart's grave, and all her enquiries after it were fruitless." A. Fuchs made very careful investigations, with the same want of success; Ritter von Lucam, who took up the search, could only gather from two old friends of the master that the body was interred on the right of the churchyard cross, in the third or fourth row of graves; while enquiries officially set on foot in 1856 ascertained nothing more than a probability that it was in the fourth row. Now if the gravedigger friend of the eccentric Hyrtl had an official book in which the exact position was indicated, and if he could at any moment have pointed it out, why all this fruitless investigation? He was not then a thief, and unless he harboured a deliberate intention to steal the skull after ten years, it is difficult to see why he kept his knowledge to himself. For these reasons we don't believe the Vienna story in its present stage. The evidence in its favour needs to be a great deal more convincing.

The musical critic of the Wakefield Herald, or, more likely, some one representing him, recently noticed a performance of "The Messiah" and much distinguished himself. He must be a distinctly precious person to his employers, for the article is studded with gems. We extract a few: "The instrumentation was delightful, and so good that the full band was allowed to share in the accompaniments of the soloists." The singing of "I know that my Redeemer liveth" was "a sustained emotion, mingled with emphatic declamation." A singer, "though he got confused in his score (letting a sheet fall) in the triplet trilling," picked up "at the unison bar." Another artist is praised for "intoning well" in his airs, and the quartet, "Since by man," is described as a "charming contribution." Lastly, the sopranos are credited with reaching a "full upper B." The Wakefield Herald should take care of its young man. He may eventually make the paper profitably known as a comic journal.

A correspondent writes: "A friend of mine, who is the conductor of a very much amateur provincial society, noticed during the rehearsal of a symphony that the 'only' 'cellist was gazing about him and appeared to have no music before him. 'Why, how is this, Mr. ——? You are playing without a part.' 'Oh, that's all right,' said the 'cello, 'I'm just playing fancy!' Another friend, also conductor of a local society, was much troubled by the two professional horns not turning up to the final rehearsal. However, they assured him that it would be 'all right,' and they would arrange among themselves how to 'fake' it up, &c.; but it so happened that in one part of the cantata one of them had to imitate the 'winding of the horn,' while the other answers with an echo behind the platform. Unfortunately at the performance our two friends so arranged it that the echo went off first! And now the society is considering the desirability of doing without a band."

According to a printed card circulated by the "regular Dustmen" of St. James's, Westminster, the token of that body is "a copper medal, on one side a male bust with the word 'Handel,' on reverse side a guitar with the words 'Crystal Palace Handel Festival.'" A correspondent sends us the following rhymed comment thereupon:—

Let foreigners talk of their musical skill,
And vow that Old England has no love for Art
(By the way, they come here their lean purses to fill,
Which end they accomplish before they depart);
Such talk on their part shows ignorance dense,
Or prejudice deep, or perhaps love of scandal,
For music in England the love is intense,
You'll find e'en the Dustmen disciples of Handel.

We are asked to make a note of the fact, as showing musical progress in Montreal, that Mr. William Reed, Organist of the American Presbyterian Church, is giving monthly Organ Recitals in that building, and meeting with great success. The December programme included a Fantasia by Silas, one of Beethoven's Violin Romances (arranged by Best), Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A minor, and other works of equal value. Well done. It will be some time before the Montreal amateurs want a new Reed for that organ.

The musical critic of the North British Advertiser and Ladies' Journal has ideas of his own on the question of rhythm. Noticing a performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony, he speaks of the "almost rugged Allegro passing on to graceful minuet rhythm, and closing amid the calm of its third or Adagio movement. We were never before taught that the Scherzo of No. 9 is an example of "graceful minuet rhythm," but the oldest of us must continue to learn while he continues to live.

A Somersetshire monthly Nonconformist magazine recently contained the following description of a new organ erected in a chapel not far from Taunton: "The organ is now an extremely pretty instrument, and possesses a very sweet tone. It consists of seven stops—viz., one open diapson, two stopped diapson, three dulcina, four principal five-flute, six octave coupler, and seven swell; the front pipes being neatly decorated in gold and colour."

With reference to the veteran violoncellist, Alfredo Piatti, it may interest our readers to know that he has recently celebrated his seventieth birthday. We all hope that "by reason of strength" he may reach fourscore, and that even then, he may know neither the labour nor the sorrow of weakness. So good and true an artist—a Bayard in music—is precious.

The Hoylake Herald is responsible for the astonishing statement below: "The quartet were one member short, but the part-songs were well rendered notwithstanding, one of the performers taking two parts." Whoever expected to see the old joke of "singing a duet all by himself" thus reduced, potentially, to sober earnest?

Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's "Pibroch" was played by Señor Sarasate, on the 15th ult., at the Odeon at Munich. The work obtained a great success for, according to the Münchener Fremdenblatt, it created such a storm of applause as has rarely been heard at the Odeon.

We regret to learn that the health of Madame Clara Schumann continues in an unsatisfactory state. She is always haunted by the sound of music, and nothing her physicians can do succeeds in touching the evil. It is not surprising that the great artist has fallen into a state of melancholy and depression.

The Philharmonic directors have engaged Madame Valda, Mr. Oudin, and the Sisters Ravogli as vocalists for the next season. It is no longer their intention to do without vocal music at certain of the Concerts. Second thoughts are best.

Mr. Henschel's Suite from his music to "Hamlet" will be performed at the Musical Festival of Springfield, Mass., U.S.A., in the Spring, under the direction of the composer.

According to a Boston musical paper, it was Signor "Largo" who introduced "Cavalleria Rusticana" to London, and also caused to be played an opera called "Crispino e la Cormare."

THE NATIONAL SOCIETY OF PROFESSIONAL MUSICIANS.

This Society commenced its seventh annual Conference on the 5th ult. in the Lecture Room of the College of Science, Newcastle-on-Tyne. There were about 150 members present. The Mayor, Mr. William Sutton, presided at the opening meeting, and was accompanied by the Sheriff, Mr. B. J. Sutherland, and other members of the municipality. The Mayor, on behalf of the city, gave a hearty welcome to the members, and hoped that their visit would give a stimulus to the cultivation of music in the North.—Mr. W. H. Cummings then took the chair, in the absence of Dr. A. C. Mackenzie.

Mr. Cummings thanked the Mayor for his welcome. The Association, he said, was becoming so large that they did not know where to go next year outside of London.

The honorary general secretary (Mr. Chadfield) read the annual report, which showed that 143 new members had been elected. There was a satisfactory balance in favour of the general fund. The local examinations held by the Society had been very successful, the number of candidates presented having been 2,613, an increase of 318 as compared with the preceding year. The great importance of the Society as an educational body was shown by a very simple calculation. Taking the number of teaching members as 700, and an average of only forty pupils for each teacher, the number of those receiving musical instruction from the members was no less than 28,000. From this it was evident how great was the influence exercised by the Society through its members upon the musical taste and culture of the people. The general council had at the present time a petition for a royal charter under consideration.

The Chairman then read an address on "The Relation of Poetry to Music." Music, he said, was the first born of all the arts, and as they all knew, could and did exist without the aid of words; indeed the highest form of music was that which was absolutely independent of all programme or of worldly thoughts, and which our full hearts recognised as giving some shadowy expression of feelings and aspirations unutterable in words, but which drew our spirit upwards, and brought our soul very near the footstool of the Almighty. They could not doubt that after the creation of our first parents music and poetry were united. Probably musicians only, and not even the majority of them, regarded abstract instrumental music as the most sublime, and they could understand how the reverse of this opinion was almost universal before the genius of Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven had shown what orchestral combinations were capable of producing. In Milton's day, instrumental orchestral music had no existence; Milton was familiar with the majestic strains poured forth from the golden-mouthed organ pipe, and with more or less skilful lute playing, but that was all, and it was not therefore to be wondered at that he regarded the union of music and poetry as the perfection of association. They remembered his ode—

If they inquired what were the relations of poetry and music in European nations in the early centuries of the Christian era, he thought they should find ample suggestion that the minstrels and troubadours fitted their poetry to music both tuneful and rhythmic. After mentioning that the tune of "Sumer is i cumin in" existed long before it was made into a round by the monk of Reading, John Fornsete, Mr. Cummings pointed out that in old folk songs they found this important feature, that poetry and music were fittingly wedded together; if the words were sad, the music was in sympathy; if joyous, then the music was correspondingly gay. He dwelt upon this point strongly, because he had come to the conclusion that the music of the Northern nations of Europe was distinctly of a rhythmic and tuneful type, and was driven away and superseded by the music of the South. He referred to the church modes, for there they found a neglect of rhythm and of expression, together with a carelessness or indifference as to the fitness of music and words. He need only make a passing reference to the works of early Italian church composers, and in the music of our own church composers of the period preceding and following the Reformation; they would find there an absolute indifference to rhythm, and ineptitude in the expression of music and words. With a few remarkable exceptions, they found a distressing indifference in the works of composers as to the spirit of the words. One of our own musicians of the sixteenth century had left on record that he strung together the titles of various Italian songs and set them to music, with the result that the composition was accepted by the world in good faith and without any suspicion of the nonsense they were hearing. Would it be possible to adduce a stronger proof of degeneracy in the relation of poetry and music? He had pleaded for poetry; it was time to say something on behalf of music. It was apparent to all who carefully considered the present condition of art that the due relation of poetry and music was a question pressing for solution. If in times past music had exercised a despotic disregard for the just rights of poetry, was there not a fear that, in the future, the opposite might become the fashion, and so the due relation of the arts be as little regarded as ever? Surely the beauties of thought, the sense and sentiment of poetry could be duly conserved, nay enhanced, within the limits of musical form and exposition. Was it not something akin to madness or sacrilege to decree that the developed air or the concerted trio, quartet, or other piece must be swept away in order to afford freedom to the self-proclaimed apostles of the music of the future? Compare for a moment the "ravings" of a recent performance in London (and previously to that in Paris), in which every law of harmony and accepted canon of form was thrown to the winds, with the cultivated and cultured production of a well-balanced mind. Take, for instance, the "Elijah," where they had, when required, continuous recitative without repetition of words and other movements, but where also the development of musical form was used not to obscure the sense and beauties of the poetry, but to enhance and emphasise both. It seemed to him that music of the kind they heard in "Le Rêve" was like what they saw in the kaleidoscope, restless and perpetual change, but only too rarely forms of beauty. He could not believe that poets, musicians, or painters would take the downward steps which must lead to artistic chaos. Purity of purpose and fineness of execution by no means went together, since fine, and indeed all but the finest, work was often seen in the most wanton purpose, as in much of our modern opera, and the rudest execution was again often joined with purest purpose, as in a mother's song to her child. Still, the entire accomplishment of music should aim at the union of purity of purpose and fineness of execution. The Association of Professional Musicians was established for the promotion of the art and the elevation of its professors. They should claim for themselves all freedom in their art work, but they would not descend to license. They would remember that "order is heaven's first law," and would endeavour to cultivate the study and appreciation of good poetry and good music, and would so try to use both as to promote their due and proper relationship. A noble art like theirs was not recklessly to be made to imitate the wild excesses of Pandemonium, because composers were deficient in art cultivation or in original genius. No! if they unhappily were not inspired to write good and true music, they could at least quietly and reverentially hear and respect the music of the great masters who had gone before, and bide their time until it should please heaven to send them another. Let them wait in that spirit, assured that music came from the heavenly abode; that the majestic and lofty sounds they heard, and which stirred the heart's emotions with mysterious yearnings for we knew not what, were the outpourings of eternal harmony in the realms of exalted sound, the echoes of our future music and of our future home. There they would find the exact adjustment of the relation of poetry to music. Mr. Ebenezer Prout moved, and Mr. Page (Nottingham) seconded, a vote of thanks to Mr. Cummings for his address. Mr. Lunn (Birmingham), Mr. Ward (London), Dr. Vincent, and Mr. S. S. Stratton (Birmingham), spoke briefly on the subject of the paper read by Mr. Cummings.

Mrs. Roskell, of London, followed with an interesting paper on "The Musical education of Children." In the course of the paper she spoke of her own study of music as a child, and its effects on children, and went on to say how easily children could be taught by love, and how often they were turned away from music by the harsh tones of a teacher; by a blow on the little hands bravely doing their best to render rightly what had never been interpreted down to them in the region in which they lived. Experienced teachers did not care to teach the rudiments of music, and consequently this important work was left in the hands of those who had had very little musical training themselves. They all knew by experience that nothing was more difficult to undo than technical faults, and there was no reason why a little child should ever be allowed to contract them. When children were picking out their notes on the pianoforte they could easily be shown which part of the finger to press the notes with; and they soon understood what was required of them. Another point she dwelt on was that through incompetent early training a child was often made to dislike music, and when this happened they might say "good-bye to progress." A part of every lesson should be devoted to training the ear and teaching a child to distinguish individual sounds as well as chords. Musical structure was seldom taught to beginners and children were not told enough of the lives of the different composers.

Mr. Carl Courvoisier read an address "On intonation." He said he wished at the outset to state that intonation was not a matter of mere instinct in our sense of hearing, but was one of knowledge and experience. Instinctively correct intonation would be the lucky chance result of guess-work, and guess-work was the worst quality of amateurish proceedings. The Chairman, in thanking Mr. Courvoisier for his paper, said there were singers who did sing by pitch and not by relative intervals. That was a matter of fact, and there was no good questioning it. The singer could not, like the violinist, correct the intonation by listening for the harmonics, for no man could sing two notes at once. (Applause and laughter.)

Mr. J. P. Gibson brought the afternoon session to a close with his illustrated Lecture on "Northumbrian Scenery."

On Thursday morning, at 10 o'clock, the proceedings were resumed by an Organ Recital in the Cathedral by Dr. A. L. Peace, Organist of the Cathedral, Glasgow. The performance was of a very high order, and was thoroughly appreciated by the many organists present.

The Conference was again largely attended. Professor George Riseley, Organist of Bristol Cathedral, presided.

The Chairman read a paper on "The Development and Progress of Local Orchestras in Great Britain." He spoke of the deplorable state of orchestral music in this country as compared with that on the Continent, especially in Germany; the want of systematic education in all our large provincial centres, the lack of support from public bodies, the mischievous system of centralisation, the financial failure of orchestral concerts, the depressing effect upon native composers, and the loss suffered by students from the non-existence of local orchestras. The remedial schemes he proposed were (1) The establishment of a regular series of orchestral concerts in each large centre; (2) The formation of large amateur instrumental societies; (3) The granting from the various municipalities of annual subsidies towards the support of their local orchestras; and (lastly) the establishment of a good school of music in every large town, assisted by a Government grant. Mr. Riseley dealt with these four points in detail. He next spoke of the movement to render in their original form, and not by the organ alone in church services, the works written expressly for orchestral accompaniments. The favour with which this movement was being regarded led him to hope that the time had arrived when he might venture to propose a scheme that he had wished to make public—namely, the establishment of church orchestras on the same footing as church choirs. The orchestra and voluntary choir would be available on all festivals of the church and also on special occasions as determined by the authorities, and they would receive regular and systematic training in order that, by their aid, our musical services should be rendered in a much more legitimate and perfect manner than was the case at the present time. Such a scheme he maintained was perfectly practicable, and the use of musical instruments was justified in Holy Scripture. Mr. Riseley read many letters from bishops and others in favour of the scheme. The Bishop of Durham wrote: "The subject is one to which I have been led to give some attention at various times, and I have gladly expressed my opinion that on special occasions an orchestra may be used with excellent effect in church services. I believe there is scope for a very large development of orchestral church music. More than twenty years ago I called attention to the familiar fact of the origin of oratorios." He (Mr. Riseley) suggested that meetings of the clergy and laity, including both professional and amateur musicians, should be held in each large centre to consider the necessary preliminaries, and in concluding he suggested also that they should make application for an audience with Her Majesty the Queen and members of the Royal Family to gain their sympathy and support and take steps to apply for an annual State grant for each large centre.

Mr. Ebenezer Prout, in moving a vote of thanks to the Chairman for his paper, said he cordially agreed with the objects Mr. Riseley had in view. The foundation of local orchestras all over the country was certainly one of the best means that could be taken to promote the cause of their art in this country. Mr. W. H. Cummings, at some length, contended that the scheme proposed by Mr. Riseley was a terrible falling off from the scheme propounded last year. Mr. Riseley said they were not a musical nation, and they never would be a musical nation until they had local orchestras in every centre. That was why the Continent was in advance of them.

Mr. H. C. Banister delivered an address on "Some of the Pleasures of Delicate Musical Analysis."

In the afternoon a visit was paid to the Cathedral, where Dr. Ions explained the grand organ, and a Recital was given by Mr. J. M. Preston, Organist of St. George's, Jesmond. In the evening there was a Concert at the Town Hall, the programme consisting of compositions by members of the Society.

On Friday Dr. W. J. Ions took the chair and read a paper on "Some Anomalies of Notation." Mr. S. Reay, of Newark, then read a paper on "Northumberland Ballad Music." He said: To the abundant store of English ballad lore and ballad music the bards of the North country had contributed very largely. It was most natural that this should be so, for in the North and on the Borders events were continually happening which afforded fitting subjects on which the poet minstrels of the time could expatiate. They would scarcely fail to notice that the melodies of the more ancient of those ballads were founded on the old Church modes. This, amongst others, was the case with the humorous song "The mode o' wooing," in which there was a whole phrase identical with one in the Latin hymn "Audi benigne conditor," and there was in other respects a general resemblance between the two melodies. The examples were mainly selected from the collection of old ballads and songs published a few years ago by the Newcastle Antiquarian Society, under the title of "Northern Minstrelsy," and so ably edited by Dr. Bruce and Mr. John Stokoe.

Dr. Bruce read a paper on Northumbrian Pipes, illustrated by tunes on the instrument, played by Mr. Todd; and the afternoon meeting and a banquet held in the evening concluding the proceedings.

SIR CHARLES HALLÉ'S CONCERTS.

When the Manchester Conductor first brought his orchestra and chorus to London, nearly twelve years ago, for the performance of Berlioz's "Faust," the public received the work with indifference. Nothing daunted, however, Sir Charles Hallé persevered, and eventually with such success that "Faust" has become one of the most popular pieces in the repertory of choral societies. Metropolitan amateurs may almost be said to know it by heart, and the trouble and expense of again bringing the Lancashire choristers to London for the performances of the 8th and 9th ult. might, therefore, have been spared. They are a fine body of voices, and they sing with remarkable spirit and precision; but we missed the perfect refinement and exquisite light and shade to which Mr. Barnby has accustomed us at the Albert Hall. On the other hand, the orchestra was beyond all praise. Sir Charles Hallé has the score at his fingers' ends, and every detail in Berlioz's rich orchestration was brought out with the utmost clearness. The marvellously brilliant rendering of the March caused an irresistible demand for its repetition, and the mocking Serenade was also encored. With regard to the solos, Mr. and Mrs. Henschel were as usual admirable in the parts of Mephistopheles and Marguerite respectively, and Mr. Barton McGuckin replaced Mr. Edward Lloyd at short notice, singing the somewhat thankless part with commendable care and conscientiousness.

The next Concert, on the 22nd ult., was purely orchestral, the Symphony being Brahms's genial work in D (No. 2). This was excellently rendered and the orchestra was heard to even greater advantage in Saint-Saëns's clever and showy Symphonic Poem, "Le Rouet d'Omphale." Cherubini's Overture to "Faniska" and a Suite of Dvorák were originally included in the programme, but for these Wagner's so-called Funeral March from "Götterdämmerung" and the "Siegfried" Idyll were substituted, doubtless for good and sufficient reasons. Another alteration had also to be made, Sir Charles Hallé feeling himself too unwell to play Beethoven's Concerto in G for which he was announced. In this emergency Lady Hallé kindly consented to play Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, which she did with so much brilliancy that it cannot be said that the audience suffered by the change.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

There was but a feeble assemblage of amateurs when these performances were resumed on Monday, the 11th ult., the prevailing sickness being the only reason that could be alleged for the number of absentees, for the entertainment was certainly not wanting in interest. It was Mr. Piatti's first appearance this season, and the esteemed virtuoso had brought with him a new Violoncello and Pianoforte Sonata, the fruit of his leisure hours in December last. This is the fourth work of its class from the same pen produced at the Popular Concerts during the last seven years. The first Sonata in C was heard on January 5, 1885; the second in D, on April 5 of the following year; and the third in F, on January 28, 1889. The latest example is entitled "Sonata Idillica," a very suitable appellation, for the style of the music is gentle and flowing rather than energetic, and the elegant vein of melody which prevails from the first bar is never interrupted by episodes of a brusque or agitated nature. The first and third movements in G major are separated by a brief Intermezzo in E minor, in the scherzando style. The most important work in each of the three movements is allotted to the violoncello, but the details for both instruments are marked by extreme refinement and polish. Rendered to perfection by the composer and Miss Fanny Davies, the Sonata was received with much favour, three recalls testifying to the satisfaction of the audience. Miss Davies gave an extremely brilliant performance of Mendelssohn's Capriccio in F sharp minor (Op. 5), and the instrumental portion of the programme was completed by Mozart's Divertimento in B flat, for strings and horns, which had already been performed this season at the Mozart Centenary Concert, and Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio in D (Op. 70, No. 1). Mr. Brereton brought forward Handel's very florid air "Furibando spira il vento" from "Partenope," and sang it with artistic skill.

The first Saturday performance of the year was devoted to the works of Beethoven, the instrumental pieces being the "Rasoumowski" Quartet in F (Op. 59, No. 1), the Pianoforte Sonata, familiarly known as the "Moonlight," of which Mdlle. Janotha was the executant, and the ever welcome Septet, the performers in which were Madame Néruda and Messrs. Straus, Egerton, Borsdorf, Wotton, Reynolds, and Piatti. Miss Fillunger sang in her most artistic manner the songs "Know'st thou the land" and "Penitence."

Schubert's Octet, performed in the usual manner—that is to say, with a pause between the third and fourth movements—occupied the central position in the programme of the following Monday and was rendered by the same artists as Beethoven's Septet, with the addition of Mr. L. Ries. The Concert commenced with Rubinstein's popular Sonata in D, for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 18), played by Miss Janotha and Signor Piatti, and the Polish pianist brought it to a conclusion with Chopin's Scherzo in B minor (Op. 20). Mr. Charles Tinney being unable to appear as the vocalist, Mr. Norman Salmond sang in his place, his selection of Wallace's song "The Bellringer" being peculiarly appropriate under the circumstances.

Formal record is alone required of the Concert on Saturday, the 23rd ult. Miss Fanny Davies and Signor Piatti repeated the latter's "Sonata Idillica" for pianoforte and violoncello, and the other concerted works were Schumann's Quartet in A minor (Op. 41, No. 1) and Schubert's Trio in B flat (Op. 99). Miss Davies gave three of Schumann's trifling pieces for pedal pianoforte, and Mrs. Helen Trust was very successful in two of Arne's nearly forgotten songs, "Gentle youth" and "The Traveller Benighted."

On the evening of the 25th ult. a disappointment awaited the audience. Brahms's new vocal Quartets and Gipsy Songs were to have been repeated, but Mrs. Henschel was unfortunately too unwell to appear, and Mr. Henschel gave instead Loewe's magnificent Lieder, "Der Erl-könig" and "Henry the Fowler," delighting his hearers with his incomparably fine vocalisation. The concerted works were Mendelssohn's Quartet in A minor (Op. 13) and Schumann's Pianoforte Quartet in E flat (Op. 47), Miss Janotha played Chopin's Polonaise in F sharp minor (Op. 44), and Madame Néruda two movements from Franz Ries's Violin Suite in G (Op. 34), an encore being exacted in each instance.

WIND INSTRUMENT CHAMBER MUSIC SOCIETY.

Not the slightest reproach of inappropriateness as regards selection could be made against the programme of the third Concert of the season at the Royal Academy of Music, on Friday, the 22nd ult. The pianoforte was the only instrument that did not agree with the title of the Society, but as by its means an English composition figured on the list of four pieces it certainly did not prove an obstacle to the success of the scheme. The work referred to was Mr. John F. Barnett's Grand Sonata in G minor (Op. 41), for flute and pianoforte, with Mr. W. L. Barrett and the composer as interpreters. The flautist's part is the more showy, having some exceptionally brilliant passages in the final Allegro, whilst the Andante movement consists of a lovely melody for this instrument. Mr. Barrett's skill had ample scope, and not a point was missed. Mr. Barnett of course played the pianoforte part with all requisite judgment, and after being complimented as an executant received the honours due to the composer of a thoroughly effective work. The interest of Reicha's Wind Quintet in G major was well sustained by Mr. Barrett (flute), Mr. E. W. Davies (oboe), Mr. Egerton (clarinet), Mr. Busby (horn), and Mr. W. Wotton (bassoon). The same performers, with the addition of Mr. H. F. Sharpe (pianoforte), did justice to Ludwig Thuile's Sextet (Op. 6), a melodious and excellently balanced work of four movements, of which the Larghetto (E flat) and Gavotte (in G) are particularly pleasing. Though placed last in the programme it made such an eminently favourable impression as to keep the audience in their seats until the last bar had been played. The other piece was Glinka's Trio Pathètique, for clarinet, bassoon, and pianoforte, the brief movements of which received their fair share of attention.

MR. DANNREUTHER'S CONCERTS.

Although Pianoforte Recitals and Chamber Concerts have increased enormously within the last few years, artists are so prone to confine themselves within a narrow repertory that many master works, especially for pianoforte solo, continue to lie neglected, while a few favourite compositions of Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, and Schumann are repeated again and again with a frequency that becomes irritating. The programmes of Mr. Dannreuther's Concerts in his commodious music-room at 12, Orme Square, on the 5th and 19th ult., served to remind us of these unfortunate facts. On the first occasion the admirable pianist presented Bach's wonderful Thirty Variations on a theme in Sarabande form (written for Johann Theophilus Goldberg, a gifted virtuoso and one of Bach's latest pupils), composed for a harpsichord with two manuals. The series, according to Spitta, "exhibits such a wealth of invention and ingenuity that this work alone would be sufficient to make him immortal. His clavier technique is displayed in its most brilliant light, and in quite a new way, in consequence of the freest and most productive use of the two manuals." Much more than this might be said concerning these Variations, in which foreshadowings of the methods of Beethoven and even of Schumann are observable. At the second Concert Mr. Dannreuther performed Schumann's remarkable Sonata in F minor (Op. 14), or "Concert sans orchestre," as the composer described it. While the Sonatas in F sharp minor and G minor are heard tolerably often, the intermediate work is generally neglected, probably on account of the stupendous difficulties of the final movement. It is rendering Mr. Dannreuther the barest justice to say that in both these monumental compositions he displayed technical skill almost unsurpassable, and we cannot but express regret that he does not more frequently claim attention in the public concert-room. Concerning the general programme on the dates above named, it need only be said that they were both interesting, the first containing a Pianoforte Quartet in E flat by Dvorák (Op. 87) and the second a series of three "Spring Fancies" for viola and pianoforte by E. Kreuz (Op. 9), which on other occasions may obtain more attention than it is now possible to bestow upon them.

HIGHBURY PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The enterprising Association over which Mr. Gilbert H. Betjemann holds potent and valuable sway increased the debt of gratitude which amateurs already owed to it, by producing Dr. Hubert Parry's "De Profundis," for the first time within the Metropolitan radius, at the Concert given at the Highbury Athenæum on the 18th ult. When this work was introduced at the Hereford Festival in September last it was immediately hailed as a masterpiece, alike for the splendid mastery over all the technicalities of musical science which it evinces from first to last, and also for the command of feeling and expression which is not always met with in combination with contrapuntal skill of the first grade. It would, of course, be unjustifiable to assert that Dr. Parry possesses genius sufficient to entitle him to be measured with Bach and Beethoven; but certainly in this setting of the 130th Psalm we discover qualities rarely found in union, and as gratitude is defined as a lively sense of favours to come, Dr. Parry will be expected to maintain the lofty standard he set for himself in this latest emanation of his undoubted genius. A choral work which includes writing for three choirs of four voices, two choirs of six voices, and four choirs of three voices, necessarily demands patient study even from the ablest executants, and we are awarding the Highbury choralists the highest praise it is possible to bestow in saying that they attacked and vanquished all the most arduous passages in the "De Profundis" with apparent ease, scarcely any hesitation being noticeable from first to last, though the pace adopted in the final chorus, "Et ipse redimet Israel," was perilously quick. Considering that the orchestra consisted mainly of amateurs, it is also entitled to share in the commendation, for, making allowance for some roughness, the intricate accompaniments were very ably rendered. The "De Profundis" was preceded by an orchestral selection from the third act of "Die Meistersinger," which went well under the bâton of Mr. G. R. Betjemann, and was followed by Mr. F. Corder's bright and picturesque Cantata "The Bridal of Triermain," which some regard as the composer's most successful achievement. In this the choir and orchestra were also heard to advantage. Due justice was rendered to the solo parts by Miss Anna Williams, Miss Eleanor Rees, Mr. Henry Piercy, and Mr. Brereton, although the first and third in the order named were singing at very brief notice in place of Miss Carlotta Elliot and Mr. Charles Chilley, who were absent through illness.

FINSBURY CHORAL ASSOCIATION.

A feature of the programme of the interesting Concert given by the Finsbury Choral Association at the Holloway Hall, on the 21st ult., was the performance for the first time of a setting by Dr. J. F. Bridge of the poem "The Inchcape Rock." It may at once be said that the work, short and not to any degree elaborate in construction, will at once meet with a large share of popular favour from the fact that it is a bold and vigorous setting of the well-known legend. There is no attempt at intricacy, and the composer has said what he has had to say in a plain, straightforward manner. The ballad is highly effective and an attractive vein of melody runs throughout the whole; the means at command for producing local colouring have been well utilised, and Dr. Bridge has reproduced the wash of the waves in a most realistic fashion, whil. the bell, the centre of interest, has not been forgotten, being represented by a single note upon the horn, which, whether played in conjunction with a pneumatic tube or not, is remarkably telling in effect. The vigour of the vocal parts and the character shown in the orchestral portion at once stamp the composition as one which is likely to share and augment the popularity of the poem. The performance of the work by all concerned—when due allowance has been made for the havoc created in the ranks of both singers and players by the prevailing epidemic—was remarkably good, and spoke well for the skill and intelligence of Mr. C. J. Dale, the trainer and Conductor of the Association. The ballad was conducted by the composer, and the reception of both was most hearty. The interest, great as it was, did not cease with this number of the programme, for the singing of the choir of several part-songs, including Prout's "Hail to the chief," Eaton Faning's "The Miller's wooing," Leslie's "The daylight is fading," and Macfarren's "The hunt is up," was praiseworthy in the extreme. The orchestra, an earnest body of players led by Mr. Halfpenny, did much useful work, while the approval with which the efforts of Madame Clara Samuell and Mr. Ffrangcon Davies as vocalists were met was unbounded. There was a large audience, and the progress of musical art in this part of London at least would seem to be followed with a good deal of interest and enthusiasm.

ORATORIO IN ST. PAUL'S.

A great portion of Mendelssohn's early Oratorio was, as usual, given on Monday afternoon, the 25th ult., as the Anthem at the Dedication Festival in St. Paul's Cathedral. The Order of Service was the same as that sanctioned for many years by Dean Church—viz., the ordinary course of Evening Prayer to the place prescribed for the anthem. The Proper Psalms of the day—cx., cxii., and cxlvii.—were sung to chants by Crotch, Lamb, and Sir John Stainer, with organ accompaniment only, until the Glorias, where the full orchestra was effectively employed. The music for the Canticles was that in A of Dr. Martin. The selection from "St. Paul" proceeded from the Overture to the impressive scene of the Conversion, and comprised some of the finest choral numbers of the work, such as "Rise up, arise," "O great is the depth," the always acceptable "How lovely are the messengers," and of course the chorale "Sleepers, awake." These were steadily given by a large body of singers, conducted by Dr. Martin, with Mr. Hodge at the organ. The principal soloists were Messrs. Kenningham, Fryer, Kempton, and Grice, and Masters Dean and Abbot. In the morning Dean Gregory introduced orchestral accompaniment into the Choral Communion, a numerous band located in the choir galleries assisting in the arrangement of Weber's Mass in E flat and in Gounod's "O Salutaris Hostia." The Cathedral in the afternoon was well filled.

NEW SHAKESPEARIAN MUSIC.

The difficult task of writing music to accompany a poetic drama cannot be spoken of as one which offers much temptation to composers, especially if they belong to those who "yearn" for appreciation. Nothing more discouraging than the attitude of English audiences towards such productions can well be imagined. The majority talk while the Overture and Entr'actes are being played, and those who listen—after a fashion—seldom give the smallest token of approval, be the composition or its performance ever so good. The average playgoer, in fact, seems to regard music as something to be endured rather than enjoyed. Surely those managers who, with enlightened liberality, provide good music, might also insert a notice in their programmes urging the audiences to listen to it. As things are now, the music written by Mr. Henschel for "Hamlet" at the Haymarket Theatre, and that by Mr. Edward German for "Henry VIII." at the Lyceum, may be described as far too good, if not for its purpose, then for the majority of its hearers. A quadrille would probably please them better.

Mr. Henschel's music consists of five pieces—viz., a Prelude, "Hamlet"; a Danish March, in the Trio of which two national melodies are utilised; an Entr'acte "Ophelia"; an Allegro impetuoso; a sort of Funeral March, called "Ophelia's Death"; a Pastorale to precede Act V., and short snatches of melo-dramatic music. The five pieces which will, it is highly probable, become popular in the Concert-room, are, though modern in style and treatment, perfectly clear in form; and the rare combination of significance and beauty has been attained in the melodic material. The Prelude, the "Ophelia" movement, and the Allegro impetuoso are founded on representative themes, two being devoted to Hamlet and depicting his irresolution and his passionate desire for action, and the third suggesting the loving nature of Ophelia.

Mr. Edward German's music is less introspective, less psychical than Mr. Henschel's—less "symphonic," let us say, to speak technically. The character, locality, and epoch of the play naturally lend themselves to music of a straightforward "Old English" character. This our young English composer has supplied with a liberal hand, the dance music being of a particularly "taking" kind. The Entr'actes, however, and certain short passages which occur as the scenes are changed—this, by the way, is done with marvellous skill—touch the tragic note of the play; they have a rich sombre colour that is in admirable keeping. Mr. German has set "Orpheus with his lute" very happily as a trio for female voices, which was sung with great charm by the Misses Kate Lewis, Lancaster, and Minnie Robinson. The Procession March in Act IV. is effective and should become popular. It should be said that in both cases the orchestra—under the direction of Carl Armbruster at the Haymarket and of Mr. Meredith Ball at the Lyceum—is thoroughly efficient.

"THE MOUNTEBANKS" AT THE LYRIC.

For any reflection of the tragic circumstances under which Messrs. W. S. Gilbert and Alfred Cellier's comic opera "The Mountebanks" (produced on the 4th ult.) was completed, the investigator must seek elsewhere than in the score. No more in the orchestration than in the vocal portion is there a suspicion of the fate that awaited the composer almost ere the ink had dried upon the paper. The music is as bright and joyous as though Cellier throughout had been in the best of health and spirits, and as if, having reached the height of his ambition by writing a work in association with Mr. Gilbert, he had felt confident it would not be the final fruit of their partnership. Albeit quite as merry in tone as the comicality of the author's lines demand, the melodies are unvaryingly dainty and refined, whilst the instrumentation happily illustrates the dramatic situation. A few of the numbers—a brigand's song with the refrain "High, Jerry, ho!" a dancing trio, and a duet for a couple of automata, "If our action's stiff and crude" (each verse ending with the direction to "Put a penny in the slot!")—so immediately catch the ear that their future popularity is beyond question. Not often does a comic opera appeal with such force, in equal degree, to the advocate of taste and elegance and to the patron who asks for nothing more than pretty tunes. The dialogue bristles with those odd turns of expression in which Mr. Gilbert has no rival, and genuine fun accompanies the working-out of a story dealing with the effects of an elixir making all who partake of it the individuals they for the moment pretend to be. Mirth-provoking, to an exceptional degree, are the jerky movements of a dismal clown and a dancing girl when turned into wax figures that have to be periodically wound up, and the involuntary change of the brigands into monks. The droller characters are sustained with abundant spirit by Mr. Monkhouse and Miss Aida Jenoure (as the automata), Mr. Lionel Brough, and Mr. Frank Wyatt, and the vocal ability of Miss Geraldine Ulmar, Miss Lucille Saunders, Miss Eva Moore, and Mr. J. Robertson is effectively manifested. Band and chorus are good, and Mr. Ivan Caryll justifies his appointment as Conductor of a work that in every way must be regarded as satisfactory.

OBITUARY.

Singular pathos attaches to the death of Mr. Alfred Cellier on the eve of the production of the work which it might have been hoped would have proved one of the greatest triumphs of his life. He was born December 1, 1844, became a choir boy at the Chapel Royal, St. James's, and later, Organist at Blackheath, Belfast, and St. Alban's, Holborn. In 1871 he was appointed Musical Director at the Prince's Theatre, Manchester, and began his career as a composer by the production of a comic opera, "The Sultan of Mocha," in 1874. From 1877 to 1880 he was Conductor at the Savoy Theatre, where he produced several operettas, among which may be mentioned "The Spectre Knight" (libretto by Mr. Albery) and "Mrs. Jarramie's Genie," in which his brother François collaborated. In 1875 he wrote an opera, "The Tower of London," and in the following year "Nell Gwynne" to a book by Mr. Farnie, which, however, was never produced. The music was used up in "Dorothy," his most popular work, produced at the Gaiety in 1886, and which had a "run" of over 900 nights. This was followed by "Doris" in 1889 and the "Mountebanks" just produced. He also wrote a Cantata founded on Gray's Elegy, produced at Leeds in 1883, a Suite for Orchestra, and a considerable number of songs. Mr. Cellier died on December 28, at Torrington Square.

Mr. Thomas Henry Weist Hill, Principal of the Guildhall School of Music, died at his residence in South Kensington, on Christmas Day. He was born in London January 3, 1828, and learnt music at the Royal Academy, where he became King's Scholar. After making several tours as a violinist, and playing in the orchestra at Drury Lane, he was chosen in 1874 to conduct the music at the then newly-opened Alexandra Palace; and both here and a little later (in 1878-9) in conducting the Orchestral Concerts of Madame Viard-Louis, he displayed great ability and enterprise in the introduction of new works. To him London owes the first performance of Goetz's Symphony, of Svendsen's First Symphony, of Bizet's Suite from "L'Arlesienne," of Massenet's "Scènes Pittoresques," and many other works, particularly of the French School. In 1880 he was chosen the first Principal of the new Guildhall School of Music, and the enormous growth of the School is the best tribute to his energy and ability. Latterly, increasing ill-health almost incapacitated him for work. He has written several pieces for violin; but perhaps the only piece of his which can be called popular is a Gavotte for strings, afterwards published for pianoforte as "The Pompadour."

Many concert-goers of former years will hear with regret of the death of Mr. John Baptist Zerbini, who died in Australia, on November 28 of last year, at the age of 52. The deceased joined the orchestra of Drury Lane Theatre as a violinist when he was only 17, and some ten years later became a member of the regular Monday Popular Quartet party, in which he played the viola, afterwards being selected to officiate as accompanist. In 1885 he went to Australia, and became organist of a church at Melbourne, in which city he died.

Baron Bodog d'Orczy, who died in London on the 20th ult., at the age of 56, was a member of a distinguished Hungarian family. Having a strong natural taste for music, he was driven by pecuniary losses to adopt music as a profession, studied at Brussels, and eventually settled in London. His opera, "Il Rinnegato," produced at Her Majesty's Theatre in July, 1881, was, we believe, the only work by him which was brought to public performance, but he leaves two other operas in manuscript.

Miss Annie Richardson, who has been for several years before the public of Liverpool as a very excellent contralto, succumbed, after a lengthy illness, on the 15th ult. The deceased had been a leading member of the choirs of St. Francis Xavier, Liverpool, and St. Mary's, Birkenhead, and was well-known on the Concert platform.

On the 23rd ult. one of the most promising young professors in Liverpool, John Sebastian Evans, was called away. He was but twenty-three years of age and a clever pianist, violinist, and all-round musician. He would have been the natural successor to the long established connection of his father, Mr. John Evans.

The death is announced, on the 10th ult., at Berlin, of the veteran German musician and critical author, Heinrich Dorn. He was born at Königsberg, in 1804, and received his musical instruction at Berlin, where he studied under Ludwig Berger and Zelter. As early as 1826 his opera "Die Rolandsknappen" was produced at the Königstädtische Theater of Berlin, which was followed by a number of other operatic works from his pen, amongst them one entitled "Die Nibelungen," which met with much success at Berlin and elsewhere, and the overture to which is still occasionally to be met with in German Concert programmes. Dorn was successively Capellmeister at Hamburg, Riga, and Cologne, before he succeeded Nicolai in the conductorship of the Berlin Opera, in 1849; a position from which he retired with honours in 1869. While at Cologne, in 1845, he founded a "Musikschule," which was soon after converted into the well known Conservatorium of that town. Dorn was also for a short period the instructor of Schumann in counterpoint. As a critical writer and teacher he was highly esteemed and in full activity almost up to the last.

We have also to record the death, on December 30, at Prague, of Arnold Vogel, director of the Sofia Academy, and Professor at the Conservatorium, aged seventy-one.

On December 31, at Leipzig, Helène Jadassohn, esteemed vocal professor, aged forty-eight.

On the 2nd ult., at Milan, Giovanni Paloschi, editor of the Annuario Musicale and other publications connected with musical art.

On the 6th ult., at Milan, Antonio Sangiovanni, professor at the Conservatoire.

On the 6th ult., at Gera, Wilhelm Tschirch, Court-capellmeister, popular composer of male quartets, aged seventy-three.

On the 7th ult., at San Remo, Elisabeth von Herzogenberg, gifted pianist, wife of the composer Heinrich von Herzogenberg, aged forty-four.

On the 8th ult., at Milan, Clementina Bartolini, once a much esteemed operatic singer, aged seventy-six.

On the 12th ult., at Nemours, Jean Baptiste Marie Chollet, once a celebrated operatic tenor, who created the titular parts in "Fra Diavolo" and "Zampa," aged ninety-three.

The Choral and Orchestral Association (a title that sadly needs abbreviating), under Mr. G. J. Halford's direction, gave a performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" in the Town Hall on the 23rd ult. Although the standard of excellence is not that of the Festival Choral Society, still, with good local principals—Miss Mabel Grove, Miss Nellie Pritchard, Mr. Hamlyn Crimp, and Mr. Williams Evans—the Society gave a good rendering of Mendelssohn's work, which was thoroughly appreciated by the audience. Mr. C. W. Perkins, at the organ, gave valuable assistance. On the afternoon of the same day Mr. Perkins gave an Organ Recital in the Town Hall, playing, among other pieces, Handel's Dead March in "Saul" and the Marche Funèbre of Chopin, In Memoriam the late Duke of Clarence.

The great musical event of the month of February will be the performance of Professor Stanford's Oratorio "Eden," by the Festival Choral Society, on the 4th inst. This is looked forward to with the greatest interest in musical circles.

Mr. W. G. Halliley gave a good miscellaneous Concert in the Town Hall on the 2nd ult. The vocalists were Miss Carrie Curnow, Miss Agnes Johnson, Mr. Musgrove Tufnail, and our popular alto, Mr. H. R. Bickley; and instrumental solos were given by a clever young pianist, Mr. G. H. Manton, and by Mr. J. H. Cockerill, harpist.

On the 4th ult. Mr. J. W. Turner opened a season of opera in English at the Grand Theatre. So far the works performed are all such old friends as "Maritana," "The Bohemian Girl," "The Lily of Killarney," and so forth. Mozart's "Don Giovanni" was produced with success on the 15th ult., and on the 18th Bellini's "La Sonnambula" was revived after a lapse of six years. Among the new members of the Company Miss Amelia Sinico, Miss Annie Roberts, and Miss Amy Martin have met with success, while our Birmingham friend, Mr. John Ridding, has made great advances as a stage-singer.

The second of Mr. Stockley's Orchestral Concerts took place in the Town Hall, on the 21st ult. Handel's Dead March in "Saul" was played at the commencement, as a tribute of respect to the memory of the late Duke of Clarence, and mourning was worn by many of the audience. The principal piece of the programme was Spohr's Symphony "The Power of Sound," which was well given, the violoncello solo in the Andantino being beautifully played by Mr. C. Ould. New to Birmingham were the Gavotte and Minuet, by C. Lee Williams; an Andante, entitled "Sleep," by Dr. Joseph Parry; and a Nocturne, by J. D. Davis, a local composer. All were well performed and cordially received. Miss Marian McKenzie and Mr. Edwin Houghton were the vocalists. Miss McKenzie sang Raff's "Ave Maria" and a quaint and pleasing song, "At Parting," by Jacob Girtley. Mr. Houghton made a most successful début here, singing Gounod's "Lend me your aid" in brilliant style.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

Several public schools Concerts which took place at Christmas, too late for inclusion in last month's issue of The Musical Times, are the only musical events that have occurred for more than a month. Clifton College, the Grammar School, and the Cathedral School were among the institutions where Concerts were given, and the character of the performances was such as to win general approval. In our large public schools the tonal art is being studied with ever increasing zeal and assiduity, and the degree of proficiency increases every year. Not only are there Choral Societies attached to the three institutions named, but orchestral music has long been studied there with encouraging results.

The Ladies' Night of the Bristol Madrigal Society was fixed for the 14th ult., and an exceptionally good programme of compositions, almost entirely by English writers, was prepared; but the lamented death of the Duke of Clarence occurring on the morning of that day, the Concert was postponed indefinitely.

At present active preparations are being made by the numerous choral and orchestral societies for forthcoming performances. Music itself is in a most healthy state in Bristol, but, unfortunately, the financial results of Concerts given by local associations are not encouraging. The short series of Monday Popular Concerts has again resulted in a loss, and once more the guarantors will probably be called on to make good the deficit.

Changes for the better have been made by the new Dean of Bristol, Dr. Pigou, although he has only been here a month. For years the state of things at the Cathedral was anything but inspiriting, the services were of a humdrum character, and they were attended by sparse congregations. Dean Pigou, who is himself a good amateur musician, has already wrought wonderful changes. The internal arrangements of the Cathedral are brighter, the musical services are more ornate, and life and energy take the place of apathy and listlessness. These things gladden the hearts of amateur musicians and those who have an interest in the Mother Church of the diocese.

The paper read by Mr. Riseley at the National Society of Professional Musicians' Conference has created some stir in his native city, where he has done so much to foster a love for orchestral music. In regard to his idea to form Cathedral orchestras, circumstances are certainly in his favour for giving a practical demonstration of his notion in Bristol, and there is every reason to believe a start will soon be made. So great has the musical awakening already been at our Cathedral in a short time, and so hopeful does every prospect seem, that one is warranted in making the statement that very soon our Cathedral will be the busy centre of musical life which will have an exhilarating effect upon the whole community of the Western city. Indeed, it can be asserted with some degree of authority that popular week-day recitals like those at Gloucester will shortly be established; that performances of Oratorios by a large choir, with the aid of an orchestral band, will occasionally be given in the Mother Church; and that in all probability the sacred works hereafter included in the Festival programmes may be unfolded therein.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Messrs. Paterson's Orchestral Concerts have practically occupied the field last month, and it is pleasant to record that the performances have been very successful and largely attended. On the 4th ult. Mr. César Thomson made his first appearance in Scotland. Mr. Thomson, however, had just recovered from a long and severe attack of influenza, and there was a general agreement to reserve judgment until he should appear under happier conditions. The charming Intermezzo from the "Cavalleria Rusticana" was also played for the first time in Scotland the same night and won an encore. The Symphony was Schumann's "Rhenish," and the programme closed with an excellent and spirited performance of the "Tannhäuser" Overture. On the 11th ult. the first part of the Concert was devoted to the works of Beethoven. Overtures to "Leonora" (Nos. 1 and 3) were an interesting study as well as a pleasure to hear, and if the Ninth Symphony (instrumental portion) left something to be desired in delicacy of treatment, it was played with ample vigour. Mendelssohn's "Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage" and an Adagio for strings, by Bach, followed, and two of Dvorák's Slavonian Dances made a bright finale. Madame Belle Cole sang "In Questa Tomba," "Creation's Hymn," and a composition by Gounod. On the 18th ult. the Edinburgh public had an opportunity of renewing their acquaintanceship with Mr. Fred. Lamond, who, by dint of perfect technique, tremendous power, and a thorough appreciation of the beauties of Tschaikowsky's second Concerto, won enthusiastic applause from audience, orchestra, and from Mr. Manns himself. Mr. Lamond chose for his solo Liszt's "Norma" Fantasia. A selection from Gluck's works, Overture to "Iphigenia in Aulis" and the Ballet music from "Orfeo," was warmly received. MacCunn's interesting "Land of the Mountain and the Flood" Overture brought the programme to a close.

The Reception given to the Professor of Music by the Edinburgh Society of Musicians was an unqualified success. A large and very representative company assembled in the Waterloo Rooms, including the Lord Chief Justice, Sir Arthur Mitchell, Sir R. Murdoch Smith, Sir Douglas Maclagan; Sir Thomas Clark and Sir John Boyd, former Lord Provosts; many of the Professors in the University, the most important legal dignitaries, and other prominent citizens. Letters of apology, most of them containing expressions of the warmest interest, were received from the Lord Provost, the Marquis of Huntly, Lord Stormonth Darling, and others. Mr. Lichtenstein, President, welcomed Professor Niecks in the name of the Society in a happy speech which dealt with the change in Scotland's attitude to music and musicians since they hanged Rogers on Lauder Bridge and assassinated Rizzio in Holyrood. The President said that the executioners now were the Press. He dealt with some of the difficulties in the way of the new Professor, and said that far from being a bed of roses it was more than probable that several Scotch thistles would be found in the chair to disturb his peace. He deprecated, in matters connected with art, the introduction of Chauvinism, which, under the name of patriotism, too often descended to parochialism. He went on to quote some of Mr. Niecks's more striking testimonials and to enumerate some of his qualifications. A testimonial from Dr. Langhans, Mr. Niecks's old professor and the translator of his own pupil's "Life of Chopin," was particularly interesting. Professor Niecks on rising to reply was enthusiastically received. He referred to the different views of the scope and aim of the Reid Chair which have been so freely expressed and discussed, and promising to deal with the subject in more detail in his inaugural address, he merely stated that he was not in favour of any scheme which proposed to make the Reid Endowment responsible for a music school or a local orchestra. He pointed out that not only enthusiasm, but men and money were absolute necessities for any such undertaking as the establishment of a music school. His first duty was to his University as its professor, but he declared himself not only willing, but eager in any way and in any capacity to assist in any proposal to further the cause of music in Edinburgh and Scotland.

The Annual Reid Concert is to be given this year as usual on the founder's birthday, the 13th inst., when Professor Niecks will himself conduct what he hopes will prove the nucleus and beginning of a local resident orchestra. The programme will be drawn from works of the eighteenth century, and Miss Macintyre and Mr. Max Pauer are engaged as soloists.

In Dundee University College, on the 12th ult., Mr. Franklin Petersen gave a Lecture on "Lohengrin" as an introduction to a double course of Lectures on the History of Music. The Lecture was illustrated by Mrs. Petersen, Miss Lichtenstein, and the Lecturer.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The local records for the past month are concerned exclusively with the Choral and Orchestral Concerts, as it is only after their work is brought to a close that the smaller societies have a fair chance of appealing to the musical public. Never less than twice a week, the amateur can always count upon an excellent bill of fare at St. Andrew's Hall during the Choral Union short season. Call it, if you like, a monopoly. The possession of the field is, all the same, good, as it has, indeed, been for many years past. Beginning with the customary New Year's Day performance of "The Messiah," Mr. Joseph Bradley's choristers gave an excellent account of themselves, and there was no less satisfaction with Mesdames Clara Samuell and Belle Cole, Messrs. Durward Lely and Foli as the soloists. On the 14th ult. the choir migrated to the City Hall, where another performance of Handel's immortal work was given for the convenience of our East End friends. Several times the Society has drawn upon the pathetic strains of the Dead March from "Saul"; but it may safely be said that on no previous occasion was the solemn composition listened to with more profound feeling. Every heart seemed to be with the bereaved ones at Sandringham, and though there was no official intimation, the large audience rose at the first bar of the great death song. At St. Andrew's Hall, on the evening of the 16th ult., the March was played at the opening of the seventh Popular Concert. Here a sympathetic chord was also struck. The audience evidently looked for a tribute to the deceased Duke's memory, and the response was impressive to a degree.

Briefly reviewing the work for the past month accomplished by our leading musical organisation, it includes performances of Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's Benedictus for violin and orchestra, Beethoven's C minor Symphony, Dvorák's Slavonian Dances (Nos. 2 and 4 from the second suite), Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique, and Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony. Mr. César Thomson showed his artistic perception in one of Wieniawski's Violin Concertos. The "Beethoven Night," on the 12th ult., was well worth remembering, for the Bonn master's Overtures "Leonora" (No. 1 and No. 3) were in the programme. We had also the Choral Symphony, and a remarkably good performance of the exacting work has to be recorded. The soloists were Mesdames Fillunger and Sarah Berry, Messrs. E. Houghton and Grice. Reverting to the seventh Popular Concert for a moment, Schubert's colossal Symphony, the so-called "No. 10," had the place of honour in the programme. Though of course the great work has been heard here before, it never had a finer rendering than on the evening just named, and at the close the Conductor had one of the heartiest recalls he has ever experienced hereabout. The programme otherwise contained a selection from Raff's "Lenore" Symphony, the Prelude to "Parsifal," and Mr. Plunket Greene sang Hans Sachs's Monologue, as also a trio of Hungarian melodies, to the satisfaction of his audience. On the 19th ult. the programme comprised Tschaikowsky's first Pianoforte Concerto for Mr. Frederic Lamond, Haydn's "Oxford" Symphony, and Dr. Mackenzie's ballad for orchestra, "La Belle Dame sans Merci." For the 26th ult. a Wagner night was announced, and on the 28th Mr. Hamish MacCunn's new dramatic Cantata "Queen Hynde of Caledon" was to have its initial performance.

At the third Concert of the Paisley Choral Union, on the 13th ult., the attendance was not creditable to the musical tastes of the dwellers on the banks of the Cart. With such works as Spohr's "Last Judgment" and Gade's "The Crusaders" in the programme a large audience might have been expected. It was, moreover, pretty well known that the choristers had been drilled to excellent purpose by Mr. James Barr, and hence a good many folks journeyed from Glasgow to renew their acquaintance with the couple of attractive works. Nor was the journey in vain, for it must be frankly avowed that the Paisley vocalists distinguished themselves almost beyond any previous experience. This is saying a good deal, because the choir justly prides itself on its attainments. The members are animated by artistic desires, and great care is bestowed upon the selection of the voices, recruited, as they are, from a junior organisation, which is also a credit to Glasgow's neighbouring burgh. Again, the soprano contingent is a strong body, the quality of tone is admirable, recalling, indeed, some experiences of the best Yorkshire choirs. As has already been said, both works received every justice, an orchestra of forty performers from the band of the Glasgow Choral Union played the accompaniments, and the soloists were Miss Fillunger, Miss Sarah Berry, Mr. E. Houghton, and Mr. Robert Grice.

MUSIC IN LEEDS AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

We have had the usual annual performances of "The Messiah," which, in Yorkshire at least, are now looked upon as a function indispensable to Christmas and its proper observance. Of the performance given by the Leeds Philharmonic Society on December 21, nothing more need be said than that the high standard of excellence attained on previous occasions in the same work was fully maintained. Mr. Edward Lloyd being unable to fulfil his engagement, Mr. Henry Piercy undertook to replace him in the tenor solos. The Halifax Choral Society's "Messiah" Concert was given on December 17, the audience being large in spite of the thick fog which filled the room. Notwithstanding the latter circumstance, choralists and soloists alike were entirely successful in their efforts to do justice to Handel's well-known music. Mrs. Conway sang the soprano solos, Miss Dews the contralto, Mr. Philip Newbury the tenor, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint the bass. Mr. W. H. Garland conducted. Handel's Oratorio was also given by the Huddersfield Choral Society on December 18.

Two series of Popular Concerts that enjoy a fair amount of patronage in Leeds are Mr. Haddock's Musical Evenings and Messrs. Harry Sykes and Hall Stabler's Saturday Evening Concerts. At the former, popular artists are engaged to play what may be termed "popular classical music"; and at the latter, high-class miscellaneous music is mainly drawn upon for the programmes.

An important musical venture (for Leeds, that is, where the taste for such things is much in need of cultivation) has been the formation of the Leeds String Quartet Party, the members of which propose to give periodical Recitals of concerted chamber music. The first Concert, on the 7th ult., was a success in an artistic sense only; but the excellence of the programmes and the executive ability of the musicians who undertake the performance of them should ensure liberal patronage as the scheme becomes more widely known. The quartet party consists of Messrs. Müller, Verdi Fawcett, A. John Gutfeld, and Alfred Giessing, and their efforts at the opening Concert aroused considerable enthusiasm. Miss Pierce sang songs by Goring Thomas and Mozart, and was artistically accompanied by Miss Kate Smith.

The seventh Huddersfield Subscription Concert, on the 6th ult., took the unusual form of an amateur Concert. The programme was of the miscellaneous order, and need not be entered into in detail. It is not too much to say that all were thoroughly successful, notably Mrs. T. Dyson (soprano) in solos by Meyerbeer and Millard, and Mr. C. F. Haigh (tenor) in two songs by Pinsuti and Grimshaw respectively. Miss Alice Simpkin played a couple of violin solos. Mr. Ibeson accompanied.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The only thing of special interest given here at Christmas time was Mercadante's "Seven Last Words," which, though strangely inappropriate to such a season, proved highly acceptable as a good sample of the Neapolitan writer, who is known here chiefly through the medium of his B flat Mass. The "Seven Last Words" is characteristic, and credit is due to Mr. J. O. Shepherd for unearthing this composition. A MS. "Ave Maria," by Mr. Claude Jacquinot, for baritone solo and orchestra, also claimed attention at the same Concert, which was given at the Court Theatre on Christmas Day.

The only other performances of any importance have been by St. Michael's Choral Society, Liverpool, and by the Cambrian Choral and St. Catherine's Amateur Societies at Birkenhead. Van Bree's "St. Cecilia's Day," Mendelssohn's "Come, let us sing," and Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" were given by the two last-named organisations respectively. What has come to be regarded as an annual visit of the Glasgow Select Choir took place at St. George's Hall on the 26th ult.

A Mozart Centenary performance closed the music of last year at the Concerts of the Liverpool Sunday Society, the répertoire of chamber music of the Salzburg composer for wind and string instruments being drawn upon for the occasion. On the 10th ult. a number of the Carl Rosa Company artists gave a Sunday Concert, under the direction of Miss Emilie Scott, and a fortnight later the orchestra of the Sunday Society furnished a good programme.

The Philharmonic Society inaugurated the second moiety of its fifty-third season with Brahms's Symphony in D, and at the following Concert Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony formed the chief attraction, Sir Charles Hallé being happily, though unexpectedly, well enough to act as Conductor. At the two Concerts thus given during the past month the chorus had next to nothing to do, but the members are busy practising for the three final Concerts in February and March, at which important work is to be undertaken.

As usual at this time of the year, the Carl Rosa Opera House is the Mecca to which are chiefly directed the feet of local musical pilgrims, and the business being done at the Court Theatre is exceptionally good. The operas produced up to date have all been old favourites, with the exception of Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana." The novelty has taken strong hold of popular taste and will prove one of the leading attractions of the season. The company is in good order, the chorus, as usual, being locally augmented and the orchestra competent.

Mr. W. I. Argent has been elected President of the Liverpool Musical Club for the present year.

The new Music School, Liverpool (limited), promises to be one of the most important establishments of the kind outside of London, and the promoters appear to have given its every detail the most careful consideration. This, indeed, is fully in evidence, judging by the completeness of the prospectus, though the thing itself has come as a surprise upon the public. The directors are Dr. W. H. Hunt (Chairman for 1892), and Messrs. W. I. Argent, Carl Courvoisier, Carl Heinecke, and John Ross; among the professors being Messrs. Steudner Welsing, H. A. Branscombe, John Henry, William Streather, Carl Fuchs, and many other well-known musicians. The course of instruction is compendious, the fees moderate, and the premises leased are extremely commodious. Among the properties secured there is a two-manual organ, by Gray and Davison, and a concert grand pianoforte, kindly sent down by Steinway and Sons. Other instruments have also been secured, and the Institution opened on the 21st ult. with every prospect of success.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Generally, during the holiday season, our musical doings have no very wide or striking interest. Programmes are arranged confessedly with an idea of meeting the supposed tastes of the young people then at home; and theatre and concert-room are frequently devoted to their amusement, serious music being avoided and the production of important novelties deferred until they have returned to school. It might be well would somebody have the courage to test the wisdom of such an annual devotion to frivolity; but probably we shall go on in the old stereotyped way until the losses incurred become utterly insupportable and speculators are absolutely forced to ponder the cause. For it is a fact that, after "The Messiah" performances, the Christmas carnival is not, as a rule, a profitable time for our concert-givers; and they have reason to be thankful when school duties are resumed and life returns to its more serious routine. Hence, beyond the bare record that our customary Concerts have been regularly given, there is very little to report. Mr. Lane's Wednesday evening gatherings have been fairly good; but Mr. de Jong's Saturday Evening Concerts have suffered, partly from the inclemency of the weather, and somewhat from the cause already mentioned. At St. James's Hall Mr. Barrett has endeavoured to keep up the interest of his patrons, and has been liberal in the supply of vocalists—Miss Macintyre, Madame Burns, &c. At the Association Hall Mr. Cross has energetically catered for the public; and to the Town Hall Mr. Pyne's admirable Organ Recitals continue to attract the more seriously disposed.

Sir Charles Hallé has repeated, somewhat soon, the third acts of "Tannhäuser" and of "Lohengrin"; and, for the fifth choral Concert, has again given us "The Golden Legend," with Beethoven's small Mass added. The Wagner selection once more offered splendid opportunity to Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Andrew Black, of which both gentlemen thoroughly availed themselves. The solo parts in Sir Arthur Sullivan's Cantata were undertaken by Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Black; the last-named gentleman making an admirable Lucifer, throwing into his interpretation of the character unexpected animation. In all the works both band and choir were, of course, perfectly at home and altogether satisfactory; but we, with some impatience, await the choral novelties. In the meantime, however, we are grateful to Lady Hallé for her most finished rendering of part of Vieuxtemps's Concerto in E and of Max Bruch's Romanza in A. The long and triumphant success of this unsurpassed artist has had a wonderful effect; but, clever as is the playing of some of our many young lady violinists, it is impossible not to feel how rash any of them are when they challenge direct comparison, and how wisely they would avoid the works in which Lady Hallé shows the ease and grace with which she overcomes the difficulties of the instrument and preserves an absolute purity of intonation. And among pianists none show more wonderful elasticity of wrist and finger, more incisive brilliancy in octave playing and clearer execution of scale and arpeggio, than Madame Sophie Menter, who had the advantage to play upon a really superb Steinway, with extra pedal mechanism for the sustentation of chord or note, and with all the keenness of tone resulting from the system of stringing adopted by the American firm, whereby the octave "partials" are utilized and enhanced. But it would be well for pianists enjoying the advantages of such an instrument to note how, almost entirely, the new pedal should supersede the use of the old arrangement which lifted all the dampers and produced mere noisy confusion.

It was very pleasant and hopeful to find so large an audience assembled in the Concert Hall, on the afternoon of the 11th ult., to listen to local artists of acknowledged excellence. I have more than once suggested not only the suitability of the place for chamber, and its utter unfitness for orchestral, music, but the special duty which lies upon the directors of an institution which, in the olden time, aimed fully as much at the development of local talent (only executive, unfortunately) as at the pleasure of the public. Frequent reference has been made to the social charm which formerly pervaded the Gentlemen's Concerts, but the obvious lesson which the decay of that interest should teach seems to be missed. There was a connection between performers and listeners which does not, and could not, exist in our larger and more exclusively professional undertakings. The Concerts were family gatherings on a larger scale than was possible in a more limited area, and the audiences were more bent upon the enjoyment of the music than upon criticising its performance. The progress of the art and its appeal to a far wider public have brought a change, but have not necessarily shut the door of usefulness to the old institution, if intelligently directed. There may, even yet, be a power of revival, but it must be speedily exercised, and its prospect lies in the direction in which the managers now seem to aim. There are many ways beside the limited one to which the title is generally understood to point in which the Concert Hall may be made a "School of Music." And it was encouraging that, to listen to the really splendid pianoforte playing of Mr. Frederic Dawson, to the finished singing of Mr. Kinnell, and to the creditable violin playing of Fräulein von Zerdahelyi—who displayed talent, and still more promise—an audience assembled larger than has, for a long time, been drawn to the Concert Hall. All the performers are resident here; and, what is more, the best of them exhibited strikingly the possibilities not only of local talent, but of strictly local training. Of course, great care must be taken, honestly and impartially, to select the performers for such gatherings, and not to exhibit mere ambitious and ready amateurs.

The mention of a "School of Music," and the earnest desire long felt here for the establishment of a thoroughly efficient and absolutely automatous Conservatoire, draw special attention to the fact that our Corporation is awakening to its responsibility and looking after the education of the city with a vigour altogether promising. The Technical and the Art Schools are to be immediately taken under municipal control, so that almost every conceivable subject, except music, will now be cared for; and why that should be neglected—except to the extent of a provision of a brass band for the police—no respectable reason could be given. Leaving out of the question the purity and elevating influence of the Art, the mere fact that, far more than painting, it ministers to the recreation and enjoyment of the people should lead to some care for its due provision, unless we are content to remain under the stigma of regarding everything from a trade point of view. In a leading article in the Manchester Guardian of the 22nd ult. the hope is expressed that "Some day the Manchester School of Art may get rid of South Kensington and all its works. Now that the School is to come under the Corporation the era of discussion has opened for it, and we hope that Manchester will gradually see its way to the formation of a School of Art which may be really its own, and neither beholden to nor in way controlled by a Government department in London." Put music in the place here given to painting (Art) and the editor of the Guardian admirably expresses our want.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Christmas performance of "The Messiah," by the Sacred Harmonic Society, was a success, the choruses, under Mr. Adcock's direction, leaving nothing to be desired. The principals were Miss Eaton, Miss Hope Glenn, Mr. Houghton, and Mr. Watkin Mills; Mr. Tomlinson displayed fine tone and command of his instrument in the trumpet obbligato. Where all else was so excellent it would have been wiser to have had at least one rehearsal of the band—at any rate, of the local section of which it was so largely composed. There is scope for the permanent establishment of a local orchestra, little being required beyond organisation and training of local performers.

Mr. Allen's third Chamber Concert, on the 11th ult., drew an appreciative audience. The artists were Miss Cantelo, Messrs. Willy Hess, Speelman, and Fuchs. The programme included Mendelssohn's "Variations Serieuses," a Brahms Trio, and Schumann's Quartet in E flat. Dr. Joachim is announced for the next Concert.

Mr. Lemare's Organ Recitals at the Mechanics' Institution have recommenced, and draw increasing audiences.

The Philharmonic Choir gave its second Concert on the 21st ult., to a large audience. Amongst other pieces sung by the Choir, which was in good form, Mr. Harford Lloyd's "Rosy Dawn," a masterly eight-part chorus composed for the Cheltenham Festival of 1887, and Dr. Hiles's "Hushed in death" deserve special praise. Mr. Alexander's part-song, "The lesson of the leaves" (composed for the Choir), was much admired. Miss Dews's beautiful voice and cultured style brought her the honours of the evening, and Mr. Braxton Smith received well-merited applause. Mr. Fred. Ward, Mr. Owen, and Mr. Percy Stranders, violin, violoncello, and pianoforte, admirably rendered Mendelssohn's C minor Trio and a portion of a Trio by Gade.

MUSIC IN BERLIN.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The well-known Concert-singer, Miss Hermine Spies, took her leave of the Berlin public at a Concert at the Philharmonic, on the 18th ult. Miss Spies has for some time, as Lieder-Sängerin, occupied a position second only to that of Amalie Joachim throughout the length and breadth of Germany. Nor is she unknown in London, where (in July, 1889) she gave two Song Recitals, besides appearing at one of the Richter Concerts. In Berlin she has long been a special favourite, and the Philharmonic, on the occasion of her Abschieds-Concert, was crowded by an audience clamorous for encores. The Concert closed with a scene of extraordinary enthusiasm, the audience refusing to leave the hall until Miss Spies had given two additional songs—Brahms's "Vergebliches Ständchen" and Schumann's "Frühlingsnacht." It is pleasant to know that the cause of the singer's retirement is one which calls for the congratulations of her well-wishers. Miss Spies, who is still young, is to be married in February; she will be followed in her new life by the hearty good wishes of her innumerable admirers.

MUSIC IN MONTREAL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

A vast audience assembled at the Windsor Hall on December 22, to hear "The Messiah" by the Philharmonic Society. So great was the desire to hear the work that many days before the date fixed for the Concert all the best seats in the Hall had been secured. The Concert was well worthy of the reputation the Society enjoys and of the support given to it by the public.

The chorus of the Society is larger and more efficient this year than it has ever been. It numbers over 250 members, and includes most of the best voices in the city. They were especially happy in their rendering of "For unto us." The effect was grand, and served to arouse the most apathetic of the audience to a pitch of genuine enthusiasm. Another very successful effort was "His yoke is easy," the beauty of the dotted notes in the runs being most clearly emphasised. Of the other choruses the best rendered were "He trusted in God," "Hallelujah," and "Amen."

Of the soloists the most successful was the soprano, Mrs. Jennie Patrick Walker, of Boston. Mrs. Walker has a voice of great purity and of moderate strength. Her rendering of "I know that my Redeemer liveth" was very artistic, and met with full appreciation. Miss Marguerite Hall is well known in London. Her voice is hardly deep enough to cope successfully with "O thou that tellest," with the result that she was somewhat overweighted by the orchestra; but her rendering of "He was despised" was full of pathos, and appealed to the feelings of the audience. Mr. Herbert Johnson, the tenor, has a robust voice and sang with great effect. Mr. D. M. Babcock, bass, has a great reputation in America. His voice is very deep and sonorous, and possessed of remarkable flexibility. His singing of "Why do the nations" was his best effort. The orchestra was entirely local and acquitted itself creditably, although the violins showed a tendency at times to overpower the soloists. The Concert was conducted by Mr. G. Couture.

The Montreal Philharmonic Society, at its Festival Concerts to be given on March 23, 24, and 25 next, will perform Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride," Mackenzie's "Story of Sayid," and Saint-Saëns's "Deluge."

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

New York, January 14, 1892.

The most notable musical event since the advent of the New Year has been the appearance of the French and Italian Opera Company at the Metropolitan Opera House, under those experienced impresarios, Abbey, Grau, and Schoeffel. The company includes such singers as Mesdames Albani, Eames-Storey, Lehman, and Scalchi; Messrs. Edouard and Jean de Reszke, Kalisch, and others of prominence; yet the result has shown that while the German Opera was too costly an experiment, the musical public is not prepared to receive the Italian as a substitute, and the conditions all seem to point to opera in the vernacular as likely to receive that most effective form of criticism—cheering box receipts.

The Boston Symphony Society, under Mr. Arthur Nikisch, has visited New York as also our sister city Brooklyn, and with the assistance of Herr Paderewski—who continues his artistic success—has met with its customary warm reception, and been the delight of all listeners. In Brooklyn, Herr Paderewski played his own Concerto with marked success. The usual Christmas performance of Handel's "Messiah" by the Oratorio Society was marked this year by an unusual event. So great was the desire to hear this old yet ever fresh work, that a third performance was necessary to satisfy the public demand, thus evincing the firm hold of the old master upon the musical world, despite the modern Teutonic and other forms of musical expression.

Mr. Walter Damrosch has revived the successful experiment of last season in the form of "Young People's Concerts." At the second Concert, on the 13th inst., was performed the "Midsummer Night's Dream" with the music of Mendelssohn and the full text read by Mr. George Riddle. These Concerts serve an admirable purpose in educating musically the young people of the city. In Boston, at the Saturday Night Concert, the programme included Goldmark's "Prometheus Bound," Schubert's entr'acte music to "Rosamunde," and Brahms's Second Symphony. At the next Concert are to be given Schubert's Unfinished Symphony and Schumann's music to "Manfred."

The Philharmonic, to whose direction Dr. Anton Seidl has succeeded, performed at its third Concert, among other numbers, Xaver Scharwenka's Second Concerto (solo part played by the composer) and R. Strauss's "Death and Apotheosis" (new).

The American Composers' Choral Association offers at its first Concert, among other novelties, new songs by MacDowell, whose compositions are, as a rule, in great favour.

At the third Concert of the Seidl Society in Brooklyn the pièce de resistance was the now well-known and universally accepted "Cavalleria Rusticana"; the success of Mascagni is undoubted—though critics sometimes cavil, the public approves.

In the cities away from New York the season has recently been marked by performances of "The Messiah" of greater or less excellence; that at Detroit under Professor Stanley being much commended by the local press.

Madame Patti is with us once again, and, assisted by such very capable singers as Fabbri, Palassi, Del Puente, and Guille, has given one Concert, to be followed by a second. The success was very great, and the favourite prima donna sang with wonderful freshness of voice and her wonted skill.

At the Concert of the Metropolitan Musical Society on Tuesday last was performed Dvorák's "Patriotic Hymn." Notwithstanding the inclement weather a large and brilliant audience testified its approval of the Society's efforts.

The Ogdensburg Annual Musical Festival, the thirteenth under the direction of the veteran Carl Zerrahn, with a competent body of soloists, is announced for the last three days of this month.

The musical public has been favoured, through the enterprise of Mr. Tretbar, with a translation of the new book by Anton Rubinstein, treating of the great masters of music.

Now is the season of Organ Recitals, and two of our most prominent organists, Messrs. Will C. Macfarlane and S. P. Warren, have announced at their respective churches a series to be given weekly during the season.

Our next issue will contain a new Easter Anthem, "Behold the Angel of the Lord," by Berthold Tours.

The first Examination for the degree of Bachelor in Music, at Oxford, will commence on Wednesday, March 16. Each candidate must send to the clerk of the schools either a certificate that he has passed Responsions, or an examination statutably exempting therefrom; or, a certificate that he has satisfied the masters of the schools in the Preliminary Examination provided for students of music in any two of the following languages—Greek, Latin, French, German, Italian; or, by "Decree" passed in Convocation on October 27, 1891, either a Higher Certificate from the Delegates of the Examination of Schools, if received before the beginning of Michaelmas Term, 1891; or, evidence that he has satisfied the Delegates of Oxford Local Examinations, as a senior candidate, before the beginning of Michaelmas Term, 1891, in English, in Mathematics, in Latin, and in either Greek, French, German, or Italian. Candidates who are not already members of the University must matriculate (and the matriculation paper of all Candidates be exhibited to the clerk of the schools) before the examination commences. Subjects of examination: Harmony and counterpoint, in not more than four parts.

The following were the successful candidates at the recent College of Organists' Examination:—W. E. Belcher, M.A., Kingston-on-Thames; J. E. Borland, Marylebone; H. B. Collins, West Kensington; A. V. Dale, Rochester; J. E. Greenhalgh, Bolton; B. W. Hartley, Bradford; C. Hunter, Huntingdon; R. Knight, Oldham; W. A. Macduff, Brighton; A. Paterson, Tenbury; H. C. Perrin, Mus. Bac., Lowestoft; A. C. Praeger, Bristol; A. J. Silver, Ealing; H. J. Timothy, Chester; and T. Webb, Newbury. The Examiners were Prof. J. F. Bridge, Messrs. A. J. Eyre, C. J. Frost, G. M. Garrett, W. S. Hoyte, C. Warwick Jordan, Haydn Keeton, H. W. Little, C. Harford Lloyd, G. C. Martin, Walter Parratt, and W. G. Wood. The diplomas for Fellows were distributed by Mr. J. Higgs and the certificates for Associates were presented by Mr. W. H. Cummings.

On the 2nd ult. the "Brighton Musical Fraternity" gave their Annual Dinner at the Royal Pavilion. The Chair was taken by the President (Mr. W. Kuhe), and Sir George Grove was present as a guest. A delightful evening was spent, the humorous menu, written by Dr. F. J. Sawyer, being responsible for much merriment. Sir George Grove, in a graceful speech, warmly congratulated the Society on their Hon. Secretary, Mr. Franz Groenings, and spoke of the splendid manner in which that gentleman had fought the Performing Rights Question, adding that he hoped steps would be taken to repay him for the trouble and expense he had incurred. It is pleasant to know that Mr. Oliver Hawkes, 28, Leicester Square, is acting as Hon. Treasurer to a fund for this purpose, to which several leading music publishers have already contributed.

The annual Burns' Birthday Commemoration Concert took place at St. James's Hall on Saturday, the 23rd ult., when the familiar songs expected on such an occasion were creditably rendered by the Misses Effie Clements, Florence Monteith, and Helen Meason; Mmes. Belle Cole and Adelaide Mullen; Messrs. Ben Davies, Henry Beaumont, and Walter Clifford, and the Meister Glee Singers. Madame Mary Cummings and Mr. Howard Reynolds, the cornet player, were absent through indisposition. Particulars of a Concert of this description are altogether unnecessary, more particularly as the programme was nearly doubled by encores; but it may be mentioned as a significant circumstance, that the prevailing depression considerably affected the attendance at this ordinarily prosperous venture.

Under the direction of Mr. T. Wallace Plant, acting in conjunction with Madame Slummvoll, of local fame, the first of a series of three Ballad Concerts was given on the 5th ult. at the Parish Hall, South Acton, the most important item of the programme being Dibdin's Ballad Opera, with Mr. Herbert Sims Reeves as Tom Tug. Miss Edith Blomfield, though suffering from a cold, was a delightful Wilhelmina. The other parts were capably filled, and the piece, as a whole, more than usually well mounted. As accompanist, Mr. Archie Horsey rendered efficient aid. The profits of the Concert were to be devoted to the liquidation of the debt existing on the pretty little Parish Hall, which has proved such an important factor in the production of good music in the district.

On the 7th ult. a special Service was held at Christ Church, Brondesbury, when the first part of "The Messiah" and the "Hallelujah" and "Amen" Choruses were given by an augmented choir, the solos being taken by Masters Brimblecombe and Breedon (soprano), Cooper and Rush (alto), and Mr. A. Johnson (baritone), all members of the regular choir. The rendering of the choruses was especially good. Mr. F. Leeds, the Organist and Choirmaster, played the organ and sang "Comfort ye" and "Every valley," being accompanied by Dr. J. A. Smith. The service commenced with a short address from the Rector (Rev. C. Dale Williams). There was a fair attendance, and a collection was made for the Choir Fund.

On Sunday evening, the 3rd ult., a special Service of Song was held at St. Alban's, Streatham Park. After a hymn and shortened form of Service, the first and second parts of Bach's "Christmas" Oratorio were performed by the choir, which had been augmented to fifty voices for the occasion. The difficult opening chorus, "Christians, be joyful," was sung with great accuracy and finish. The performance generally did great credit to the Organist and Choirmaster, Mr. Charles Lawrence. The recitatives and airs were undertaken by Miss Wallon (soprano), Mrs. Turney (contralto), Mr. H. Lewis Thomas (tenor), and Mr. P. Massey (bass).

Mr. Arthur Hervey has been appointed musical critic of the Morning Post in succession to the late Mr. W. A. Barrett. Our contemporary is to be congratulated; Mr. Hervey is a cultured gentleman, a thoughtful writer, and an excellent musician. He is best known, perhaps, as a composer, his charming songs having long ago won their way to popularity. He studied harmony in England with Mr. Berthold Tours, and afterwards took lessons in Germany. A Dramatic Overture from his pen, played at one of the Albeniz Concerts last winter, has been accepted by Mr. Manns for performance at the Crystal Palace. Mr. Hervey is also musical critic of Vanity Fair.

Among the concert postponements occasioned by the lamented death of the Duke of Clarence were those of the London Symphony and Royal Choral Society. The former (at which Mr. Henschel's Suite written for Shakespeare's "Hamlet" was to be performed in public for the first time) was deferred to the the 26th ult., and the latter ("The Golden Legend") to the 27th, both too late for notice in our present issue. The performance of Professor Stanford's "Eden" at the Hampstead Conservatoire, with Miss Anna Williams, Miss Margaret Hoare, and Messrs. Iver McKay, Henschel, and Brereton as soloists, announced for the 8th inst., is postponed till the 22nd.

Mr. William Carter's Burns' Anniversary Concert at the Royal Albert Hall on Monday, the 25th ult., did not differ in character from those of preceding years. Vocal solos, mostly belonging to "Caledonia, stern and wild," were interspersed by part-songs for Mr. Carter's choir, violin pieces, selections of Scottish melodies played by the band of the Scots Guards, and by the marching of over a dozen pipers through the building. The principals were the Misses Macintyre and Rose Williams, Mdmes. Giulia Valda and Belle Cole, and Messrs. Iver McKay, Dalgety Henderson, and Norman Salmond. The attendance afforded evidence of the sorrow occasioned by recent events.

The competition for the Macfarren Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music took place on the 13th ult. The Examiners were Messrs. F. H. Cowen, A. Randegger, and H. C. Banister (Chairman). There were four candidates, and the Scholarship was awarded to Llewela Davies. The competition for the Thalberg Scholarship took place on the same day. The Examiners were Messrs. H. R. Eyers, Fritz Hartvigson, T. A. Matthay, W. H. Thomas, and F. Corder (Chairman). There were five candidates, and the Scholarship was awarded to Stanislaus Szczepanowski. The Examiners highly commended Percy Harmon.

On the 20th ult. the choir of St. Margaret Patten, Rood Lane, gave a performance of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" in Limehouse Church. There was a large congregation. The soloists were Masters Pattle and Williams, and Messrs. Darkin, Heathcote, and Adams. Mr. Horace Buttery, Organist and Director of the Choir of St. Margaret Patten, skilfully accompanied on the organ. The Rector, Rev. F. Thickness, intoned the service. Limehouse Church was built in 1730, the architect being a pupil of the great Wren. It is almost unique as regards design, and having recently been restored is worthy of a visit from lovers of church architecture.

At his afternoon performances of pianoforte music, given at the Portman Rooms during the past month, Mr. Aguilar played an arrangement for two pianofortes of his setting of the first Psalm, "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly," as well as of his Symphony in C. In the Psalm the second pianoforte part was entrusted to Miss Peacock and in the Symphony to Mrs. D'Iffanger, both clever pupils of the veteran musician. The audience evinced their appreciation of each work by hearty applause.

A series of high-class Concerts is being given at Hawkstone Hall, Westminster, by the Choral Society of the Rev. Newman Hall's Church (Christ Church). On the 28th ult. a capital performance of "The Messiah" was given before a large and appreciative audience. The soloists were Mr. Maskell Hardy, Mr. W. P. Richards, Miss Louise Lancaster, and Miss Edith Luke. Mr. J. R. Griffiths conducted, and the accompaniments were played by Mr. Avery and Mr. F. N. Abernethy on a pianoforte and harmonium.

An evening Concert, in aid of the building fund of the Royal Free Hospital, was given at the Princes' Hall on Monday, the 25th ult, under the direction of Madame Agnes Larkcom. The cause was a good one, and we are glad to say it was well supported; the hall was crowded, and the fund will benefit to the extent of £70 or £80. Besides Madame A. Larkcom, there were Mesdames Helen d'Alton and Clara Samuell, Mr. Franklin Clive, &c. Mr. F. Upton gave some amusing recitations. Miss Mary Carmichael and Miss Florence Philips were the Conductors.

Mendelssohn's Oratorio "St. Paul" was given at St. John the Evangelist's, Waterloo Road, on Sunday afternoon, the 17th ult., with Master Willoughby, Messrs. Pinnegar, J. Gostick, and Fred. Winton as soloists, Messrs. S. S. Martyn and Henry J. B. Dart officiating respectively as Conductor and Organist. The performance was preceded by Chopin's Funeral March, in memory of the death of the Duke of Clarence. A series of Organ Recitals on Monday evenings commenced on the 18th ult.

Mr. G. H. Wilson, the well-known musical critic of the Boston (U.S.) Traveller, has been appointed Chief of the Bureau of Music and Drama at the "World's Fair," Chicago, 1893. The appointment is undoubtedly a good one, since Mr. Wilson's sympathies are wide. He is neither a fossil nor a mushroom, and the works which receive his support will do so not because they are old or new, but because they are good.

The Musical Artists' Society (Mr. Alfred Gilbert, Hon. Sec.) will give Concerts at Princes' Hall, on Mondays, April 4, May 2 and 30, and on June 27, Mr. Alfred Gilbert will give a Concert to which also the members will be admitted. The Council have very wisely determined to exercise their privilege of selecting what works shall be performed at the Concerts, instead of attempting to give everything sent in by members.

At St. Peter's, Eaton Square, an excellent performance of "The Messiah" was given under the direction of the talented Organist of the Church, Mr. W. de Manby Sergison. Master Wood, Mr. Percy Coward, Mr. Harper Kearton, and Mr. C. Ackerman were the soloists, and Mr. George Bennett the organist. There was a full orchestra and chorus, and the performance was greatly appreciated.

Mr. F. C. Boyes, Organist and Choirmaster of St. Giles-in-the-Fields, gave an Organ Recital at St. Barnabas, Kentish Town, on Saturday, the 16th ult., and the programme included selections from Handel, Batiste, Cappocci, and Spinney. A number of Christmas carols were effectively rendered by some members of the choir of St. Giles-in-the-Fields.

It is pretty generally known that the bones of William Shield, the composer, rest in the South Cloister, Westminster Abbey, next to those of Clementi, and of Haydn's patron and friend Salomon. On the 25th ult., the sixty-third anniversary of Shield's death, a memorial slab in black marble was placed over his grave, and Dr. Bridge afterwards played an "Elegy" of Shield's on the organ.

A Concert was given on the 18th ult. at St. Augustine's Hall, Honor Oak, by the Honor Oak Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. E. Vinen. The works selected were Mozart's "Figaro" Overture, Gade's "Erl-King's Daughter," Largo by Swinford, and Mr. Vinen's new Cantata, "The Legend of the Faithful Soul," all of which went well under his able guidance. The hall was filled.

Mr. Dyfed Lewis has been appointed to the conductorship of the United Choir which will sing at the Welsh Festival to be held at St. Paul's Cathedral on St. David's Eve, and Mr. D. J. Thomas (Organist of Hanover Church and Welsh Organist at All Saints', Margaret Street) has been appointed Organist for the Festival.

The Bonavia Hunt Musical History Prize, offered by the Academical Board of Trinity College, London, has been awarded to the Rev. Atherton Knowles, Curate of Bromley. The adjudicator was Dr. A. H. Mann, and the subject of the essay "The Development of Anglican Service Music from Tallis to Sebastian Wesley."

At Trinity College, London, the Maybrick Prize of five guineas for ballad singing has been awarded to Beatrice May Pinney; the Pianoforte Accompaniment Prize of five guineas to Marion Clapton; and the Silver Medal for singing to Bertha Acworth. The examiners were Professor Gordon Saunders and Mr. Harvey Löhr.

Among the pictures at the Royal Academy Winter Exhibition is a large "Portrait Group" representing Burkhardt Tschudi, founder of the firm of John Broadwood & Sons, tuning a grand pianoforte, with his wife and two sons beside him. The artist is unknown, but his work testifies to ability and a keen perception of character.

A performance of "The Messiah" was given on Tuesday, the 12th ult., by the Kyrle Choir, under the direction of Mr. Docker, at the Wesleyan Church, New North Road. Miss Aubrey, Miss Robinson, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. James Blackney were the soloists.

We learn that Messrs. Peter Conacher and Co., of Huddersfield, have been entrusted with the construction of the new four-manual organ for the Guild Hall, Londonderry, the cost of which is to be £1,983. With one exception, this will be the largest organ in the North of Ireland.

A Society, the Orpheus, has just been formed for the weekly practice of high-class orchestral music, under the direction of Mr. Charles Griffiths. The meetings take place at Onslow Hall, Neville Street, on Tuesdays, at 7.30 p.m.

Thomas Ely and Charles Stanley Parkinson have passed the examination for the Degree of Bachelor of Music at the London University. The examiners were Dr. J. F. Bridge and Dr. C. Hubert Parry.

Sir John Stainer has been appointed Examiner in Music to the Society of Arts, and Mr. W. G. McNaught, Assistant-Examiner.

We hear that Emeritus Professor Sir Herbert Oakeley, who is passing the winter in Italy, has recently been honoured with the Jubilee Medal.

A new Choral Society, the Arcadian, has been formed at Hammersmith, under the direction of Mr. Berthold Tours, jun.

REVIEWS.

The Letters of a Leipzig Cantor: Being the Letters of Moritz Hauptmann to Franz Hauser, Ludwig Spohr, and other Musicians. Edited by Prof. Dr. Alfred Schöne and Ferdinand Hiller. Translated and arranged by A. D. Coleridge.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.; Richard Bentley and Co.]

Moritz Hauptmann, the famous theorist and teacher, has a special claim on the attention of English readers, if only for the fact that so many of our principal musicians were trained under him—Messrs. Otto Goldschmidt, J. F. Barnett, Walter Bache; Frederic Clay, F. H. Cowen, and Sir Arthur Sullivan amongst the number. Still, to the outside reader Hauptmann is little more than a name, while by the student he is only connected with some excessively abstruse speculations on Harmony and Metre. These two volumes reveal the philosopher in undress, so to speak, and in this new light Moritz Hauptmann is likely to make many friends. For to begin with, the transparent honesty of the man emerges in every line of these letters. Then, again, although his talk is almost always of music, it is redeemed from shoppiness by abundant evidences of general culture. Hauptmann had no pretentions to be regarded as a master of style. On the contrary, it was a source of regret to him that he could not write with sufficient lucidity to be thoroughly understood even by a select audience. But none the less he was a man of a thoroughly cultivated mind, who read widely and remembered what was worth remembering. These letters show, for example, that he knew Shakespeare a great deal better than nine Englishmen out of ten, while, though a thorough German, he had a perfect appreciation of the incomparable grace of the French prose style. When we add to honesty and literary feeling (not always to be found in a musician) the further qualities of generous enthusiasm, singular modesty, shrewdness, and a keen sense of humour, some notion of the attractiveness of these pages may be arrived at. Perhaps their greatest charm consists in the aphorisms or reflections in which the writer sums up his views of a school of music, an opera, or a composer. These are often exceedingly luminous. Here, for example, is a remark on the value of contrast which concert-givers might well take to heart: "It is bad for the public to hear nothing but No. 1. It spoils their critical sense. Where there is nothing but the best, the best no longer exists. If every day were Sunday, what would become of the Sabbath? Nature does not arrange all her highest peaks in a row." Here again is a shrewd saying: "Bach and Handel are not classics because they are old; they have grown old because they are classical." Sometimes his thoughts take the form of a fantastic simile, as when he says: "The phenomena of this modern Romantic Music, or whatever they call it, suggests the vegetable kingdom. Schumann's construction is that of a tree—a branch more or less and what does it matter? Mozart's is that of the human body: you cannot add an arm or a leg." Here, on another page, is a really poetic image: "The spirit of youth in Music is like a drop of dew in amber, no time can harden it." What could be better, again, than the admirably just description of the early English madrigals? "Considering its date, I have scarcely ever met with music which had so little of the date about it." Berlioz, of whom Hauptmann conceived a very sound estimate, is amusingly hit off as follows: "I think him most at his ease and much more charming when the devil is loose; when he means to be charming, he fails."

Hauptmann was unquestionably a man of strong likes and dislikes, but when one considers the nature of his studies and the tendency which they inevitably must have fostered in him to set an excessive store by form, the breadth and liberality of his criticism are truly remarkable. Take, for example, his appreciation of Ferdinand David, which shows how utterly un-Capellmeister-like was Hauptmann's attitude: "David lacks depth," he says, "but he has a graceful transparent way of writing music, and it is refreshing, nowadays, to hear anything spontaneous which has not been crammed and screwed up to the right point." There is, in fact, hardly a single composer with regard to whose merits Hauptmann was not right more or less, with the sole exception of Wagner. Here he could only admit that Wagner was exceedingly clever, and in writing to Spohr—for whom he had a lively admiration, and who himself admired Wagner greatly—failed not to express his dissatisfaction or repulsion in the most vigorous terms. He found the "Tannhäuser" Overture "utterly hateful, inconceivably clumsy, long, and tiresome," and expressed his complete distrust of a composer "who is the author of his own libretto. It's a clumsy comparison; but it seems to me it is as if a man were to marry himself."

We have alluded to Hauptmann's sense of humour, and may be pardoned for giving a couple of examples. He dearly loved a good story, and so, in juxtaposition with the most serious or philosophical remarks, we come across passages like the following: "I should like to hear how Moritz is getting on at Düsseldorf, where I am told they are still in want of singers. That's an old story. As long as they have a good ophicleide, never mind the rest! Do you remember what the comic man in a farce said to the Director when the impresario was at his wits' end because all his singers were down with illness? 'Let's give the "Prophet"; I've an old pair of skates at home—never mind the rest!'" In another place he falls foul of a singing master, who had written to him to say that "No one ought to be a singing master in a public institution unless he teaches from some standard book of authority, or unless he has worked out some system of his own which has met with the approbation of those who know." Now Hauptmann was no pedant, and his comment is marked by a fine irony: "Why, at this rate, Socrates would have to write Plato and Aristotle, or Christ a gospel, before they were qualified to act as public teachers! I like the answer made by Kant's servant to a painter who was staying in the house to paint the philosopher's portrait. Complaining of ennui one evening, he asked for a book. Answer: 'We have no books. When we want them, we write them ourselves.'" Hauptmann was fond of driving home his meaning by some quaint story of this sort. In another letter he bids Hauser go to hear "Tannhäuser" two or three times, and listen to it the first time without prejudice. "I am afraid," he adds, "by the second night this will have become impossible. How many hard-boiled eggs can a fasting-man eat? Answer: One; for by the time he eats the second, he is a fasting-man no longer."

In fine, whether one agrees with Hauptmann or not, one cannot help being attracted by the personality revealed in these letters. There is not a trace of priggishness in them from cover to cover, and we are sincerely indebted to Mr. Coleridge for introducing them to the English reader in a version which is invariably readable, and often exceedingly racy.

Twelve New Songs by British Composers. Edited by Harold Boulton.

[The Leadenhall Press. Novello, Ewer and Co.]

In his preface to this handsomely printed quarto volume, the editor speaks of the blighting influence of Puritanism on music in this country, and the equally malign results accruing from the devotion to foreign art which set in after the Restoration. He is slightly incorrect in stating that in Elizabeth's time the "glee" was cultivated by all persons of education, for this form of music was essentially of later date. Neither is it accurate to say that the "royal line of German giants" began with Haydn. Everyone will agree, however, that England is now seriously endeavouring to recover the prestige it once held as a musical nation, and it was a happy thought to bring together a series of lyrics by our most talented composers, to show in a compact form what we are capable of in, at any rate, one branch of art industry. The composers selected are Messrs. Barnby, Cellier, Corder, Cowen, Harford Lloyd, MacCunn, Mackenzie, Parry, Somervell, Stanford, Goring Thomas, and Charles Wood—a goodly list, and, but for the absence of the name of Sullivan, thoroughly representative. It will be noted that the songs are printed in the alphabetical order of their composers' names, this plan being adopted in order to avoid invidious distinctions. Mr. Boulton has supplied the verses, which are mainly sentimental; in one or two instances, humorous; and in all, fanciful, elegant, and eminently singable. The songs vary considerably in point of structure and elaboration, and, of course, the idiosyncracies of their authors are frequently displayed. The aim has evidently been, in all instances, to write something superior to the trashy shop ballads which, for too long a period, were regarded as the best that we could produce in the way of song writing, and the result is a series of which no musical people need feel ashamed. It would occupy too much space to describe each composition separately, and we shall not make any odious comparisons, but to vocalists of every sort we commend the volume as in the highest degree worthy their attention. Its attractiveness is enhanced by a frontispiece in Mr. Frank Dicksee's best manner, representing a young girl playing a two-manual harpsichord.

Novello's Parish Choir Book, Nos. 76-85.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

The standard of excellence maintained hitherto in this useful publication shows no falling off in the ten numbers recently issued. The simple harmonies to the Apostles' Creed, monotoned on F, by W. Staton (No. 76), will prove useful to organists who do not possess the gift of extemporisation. No. 77 consists of an extremely unpretentious setting in chant form of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis from the accomplished pen of Mr. C. Lee Williams. The version of the same Canticles by G. J. Bennett (No. 78) was composed for the Sunday evening choir at St. Paul's Cathedral, and, though not in chant form, is based on one theme, constantly repeated, with varying harmonies. No. 79, Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in E flat, by the Rev. A. W. Hamilton Gell, is more elaborate than any of the foregoing though written in ordinary four-part harmony. The composer indulges in startling transitions of key and his service is decidedly modern in character. More settings of the evening Canticles have to be noted. Mr. Charles Wood's version in E flat (No. 80) is flowing and melodious and alternately in unison and four-part harmony. Mr. Charles Macpherson's in F is described as in irregular chant form, but there is little to distinguish it from an ordinary plain service, and within its modest scope it is noteworthy for musicianly feeling and general effectiveness. Another setting in E flat by the same composer (No. 82) is distinguished by similar qualities, but is, on the whole, lighter in style, being throughout in triple measure. No. 83 is a Te Deum, by Arthur W. Marchant, in E flat, quiet in tone and written in the old-fashioned alla breve measure. No. 84, Benedictus, in the same key and by the same composer, is similar in character, and, of course, is intended as a companion to the previous number. The last of the series, a Benedicite by W. G. Wood, is in one respect somewhat peculiar. The composer gives us four double chants, the first in D, the second in G, and the third and fourth in C. These are in three-two measure, and are all pleasing, especially the second, which is very melodious. The Gloria Patri, in which duple measure is used, is also effective.

Novello's Octavo Anthems, Nos. 359-371.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

The first six of these Anthems are from the pen of Frederick Brandeis, and are entitled "Hymn Anthems"—that is to say, something between a congregational hymn and a composition intended for choir only. They are sweet and flowing, and it is easy to imagine that in places where congregational singing is encouraged and cultured they might be rendered with heartiness by the entire band of worshippers. No. 365, "Sing, O Daughter of Zion," by Dr. William Rea, is a vigorous full Anthem for four voices, with some vigorous fugato passages. No. 366, "Ho! everyone that thirsteth," by J. Maude Crament, is intended for mission services, and is studiously simple, the composer seldom even glancing beyond relative keys. In its unpretentious way, however, it is to be commended. No. 367, "The Lord is King," by H. J. King, opens in the style of a military march, but subsequently becomes more church-like, though throughout the writing is free and unconventional. A tenor soloist is required. No. 368, "Christ is risen," by J. Maude Crament, is of course an Easter Anthem, solid and devotional rather than brilliant. No. 369, "Sing, O Heavens," by T. Tallis Trimnell, begins and ends with broad dignified choruses, between which is a brief but expressive tenor solo. No. 370, another Easter Anthem, "Christ, the Lord, is risen to-day," by Rev. E. V. Hall, is melodious but hymn-like in its simplicity, and may easily be learned alike by choir and congregation. No. 371, "I will set his dominion," by Horatio W. Parker, is for Christmas or general use. It is modern in feeling and is written with much boldness and freedom of style, as an instance of which it may be noted that the first and last chorus in A flat are separated by a "verse" or quartet in G.

Highland Ballad for Violin (Op. 47, No. 1); Two Pieces for Violin (Op. 47, No. 2). By A. C. Mackenzie.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

Following up the striking success he achieved with his "Pibroch," Dr. Mackenzie has now given us another composition, avowedly Scottish in character, and almost of equal importance in length and general significance. The Highland Ballad is an extended piece commencing and closing in D, Lento, 4-4 measure, but with the major portion in 3-4 time, Andantino espressivo. Alternately tender and passionate, the music is throughout strikingly unconventional, the characteristic turns in the melody being associated with modern and frequently beautiful harmonic progressions. Though not strictly in sonata or concerto form, the Ballad is symmetrical, and it need scarcely be added that the solo part shows consummate knowledge of the technique of the violin. The two pieces are entitled respectively Barcarolla and Villanella, the first in G minor and the second in G major. They are both equally remarkable for freshness in phraseology and what may be termed breezy unconventionality, united, of course, to perfect musicianship. The Villanella is irresistibly catching and is certain to become a favourite piece in the repertory of violinists. It should be added that the pianoforte part in Dr. Mackenzie's compositions is not merely an accompaniment, but is intrinsically interesting, being full of musicianly touches.

Novello's Short Anthems, Nos. 38 and 39.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

The first of these, "God so loved the world," by Matthew Kingston, is described as being "for Trinity season, or for general use." It is an extremely pleasing and expressive little composition in one symmetrical movement, three-two measure. The succeeding Anthem, "O ye that love the Lord," by J. W. Elliott, is equally simple and almost equally attractive. The unusual cadence at the climax is very effective.

FOREIGN NOTES.

The number of operatic works produced at the Royal Opera of Berlin during the past year amounted to forty-nine. As regards the number of performances accorded to individual composers, Wagner was, of course, facile princeps with seventy representations of nine works; Mascagni coming in second with thirty-three performances of the one work by which he has so rapidly gained popularity; C. M. von Weber being third with twenty-eight performances, including twenty-two devoted to his otherwise rarely-heard "Oberon."

Tschaikowsky's opera "Eugène Onégin" was announced to be performed, for the first time in Germany, last month at the Hamburg Stadt-Theater.

A series of "model performances" of opera, ranging from Gluck to Wagner, is to be given from July to September next, at the Coburg Court Theatre, under the auspices of the art-loving Duke Ernest, and under the direction of Professor Julius Hey.

Baron Franchetti's opera "Asrael" was performed last month, for the first time at Munich, where, however, it met with but moderate success. The work was also produced last month at Dresden, Gotha, and at Prague.

Anton Rubinstein, who but rarely plays in public now, will give a Concert this month at Berlin, in the course of which he will play his own Pianoforte Concerto in E flat major. The proceeds are to be devoted to charitable purposes.

The two hundredth performance of Bizet's evergreen "Carmen" was recorded on the 2nd ult. at the Berlin Opera, the work having been first produced here not quite twelve years ago. This is the highest number of performances, within the space of time indicated, ever accorded to any operatic work, of either native or foreign origin, at this institution.

Professor Carl Schroeder, Capellmeister at Sondershausen, has completed an opera in three acts, entitled "Aspasia," the libretto by Herr Bittong, which is to be shortly brought out both at Sondershausen and at Hamburg.

Johann Strauss's first venture in grand opera, "Ritter Pazman," was at length produced last month at the Imperial Opera of Vienna, under the direction of Herr Jahn. The work, although most sumptuously put on the stage, met, however, with scarcely more than a succès d'estime, the portions in it which attracted the most genuine applause being just those where the appropriate introduction of dance rhythms afforded the composer an opportunity for the display of his special talent.

A Japanese theatre, for theatrical and musical performances, is to form part of the forthcoming Exhibition at Vienna.

According to the Hamburger Correspondent Dr. Hans von Bülow will resign his conductorship of the Berlin Philharmonic Concerts at the end of the present season, and will probably be succeeded by Dr. Hans Richter, with whom negotiations are already in progress.

A most important sale of autographs of musicians is announced to take place at Berlin (L. Liepmannssohn) on the 15th inst., the numbers including a complete Mass in B flat by Joseph Haydn; three hitherto unpublished letters written by Mozart to his wife, dated 1790 and 1791; several letters and original papers from the pen of Richard Wagner, as well as letters by Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann, Chopin, Mendelssohn, Berlioz, and many others.

An interesting revival took place on the 17th ult., at the Darmstadt Hof-Theater, in the performance of the opera "Tannhäuser," by C. A. Mangold, the late highly-gifted Darmstadt musical director. The work had been composed simultaneously with Wagner's opera of the same name, and was performed a year after the first performance of the latter—viz., in 1846, at Darmstadt, where it was well received, being, however, soon after overshadowed by the superior attractions of Wagner's work.

At a recent Concert of the Musikalische Akademie, of Munich, the programme included two novelties by young resident musicians—viz., a "Schauspiel Ouverture," by A. Sandberger, and a symphonic movement, entitled "Sonnenuntergang," by A. Gorter, both of which were received with much favour by the audience, and are also spoken of in laudatory terms in the leading press organs.

Frau Amalie Joachim will start upon a Concert tour in the United States next month, when the gifted singer proposes to repeat the highly interesting interpretations illustrative of the development of the German Lied which have attracted so much attention recently in German Concert-rooms.

Herr Felix Draeseke, of Dresden, and Dr. Richard Pohl, of Baden-Baden, two well-known German musicians, have just been the recipients of complimentary grants of 1,000 and 500 marks respectively from the Beethoven Fund of the Allgemeine Deutsche Musik-verein, as an acknowledgment of the services rendered by them to the cause of the Society. Herr Draeseke has also lately been created a doctor honoris causâ by the philosophical faculty of the Leipzig University, and is now engaged upon the composition of an "Akademische Festouverture" in acknowledgment of the distinction conferred upon him.

A symphonic poem, suggested by Grillparzer's tragedy "Des Meeres und der Liebe Wellen," was recently performed for the first time, with considerable success, at Gera. The composer of the work is Herr Carl Kleemann, Capellmeister at the Hof-Theater of that town.

This year's Musical Festival of the Lower Rhine is to take place in Whitsun Week, at Cologne. The proceedings on that occasion will include, as a special feature, the performance of a number of representative works indicative of the development of the art since Beethoven, and irrespective of the nationality of their composers.

A most successful performance took place recently, at Königsberg, of Richard Strauss's new symphonic poem entitled "Tod und Verklärung."

The Oratorien-verein of Augsburg, under the excellent conductorship of Dr. Schletterer, has just celebrated, with a performance of "The Messiah," the twenty-fifth anniversary of its foundation.

Another youthful pianist has recently made his début with sensational success in Viennese concert-rooms. His name is Raoul Koczalki, he is seven years of age, and his répertoire includes Bach, Schumann, Chopin, and Liszt. Dr. Hanslick speaks most highly of the advanced technical acquirements of the lad.

Mozart's early operatic works, "La finta giardiniera" and "Bastien und Bastienne," concluding the cycle of the master's operas recently produced at the Vienna Hof-Theater, have proved their scarcely diminished vitality by being received with unexpectedly hearty applause by the Viennese public.

Frau Ingeborg von Bronsart's opera "Hiarne," successfully brought out last year at the Berlin Royal Opera, was announced to be produced also at the Royal Opera, Hanover, on the 31st ult., with Madame Brandt and Herr Grüning in the principal parts.

A new three-act opera, "Königin Bertha," was to be brought out, as the first novelty of the season, on the 24th ult., at the Kroll'sche Theater, under the auspices of the Berlin Gesellschaft der Opern-Freunde. The composer is Herr Otto Kurth, musical director at Lüneburg.

In connection with the recent Mozart Centenary an interesting brochure is about to be published at Prague, dealing with the master's stay at that capital during the period of the first performance of "Don Giovanni." The author of the little volume, which is said to be founded upon newly discovered original documents, is the Bohemian composer, the Baron Rodolphe Prochazka.

M. Bertrand, the new director of the Paris Grand Opéra, inaugurated his managerial duties at that national institution with a performance, on the 1st ult., of Gounod's operatic masterpiece "Faust." Two new ballets are to be produced here at an early date—viz., "Malatesta," by M. Gaillard, with music by M. Vidal, and M. Wormser's "Don Quixote." The first operatic novelty, which it is hoped will be ready for performance during this month, is "Salammbo," by M. Reyer, the composer of "Sigurd," and, in April, M. Massenet's "Hérodiade" is to be given for the first time at the Grand Opéra, with Madame Melba and M. Lassalle in the leading parts. "Lohengrin" is to keep its place on the bills, and is to suffer no cutting or alteration. Among other works to be revived or performed here for the first time during the current year are Saint-Saëns's "Samson et Dalila," Glinka's "La vie pour le Czar," Boïto's "Mefistofele," Gluck's "Armide," and Wagner's "Die Meistersinger." Thus it would appear that if only one half of these schemes are destined to be realised by the new manager, his activity on behalf of the art will compare most favourably with that displayed by his predecessors.

M. Massenet is said to be engaged upon the score of a new opera entitled "Amy Robsart," the libretto being founded upon Sir Walter Scott's novel "Kenilworth."

Bach's "Christmas" Oratorio was performed, for the first time in France, by the Paris "Société des grandes auditions musicales," on the 22nd ult., at the Théâtre du Vaudeville, under the direction of M. Gabriel Marié.

M. Massenet has completed the orchestration of the opera "Kassya," left in an uncompleted state by the late Léo Delibes, and the work is to be brought out in the autumn at the Paris Opéra Comique.

M. Bourgault-Ducoudray's opera "Thamara" was produced on December 27 at the Paris Grand Opéra, this being the last managerial effort of the retiring directors. Mdlle. Domenech and M. Engel sang the principal parts. The novelty was well received and has been favourably noticed by the press.

Verdi and Arrigo Boïto are both suffering from the prevailing epidemic, the latter being attacked somewhat severely; the former, it is said, only slightly, and his advanced age notwithstanding, his condition creates no alarm. Verdi, who is staying at Genoa, is in his seventy-ninth year.

A committee, including M. Ambroise Thomas, M. Massenet, and other influential French musicians, has just been formed in Paris for the purpose of raising subscriptions for a monument to be erected over the grave of the late Henry Litolff, at the cemetery of Colombes.

A new three-act opera, entitled "Celeste," the libretto founded upon M. Marenco's novel of the same title, was brought out last month at the National Theatre of Bucharest, where it met with a very good reception. The composer, M. Francesco Septrino, received a decoration on the occasion in question from the King of Roumania, as an encouragement to the national art.

A season of Italian Opera was inaugurated last month at St. Petersburg with "La Favorita," Madame Orsini and MM. Masini and Lombardi in the principal parts. Donizetti's opera was succeeded by Verdi's "Aïda," with Mdlle. Libia Drog and the tenor, Ravelli, as the leading executants.

A new operetta, entitled "Susinette," by a lady composer, Signora Teresa Fuidi, has just met with a most complete success at the La Fenice Theatre, of Naples.

As a sign of the increasing interest which has sprung up of late years in Italy as regards the music of the countrymen of Beethoven and Wagner, it may be noticed that our Milan contemporary La Perseveranza has opened, with the new year, a permanent column, under the able editorship of Signor Eugenio Pirani, devoted entirely to the musical activity of the Fatherland and headed "La Germania Musicale."

Wagner's "Die Walküre" met with a most favourable reception on its first performance last month at Turin, and the same composer's "Lohengrin" has just been most enthusiastically received at Ferrara.

It is stated in Italian journals that a collection, which promises to be highly interesting, of Rossini's letters is being prepare for publication, and that search is being made for that purpose, under the auspices of the Italian Government, both in the French capital, where the composer of "Guillaume Tell" resided for so many years, and elsewhere.

The house at Pesaro where Gioacchino Rossini first saw the light on February 29, 1792, is to be purchased and kept in good preservation by the municipality of that town.

Some interesting and successful revivals have just taken place at the Teatro Nazionale, of Rome, under the zealous management of Signor Cavori—viz., of Pergolesi's "La Serva Padrona," Cimarosa's "Il Matrimonio Segreto," and Paisiello's "La Scuffiara Raggiratrice." The performances had been most carefully rehearsed, under the conductorship of Signor Sebastiani.

Verdi's once popular opera "I due Foscari" was revived last month with great success at Siena, the performance being, moreover, described as an excellent one. The work was first performed at Rome in 1844.

An excellent first performance of Wagner's "Tannhäuser" took place on December 29 at the La Scala, of Milan, Herr Scheidemantel, of Dresden, singing the part of Wolfram. The work met with an enthusiastic reception.

Three Italian composers have consigned finished operas to Signor Sonzogno, the well-known music publisher. Umberto Giordano has written "Mala Vita," in three acts, the libretto taken from the drama of the same name by Signori di Giacomo and Cognetti. Francesco Cilea has written "La Tilda," also in three acts; and Ernesto Coon, who is of English parentage on his father's side, has finished an opera in two acts, with a prologue, entitled "Teresa Raquin," the subject taken from Zola's novel. It is believed that all three operas will be put on the stage directly. Another young Neapolitan composer, Signor Napoletano, a pupil of the Conservatoire, hopes to have his first work, the "Profeta Velato" (The Veiled Prophet), put on the San Carlo stage, should that Opera House be opened.

Verdi's "Aïda" is drawing full houses just now (despite the prevailing financial depression) at the San Carlos Theatre, of Lisbon, where the work has been most carefully and elaborately remounted under the conductorship of Senhor José Tolosa.

Under the title of "Per la Walkiria di R. Wagner," a volume has just been published (Turin: Roux and Co.) containing a series of very interesting papers, which originally appeared in the Gazetta Letteraria, of Turin, from the pen of Signor Giuseppe Depanis.

Two new zarzuelas have just been successfully brought out at Barcelona—viz., at the Eldorado, the one act "El Toque de Rancho," the music by SS. Marques and Sellares; and at the Tivoli, "Karravion," in two acts, with a lively libretto by Señor José Zaldwar, and some, it is said, very charming music by Señor Frederico Gassola.

A new Mass by Signor Luigi Mancinelli was recently performed, under his direction, at the Church of San Francisco, Madrid, when it met with the highest appreciation of connoisseurs.

At one of the recent Concerts of chamber music, instituted by the music publisher M. Belaiew, at St. Petersburg, two new string quartets, by representatives of the modern Russian School, MM. Skolow and Glazounow, obtained a first hearing, and were extremely well received.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE "VICAR OF BRAY."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—The following notes respecting the above song now under discussion may be of interest to some of your readers. The air which Dr. Mee discovered in a MS. dated 1752 has evidently been originally copied from a book in six volumes, published by Walsh in 1734, entitled "The British Musical Miscellany; or, the Delightful Grove." A reference to this book, Vol. I., p. 30, will show that it is note for note and in the same key as the air in Dr. Mee's MS. I do not think that it is the original air to which the "Vicar of Bray" was written, but I have no proof to the contrary. The air is undoubtedly "Bessy Bell and Mary Gray," for in the ballad opera of "The Mock Doctor," printed in 1732, by John Watts, the same air is printed under the old title, "Bessy Bell." This copy is not merely like it, but is exactly the same except in being set a note lower in pitch. The air in question was one to a ballad before Ramsay's time, now lost (my earliest copy of Ramsay's song is in a collection by him, printed for the author, 1721), and this tune was first printed in Henry Playford's "Original Scotch Tunes," 1700 and 1701. The tune printed by Playford is not identical with the one given in "The Mock Doctor," but sufficient similarity exists between them. It is found to be more similar in W. Thomson's "Orpheus Caledonius," 1725, folio, and in his octavo edition, 1733. Bremner's "Thirty Scots Songs," published in Edinburgh about 1745 (and reprinted many times afterwards, both in Edinburgh and London), has the tune as reprinted by Dr. Mee in last month's Musical Times.

I think it is probable that Walsh, not knowing the tune (if it ever had one previously) to the "Vicar of Bray," set it to "Bessy Bell" in his "British Musical Miscellany," 1734; he afterwards republished it in his "Merry Musician; or, a Cure for the Spleen," 1735, Vol. II. The air to the "Vicar of Bray" now so familiar was originally a tune for a song called the "Country Garden," the words of which appear to be lost. The "Country Garden" had two settings, of which the "Vicar of Bray" version was the "new way," as witness the following from a Flute Tutor, by Daniel Wright, circa 1735-6:—

THE "COUNTRY GARDEN" (THE NEW WAY).

From "The Compleat Tutor for ye Flute," by Daniel Wright, 8vo, circa 1735.

As far as my researches have gone, I do not find the "Vicar of Bray" united to its now popular air before late in the eighteenth century; not, I believe, prior to the song of the "Neglected Tar," by Edward Rushton, of Liverpool, which, set to a version of the same air, made it popular.

Respecting the words of the song, Chappell, quoting Nichols, tells us that the song "Vicar of Bray" was written by a soldier in George I.'s reign; I have now to claim another authorship for it. In a copy of a book published in Queen Anne's reign, called "Miscellaneous writings in verse and prose, both serious and comical . . . by Mr. Edward Ward, Vol. III., the second edition, with large additions and amendments. London, 1712." 8vo, at page 321 is the following poem in eighteen verses, some of which are here reproduced :—

THE RELIGIOUS TURNCOAT; OR, THE TRIMMING PARSON.

I lov'd no king in Forty-one,
When Prelacy went down,
A cloak and band I then put on
And preach'd against the Crown.

Chorus—A Turncoat is a cunning man,
That cants to admiration,
And prays for any side to gain
The people's approbation.

. . . . . .

When Charles return'd into the land
The English Crown's supporter,
I shifted off my cloak and band,
And then became a Courtier.
Chorus—A Turncoat, &c.

The King's religion I profest,
And found there was no harm in't;
I cog'd and flatter'd like the rest,
Till I had got preferment.
Chorus—A Turncoat, &c.

. . . . . .

When Royal James began his reign,
And mass was us'd in common,
I shifted off my faith again,
And then became a Roman.
Chorus—A Turncoat, &c.

. . . . . .

When William had possess'd the throne,
And cur'd the nation's grievance,
New principles I then put on,
And swore to him allegiance.
Chorus—A Turncoat, &c.

. . . . . .

But when Queen Anne the throne posses't,
I then to save my bacon,
Turn'd High Church, thinking that was best,
But found myself mistaken.
Chorus—A Turncoat, &c.

. . . . . .

Therefore, all you, both high and low,
Let me for once direct ye,
Serve no cause longer than you know
The party can protect you.
Chorus—A Turncoat, &c.

The "Vicar of Bray" is laid a generation later than the foregoing, but whoever was its author he has been indebted to Ward's song. Who Ned Ward was, and how he was pilloried by Pope in the "Dunciad," is out of the present question.

I have not sent copies of the airs I have referred to above, as I do not wish to take up valuable space, but can do so either privately or through your paper should it be desired.—I am, yours truly,

Frank Kidson.

128, Burley Road, Leeds.

P.S.—I also find Dr. Mee's version of the "Vicar of Bray" in an early engraved musical broadside, circa 1735-40, in my possession. It is entitled "The Vicar of Bray set for the German Flute." No publisher's or engraver's name is attached.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—The following facts regarding the air of "Bessy Bell and Mary Gray" may be of interest to Mr. Mee. In "Songs of Scotland," edited, with notes, by George Farquhar Graham in 1849—undoubtedly our best collection—the air occurs identical with that quoted by Mr. Mee from "Thirty Scots Songs," but in the key of F.

Graham, in his foot-note, says, "Mr. Stenhouse's note upon this song is as follows: 'The first stanza of this song is old, the rest of it was written by Ramsay. Thomson adapted Ramsay's improved song to the old air in his "Orpheus Caledonius" in 1725, from whence it was copied into the first volume of Watts's "Musical Miscellany," printed in London in 1729. The tune also appears in Craig's Collection, in 1730, and in many others subsequent to that period. . . . Mr. Gay selected the tune of "Bessy Bell and Mary Gray" for one of his songs in the "Beggar's" opera, beginning, "A curse attends that woman's love who always would be pleasing," acted at London in 1728.'" (The two young ladies thus commemorated died of the plague in the year 1645.)

The above extract proves that the origin of this melody must be sought for as a printed production a good quarter of a century earlier than the date ascribed to the flute melody first quoted by Mr. Mee; so that his surmise gains strength and probability—i.e., that the air of "Bessy Bell and Mary Gray" was the real origin of the "Dragoon's" air, and so of the "Vicar of Bray" melody.

However, I subjoin a third melody, which can be found, set to English words, and entitled "Once a farmer and his wife," in the Royal Edition of "Songs of Wales," which, spite of great differences in tonality, bears a marked resemblance to the two tunes under discussion in its "lilt," accent, and rhythm, and has even a still more unusual final bar.—I am, yours very truly,

F. R. C.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Biggleswade.—At the Town Hall, on the 7th ult., an encouraging performance was given of Sterndale Bennett's May Queen by the recently formed District Choral Society, conducted by Mr. J. G. Cooper. The solos were efficiently rendered by the Misses Ada Loaring and Florence Croft, and Messrs. A. Kenningham and H. E. Lockhart; the pianoforte and harmonium accompaniments were played by Mrs. Welch and Mrs. Kempe.

Bournemouth.—The pupils of Dr. Lemare's Academy of Music gave two Invitation Concerts, at the Bijou Hall, on Thursday, the 14th ult. Both Concerts were found to be interesting, and some of the pianoforte playing showed considerable talent awaiting development. The audiences were highly appreciative on each occasion.

Brentwood.—The Vocal and Instrumental Society gave its first Concert of the season at the Town Hall on Thursday, December 10, when Handel's Acis and Galatea was performed, followed by a miscellaneous selection. The soloists were Madame Worrell, Mr. James Leyland, and Mr. Albert Fairbairn. The choruses were given with firmness and precision. Mr. Leyland and Mr. Fairbairn were especially successful with "Love in her eyes" and "O ruddier than the cherry" respectively. In the second part the playing of Schubert's Rosamunde Ballet music, by the orchestra, deserves special mention. Mr. Henry Lewis was leader, Miss Duchesne accompanist, and Mr. Louis J. Turrell conducted.

Buckfastleigh.—The Musical Society gave its first Concert for the season on the 12th ult., in the Town Hall, to an appreciative audience. Sterndale Bennett's Cantata the May Queen formed the first part. The soprano solo was taken by Mrs. Parnell Tucker, of Ashburton; the tenor solos, by Mr. Shapcott, of Exeter; the bass, by Mr. H. Tucker, of Ashburton; and the choruses were given in capital style. The second part opened with Cowen's "Boat Song," which was warmly received. Miss Holman, in some violin solos, showed natural ability and skilful training. The quartet "Away to the Forest" (Franz Abt), by Mrs. C. King Smith, Master T. J. Howe, Messrs. F. Ford and C. King Smith, was loudly applauded; the trio "O memory" (Leslie), by Mrs. C. K. Smith, Miss Ashton, and Mr. Shapcott was greatly admired; the part-song "Come let us be merry" was well given, and the National Anthem brought a successful musical evening to a close.

Caterham.—The Choral Society gave the first of its Concerts this season on the 13th ult., the chief work being Cowen's St. John's Eve. Miss Fusselle, Miss Dwelley, Mr. Bovett, and Mr. Musgrove Tufnail were successful in the solo music, and the choir, under Mr. Hunt's bâton, gave the choruses with good effect. A Trio by Conradin Kreutzer, for clarinet, bassoon, and pianoforte, was played with great taste and expression by Messrs. J. E. Street, Oscar Street, and Charles Hunt. The attendance was rather small.

Dumfries.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Handel's Judas Maccabæus in the Mechanics' Institute, on the 20th ult. In place of the Overture, the Dead March from Saul was played in memory of the late Duke of Clarence. The principals were Miss Marjorie Eaton, Miss Bertenshaw, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. Riley; Miss Eaton gaining an encore for her beautiful singing of "So shall the lute," and Miss Bertenshaw for her rendering of "Father of Heaven." Mr. Hume led the orchestra, and Mr. Starkey conducted admirably.

Hawkhurst, Kent.—A Pianoforte Recital was given by Mr. Tobias A. Matthay at the Lecture Hall, on the 8th ult. The programme comprised a varied selection of well-known works, and also some new compositions ("Love-phases") from his own pen. Miss Beverley Robinson varied the programme with some songs, and much interest was shown in the Recital.

Kelso, N.B.—Mr. Tobias A. Matthay gave a Pianoforte Recital at the Town Hall, on the 12th ult. His programme was made up of selections from Brahms, Schumann, Chopin, Henselt, Beethoven, Raff, Grieg, Nicodé, Liszt, and some compositions of his own, "Love-phases." Miss Margaret Kennedy gave some good songs and the Recital was well attended.

Leicester.—The first part of Handel's Messiah was given by a largely augmented choir in St. Mark's Church, on the 3rd ult., under the direction of Mr. J. W. Knight, the Organist and Choirmaster. The soloists were Mrs. T. R. Russell, Miss Staynes, Mr. A. Page, and Mr. J. Cooper. The performance was good and highly appreciated by the large congregation assembled.——A very interesting Lecture was given on the 11th ult. at the Museum by Mr. Carl Armbruster, the subject being "Franz Schubert, the greatest song-composer of all times." Several songs of the master were rendered with great taste by Miss Pauline Cramer. Both lecture and illustrations were received with much applause.

Melbourne (Victoria).—A series of Organ Recitals were given during November in St. Paul's Cathedral by the Organist and Choirmaster, Mr. Ernest Wood, formerly of St. Peter's, Eaton Square, and Lincoln Cathedral. Owing to the unsuitable hour fixed by the Chapter for the Recitals, the attendance was at first sparse, but the excellence of the programmes, and Mr. Wood's masterly performances, have, we are glad to say, quite overcome the difficulty.

Roath, Cardiff.—A performance of Spohr's Last Judgment was given on New Year's Eve by the choir of St. Margaret's Parish Church, under the direction of the Organist and Choirmaster, Mr. Walter Scott, who presided at the organ. The whole of the soprano solos were beautifully sung by Master H. Coward, the remaining solos being effectively given by other members of the choir.

Shifnal, Salop.—The Choral Society gave its first Concert for this season on Tuesday, December 29, in the Town Hall, which was well filled with a most appreciative audience. The work chosen was The Messiah, which was excellently rendered. The soloists were Miss Watkis (who undertook to sing, at the last minute, in the place of Mrs. Burghope, who was suffering from cold), Miss Edith Ransom, Mr. Byolin, and Mr. Bennett, all of whom acquitted themselves admirably. The band played remarkably well, especially in the accompaniments to the solos, the voices never being overpowered by the instruments, as is so often the case. The Conductor was Mr. C. H. Payne.

Southampton.—A Concert was given by the Polytechnic, at Hartley Hall, on the 13th ult. The vocalists were Miss Florence Monk (daughter of the late Dr. W. H. Monk), Mr. F. Noyes, Mr. A. N. Kendall, Mr. Palmer, Mr. J. Billett, and Mr. T. Faulkner. Miss Monk displayed an excellent voice and method, and her efforts were rewarded with very hearty applause. Instrumental music was contributed by Rev. F. James (violin), Mr. G. Ivimey (pianoforte), and Mr. Sharpe (harmonium).

Tottenham.—Dr. E. H. Turpin gave an Organ Recital at Christ Church on the 15th ult. The programme included Bach's Fantasia and Fugue in A minor, Mendelssohn's Overture, "Harmonie Musik," Variations by Beethoven and Spohr, and other pieces. Mr. W. A. Hamilton sang Mendelssohn's "Then shall the righteous," and other vocal pieces were contributed by the choir.

Tunbridge Wells.—Sir John Stainer's Cantata The Daughter of Jairus was given at Christ Church, before a large congregation, on the 13th ult., under the direction of Mr. R. K. Simons, Organist of the Church, the choir being augmented on the occasion by the Tunbridge Wells Amateur Glee and Madrigal Society. The solos were sung with much taste and expression by Master C. Stoner (soprano), Rev. Hornby Steer (tenor), and Rev. R. T. Thornton (bass), and the choruses were rendered with much spirit and precision. Mr. E. C. Mitchell (pupil of Mr. R. K. Simons) presided ably at the organ.

Wolverhampton.—The first of a series of Sacred Concerts organised by Mr. Owen H. Powell and Mr. H. Mills was given in the Agricultural Hall, on Sunday evening, the 10th ult. Miss E. Falkner and Miss Emilie Lloyd joined in the duet "Quis est Homo" (Rossini's Stabat Mater); Miss Falkner sang "Angels ever bright and fair" and "The Worker," and Miss Lloyd "Calvary" and "O rest in the Lord." Mr. Owen H. Powell gave three solos on the organ and also played the accompaniments. Mr. J. C. Reidy was successful in his recitations, and Mr. H. Mills sang "It is enough." There was a good attendance, and the Concert seemed to give the utmost satisfaction.

FAMOUS VIOLINS AND VIOLIN MAKERS.

THIS SERIES OF PUBLICATIONS now comprises three Works, each compiled from original sources, and containing much information hitherto unpublished. The books are handsomely bound in cloth, and illustrated with superb coloured plates by Mr. Alfred Slocombe and Mr. Shirley Slocombe.

THE TUSCAN STRADIVARI. A short account of a Violin made by Stradivari for Cosimo de Medici, Grand Duke of Tuscany, in 1690. Illustrated by three coloured plates and fac-simile reproductions of some interesting records concerning the instrument.

SMALL FOLIO. PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

A few copies of the first notice of this Violin appeared printed on hand-made paper in a quaint paper cover, without illustrations, but containing fac-similes of the interesting receipt given at the time of the purchase of the Violin in 1794 and of the label Stradivari inserted in the instrument.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

THE SALABUE STRADIVARI. A History and Critical Description of the famous Violin, commonly called "Le Messie," made by Stradivari in 1716, and afterwards sold by his son to Count Cozio di Salabue. Illustrated by three coloured plates.

SMALL FOLIO. PRICE SIX SHILLINGS.

THE LIFE AND WORK OF MAGGINI, the Great Brescian Maker, based on information derived from the archives of the town of Brescia, and from other sources, containing three coloured plates of a Maggini Violin of great beauty, photographs of Brescia and of Maggini's house, with a fac-simile of his handwriting, and numerous other illustrations.

SMALL FOLIO. PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

OTHER IMPORTANT VOLUMES IN THIS SERIES ARE IN PREPARATION.

GIPSY SONGS

COMPOSED BY

KAREL BENDL.

THE ENGLISH VERSION BY F. CORDER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence each Series.

FIRST SERIES.

I am a free born Romany.
One old song my Mother taught.
Gipsy boy.
What plaintive dirge.
When the Gipsy heareth.
One pure drop of water.
Sound the harp and cembal.
Sweet is our farewell song.
How silent is the forest grove
Oh, my fair lost rosebud!
Dulcimer, let me play thee.
Play, oh play, ye gipsies!
The end is nigh, oh! let me die.
Happy, free, and careless.

SECOND SERIES.

Ho, comrades! let wild melody.
Decked in spotless linen.
Wild wanderer, thy heart is strong.
Sound the harp and zither.
Love, hear my lips pronounce thy name.
See 'mid craggy passes.
Jolly rags.
Wand'ring ever wand'ring.
See this pretty girdle.
How long it seems.
On the lake.
When she dances with me.

TWELVE SONGS

COMPOSED BY

HENRY PURCELL.

EDITED AND ARRANGED, WITH ACCOMPANIMENT FOR THE PIANOFORTE BY

WILLIAM H. CUMMINGS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

The Knotting Song.
Nymphs and Shepherds.
I attempt from Love's sickness.
Full Fathom five.
Come unto these yellow sands.
When I am laid in earth.
I'll sail upon the Dog-Star.
They tell us that you mighty pow'rs
On the Brow of Richmond Hill.
Fairest Isle, all Isles excelling.
What shall I do?
From Rosy Bow'rs.

TEN CANZONETS

COMPOSED BY

J. HAYDN.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Despair.
Fidelity.
Hark! what I tell to thee (The Spirit Song).
High on the giddy bending mast (The Sailor's Song).
In thee I bear so dear a part (Sympathy).
My mother bids me bind my hair.
Now the dancing sunbeams play (The Mermaid's Song).
O tuneful voice!
She never told her love.
The season comes when first we met (Recollection).

AN ORATORIO, COMPOSED BY

GEO. SHINN, MUS. BAC., CANTAB.

Price 2s. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; Sol-fa, 1s.

The Work has been performed in various parts of London; also at Bristol, Brighton, Boston, Chelmsford, Chesterfield, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Gloucester, Hastings, Ipswich, Liverpool, Leicester, Manchester, Portsmouth, Sheffield, Wigan, Whitby, and other places, having been repeated in many instances.

"May be highly commended as an interesting and valuable addition to our shorter Oratorios and Cantatas, and contains several solos of much beauty; also duets, quartets, and choruses in great variety."—Sunday School Chronicle.

"The music is appropriate, interesting, melodious, and but of moderate difficulty. The work is one of Mr. Shinn's best efforts, and we all know that Mr. Shinn has written some charming music."—Essex County Chronicle.

"In our judgment no better work of the kind has yet been published. It is brimful of pretty melodies, and the harmonic effects show the skill of a painstaking and talented musician."—Free Methodist.

"The libretto is well chosen, and forms a good base whereon to compose a first-rate work. With regard to the music we feel we can hardly do it justice. . . . Where all is so good it is difficult to mention any special numbers."—United Service Gazette.

"It is cleverly written, and in an attractive style. The music is of a varied and pleasing character, so that it is likely to become very popular."—The Portsmouth Evening Mail.

"Mr. Shinn is well known, and deservedly so for his musical talent Continuity of design and freshness of conception are apparent throughout the work. It contains many effective solos and choruses, and the music is not difficult."—South London Press.

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION

ON THE

Sacred Passion of the Holy Redeemer

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY THE

REV. W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON, M.A.

SET TO MUSIC BY

J. STAINER.

This Work is an attempt to supply the want long felt of an easy and short form of Passion Music suitable for use in ordinary parish churches. It is composed for two solo voices, a Tenor and a Bass, and for the church choir. At intervals hymns occur, in which the whole congregation can join. The performance will probably not extend over forty minutes in duration, thus giving an opportunity for a suitable "address" if thought advisable. No orchestra is required, the accompaniments being specially adapted for the organ only; much of the expense usually attending Passion Services will therefore be avoided. The book of the words, for distribution among the congregation, will contain the music of the Hymns; by this means it is hoped that the congregation will be induced to take part heartily in the service.

VOCAL SCORE, PAPER COVER, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

PASSION SERVICE

NEW SACRED WORK

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL,

Composer of the "HOLY CITY," "RUTH," &c.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed, the work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively: 'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; scarlet cloth, 4s.

VESPER HYMN

TO BE SUNG AFTER EVENING SERVICE

WRITTEN AND COMPOSED BY

GEORGE KETT.

Peace for the soul that is weary,
With trouble and sorrow opprest;
Peace for the heart that is yearning
For freedom from sin and for rest;
Peace which the world cannot offer,
An earnest of Life that's Divine—
Jesu, we pray for Thy blessing,
And long for the peace that is Thine.

UNISON CHANTS

FOR THE PSALTER

A COLLECTION OF SINGLE ANGLICAN CHANTS

APPROPRIATED TO THE DAILY PSALMS IN THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

EXPRESSLY SELECTED AND ADAPTED FOR THE USE OF CHURCH CHOIRS AND CONGREGATIONS

EDITED BY

THE REV. CANON SIR F. A. G. OUSELEY,

Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., Precentor of Hereford, and Professor of Music in the University of Oxford, 1855-89,

AND

EDWIN GEORGE MONK,

Mus. Doc., Oxon., Organist and Master of the Choir, York Minster, 1859-83.

THE VOICE PART—Price One Shilling. ORGAN HARMONIES—Price Five Shillings.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

IN furtherance of a more general chanting of the Psalter in Churches, this Book of Unison Chants is an attempt to supply a plan sufficiently easy to secure extensive adoption, yet varied enough to be attractive, upon the one and only basis regarded by the Editors as being universally practicable—viz., the employment of Single Chant Melodies, to be sung "in Unison."

The present Work, projected (and even announced) some score of years ago, is intended to meet the need indicated, by providing a Series of easy and suitable Chants, for Unison Singing only, for the monthly course of the Psalter in the Book of Common Prayer. Not only have small and moderately qualified Choirs been kept in view, but also particularly the Voice of the great Congregation. In order to secure this much to be desired end—Chanting of the Daily Psalms by Choir and Congregation combined—the following means are proposed:—

I. Singing in Unison (strictly speaking, Octave-Singing).

II. Employment of Chants of Restricted Compass only; especially as to all Reciting-Notes.

III. Provision for Change of Chant at every fresh Psalm; and also, whenever in the course of any of the longer Psalms such change could be made to follow the significance of the Sacred Text, conduce to its clearer understanding, or enforce its teaching.

IV. Suggestion for occasional Change of Instrumental Harmony as a further mode (often of much value and potency) of heightening the desired expression; or of calling attention to important divisions, and changes of subject or utterance, in cases when actual change of the voice-part seemed undesirable.

Transposition has been largely resorted to, in order to meet the requirements of a limited vocal range; and, more rarely, slight modifications and excisions have been necessary, to carry through and ensure the specific scope and purpose of the Work.

It will not, it is hoped be imagined by any that in this advocacy of Unisonal Chanting distinctively for the Psalter there is the slightest wish to discourage the use of Choral Harmony in Divine Worship, with all the moving and noble effects produced by well-balanced and refined Part-Singing; or a desire for the further extension of Unison-Singing; beyond its common employment for the People's Part in Confession, Lord's Prayer, Response, and Creed. Not to mention simple "Anthems" and "Services," which are available for Choirs where practice and discipline prevail, the Canticles with carefully selected Chants, as well as Hymn-Tunes, may readily be sung in Harmony by such Choirs against the Congregational Unison, by reason of constant recurrence, and consequent familiarity: advantages which cannot attach to the Hundred and Fifty Psalms of David, which do not quickly become well known to those singers who chant on Sundays only, and are unaccustomed to daily use of the Psalter in Matins and Evensong.

BEAUTIFUL IN MUSIC

A CONTRIBUTION TO

THE REVISAL OF MUSICAL ÆSTHETICS

BY

DR. EDUARD HANSLICK.

Seventh Edition, enlarged and revised (Leipzig, 1885).

TRANSLATED BY

GUSTAV COHEN.

PRICE SIX SHILLINGS.

"Messrs. Novello and Co. have done good service to musical art in this country by publishing an English translation of Dr. Edward Hanslick's 'The Beautiful in Music,' a work now in its seventh German edition. The translator, Mr. Gustav Cohen, has, of course, taken the latest edition as his text and accomplished his task with perfect clearness, aiming, as he says, 'not so much at perfection in style as at reflecting with fidelity the mind and spirit of the author.' Nothing could be more timely than the appearance of this book, because at no former period has the delusion it seeks to dispel been more rampant and mischievous. Dr. Hanslick mainly assails the theory that the office of music is to represent feeling, and contends that the beauty of a composition is specifically musical—that is, inherent in the combinations of musical sounds, and independent of all alien, extra-musical notions. . . . We recommend Hanslick's book to the careful consideration of amateurs."—Daily Telegraph.

THE TEN VIRGINS

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

(OP. 42)

COMPOSER OF "THE HOLY CITY," "RUTH," "PASSION SERVICE," "JOAN OF ARC," &c.

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"The Cantata is replete with charming music of that school which every one can appreciate, and which found so distinguished a master in Mendelssohn. If composers would have their works popular with choral societies, it is only reasonable to expect that they will bestow a fair share of their attention upon the choruses. The old masters knew this, and there is no doubt that the fact has much to do with the long-continued popularity of their works; and there is equally little doubt, we think, that the principal cause of the failure of so many works produced now-a-days is the uninteresting nature of the choruses. Compare the choruses of the three most popular works ever produced—'The Messiah,' 'Creation,' and 'Elijah'—with a large number of modern works, and our meaning will be clear. If we mistake not, such thoughts as these passed through Mr. Gaul's mind when he set himself to compose those works which have placed him in the front rank of English composers—the 'Holy City,' 'Joan of Arc,' and 'The Ten Virgins'—and that the public endorse his views is proved by the enormous sale which these works have had."—Newcastle Daily Journal, Dec. 17, 1890.

"The subject is an excellent one for a Cantata . . . a stronger work than 'Joan of Arc.' . . . Melodious, vocal, and of moderate difficulty, and, like Mr. Gaul's earlier Cantatas, will be eagerly welcomed by societies in search of new works having these characteristics."—Newcastle Daily Leader, Dec. 16, 1890.

BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE CHOIR.—"The hall was overcrowded by an audience that was disposed to encore every other number of the work. If the verdict of a miscellaneous audience, that could have no possible reason for being favourably prejudiced, is of any account in estimating the merit of a new work, a career that will rival that of the same composer's 'Holy City' may be predicted for 'The Ten Virgins.' That Mr. Gaul should have secured this undoubted popular success with a work far more contrapuntal than any of his former works, is a remarkable tribute to his power of welding science and beauty into one whole."—Musical Times, Dec. 1, 1890.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

The above Cantata has been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral, including three numbers for Sopranos and Contraltos (The Virgins).

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal parts, each 1s. Words only, 5s. per 100.

Staff Edition. Eleventh to Fifteenth Thousand.

JOAN OF ARC

A DRAMATIC CANTATA

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

FANNY BOUFFLEUR

(SOPRANO)

For Oratorios, Cantatas, Concerts, &c., 239, Upper Parliament Street, Liverpool.

MISS ADA LEE

(SOPRANO).

"Miss Ada Lee is possessed of a remarkably sweet soprano voice, and all the taste of a true artist. Her success, from the first, was most marked, her contributions were beautifully given, and her charming version of Bishop's 'Tell me, my heart,' secured the first of several encores. "Comin' thro' the rye' was one, and on this, as on other subsequent occasions, the audience would fain have had her make a third successive appearance."—Cleckheaton Guardian, Dec. 18, 1891.

"Miss Lee's sweet voice was heard to great advantage in all her songs, her best effort being undoubtedly her first, 'The Glee Maiden,' of which she gave a fine exposition. For her fine rendering of 'A Maid of Sicily' she was also encored, and gave in almost inimitable style 'Comin' thro' the rye.'"—Middleton Guardian, Dec. 12, 1891.

"'Stabat Mater.'—Miss Lee gave with much sweetness the air 'Inflammatus,' and in the very difficult duet, 'Quis est homo,' sang excellently."—Pendleton Reporter, Nov. 18, 1891.

"'Messiah.'—Miss Ada Lee sang with fine finish, and threw into her part much religious fervour."—Runcorn Guardian, Dec. 30, 1891.

"'Messiah.'—Miss Ada Lee possesses a voice of good range and compass, and sang 'Rejoice greatly' and 'I know that my Redeemer' very effectively."—High Peak News, Dec. 26, 1891.

For Concerts, Oratorios, and Summer engagements, address, 45, Monton Street, Greenheys, Manchester; or, Messrs. Forsyth Bros., Regent Street, London, and Deansgate, Manchester.

Mr. EMLYN JONES is also booking engagements for the celebrated

CARDIFF NATIONAL WELSH CHOIR

Welsh Night at the Popular Concerts, Westbourne Park Chapel.

"The attraction was the celebrated Cardiff National Welsh Choir, the ladies appearing in the picturesque national costume. . . . From first to last, everything was encored and responded to. The Choir was beautifully balanced, and sung with excellent expression. . . . We would, in conclusion, echo the wish of many, that this excellent Choir should again be heard at these Concerts."—Paddington Mercury, November, 1891.

The Choir appeared with great success at the Lord Mayor's Banquet in November last.

This is their fourth consecutive season in London, and their popularity will be understood by the fact that they have appeared twelve and fifteen times at one place.

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY
BY WILLIAM H. CUMMINGS.

PREFACE.

STUDENTS of music, and others, desirous of ascertaining at what period any particular musician lived, have frequently to make a somewhat lengthened search before they can obtain the required information. In the following pages the dates, and places of birth and death, together with the details of the special branch of music cultivated by each individual, are given in a condensed form, so that important facts may be read at a glance. As a primer of rudimentary musical biography, it is believed that the present publication will prove of great service, and it is proposed to supplement what is detailed here with a larger work, giving fuller narrations of the stories of the lives of those whose names are included in the roll of musicians. The work now published is the result of much laborious time and trouble, and has been accomplished by reference, in many cases, to documents and registers not readily accessible, in cathedrals and churches, and private libraries. Every endeavour has been made to secure accuracy, but of course it would be vain to hope that no error has crept in; it is human to err. I shall, however, be obliged by any notice of apparent inaccuracy, and glad to receive well authenticated corrections. W. H. C.

THE MUSICAL TIMES
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
MARCH 1, 1892.

THE ROSSINI CENTENARY.

Yesterday (the 29th ult.) was the hundredth anniversary of Rossini's birth, and in various places on the Continent the occasion met with due recognition from the historic memory. As far as we are aware, no special and prominent notice was accorded to it in this country, which has forgotten all it ever learned about Rossini's operas, and knows the "Swan of Pesaro" only as the composer of a "Stabat Mater." It was different with the Mozart centenary a few months ago, when, in common with the rest of the civilised world, England came out of its absorption in the concerns of the present and faced about to contemplate for a moment a great figure still looming large in the ever-receding past—mayhap, also, to renew a somewhat faded impression of what constitutes a genuine claim to an immortality of remembrance. It is unnecessary to enter upon a comparison between Mozart and Rossini. As well might we compare the capital of a Corinthian column with the acanthus whose leaves it artistically reproduces, or a well-ordered landscape garden with some bosky dell where nature does as she pleases. The two composers, as far as concerns our present purpose, stand quite apart, and to look at one is to turn the back upon the other.

It might be well, perhaps, to keep comparisons of every kind out of the field in this case, because that is the best way to judge of Rossini as an individual product of his time, country, and circumstances. Such a restricted field of observation is, of course, not always nor even generally advisable. In the case of a universal art, the largest possible view should be the rule, and that can hardly be attained without losing sight of the lines which divide it into sections. He who ascends in a balloon to sketch the contour of a vast extent of country is not challenged to take notice of the walls and hedges that bound separate enclosures. Yet, if we want to understand the product of an individual garden and how it is affected by the conditions of growth, we only waste time when we look beyond the fence. The analogy holds in the case of Rossini, or, for that matter, any other composer, and applies exactly according to the measure in which he is unaffected by circumstances and influences from the great world. Rossini was an Italian composer pur et simple during that part of his career which made his name and fame. The forces that "rough-hewed" him in the little town of Pesaro were as Italian as the aspect of his birthplace when it lay basking in the sun, with feet washed by the lazy waters of the Venetian Gulf. It is said that Haydn's "Creation" and "Seasons" were favoured works in Pesaro during Rossini's boyhood, but they made as little impression upon him as did German compositions for the harpsichord. This, however, was not for want of help from the future composer's eager desire after all musical knowledge and the promptings of an instinct which reached forward to higher things than those lying immediately around. Rossini's bright and ardent spirit made him impatient of the conventional restrictions of teachers who hid their incompetence beneath a cloak of pedantry, but there were none others available. All he might do was to break with masters who could only say "Thou shalt" and "Thou shalt not," and were unable to answer when the pupil asked "Why?" He broke with them accordingly, and, like a bird escaped from the drudgery of learning to whistle a set tune, began to warble his "native wood-notes wild." "If I had had you for a master," he once said to Fétis, "I should have been that which is called a learned musician, for I had a taste for the style of the old masters." On the whole, perhaps, it is as well that he did not study under Fétis, but went out to sing as he was moved by the spirit of melody.

Italian melody soon flooded the world from its new source in the spirit and fancy of Pesaro's gifted son. "Tancredi" turned all eyes upon Rossini. Its tunes fell upon the popular ear like water upon desert sands, and were greedily absorbed. "Di tanti palpiti" made the Venetians wild with delight. On the morrow of its production the city rang with it, and the people hummed it even in the Courts of Justice, ushers crying "Silence" in vain.

> This music mads me, let it sound no more;
> For, though it have holp madmen to their wits,
> In me, it seems, it will make wise men mad.—
> Yet blessing on his heart that sent it me.

The Italians, while losing their senses in an intoxication of tune, did not cry out with Richard II. They drank melody, bathed in melody, and would have it so. As an Italian composer, writing for his own countrymen, Rossini held an unassailable position, and, working, as he did, for the present need of this and that theatre, with no thought of publication and propaganda, he is scarcely to blame if his music crossed the Alps, and disturbed the composers in possession there. We know how men like Beethoven and Schubert resented this invasion from the "land of song." They felt—and, from their point of view, rightly felt—that here was a foreign influence harmful, while its power lasted, to the interest of native art. But opposition was of small avail. The Rossinian fever spread over Europe, which resounded with the new melodies of the South from Norway to Vienna and from St. Petersburg to London. Never was such a triumph of pure tunefulness—of well-nigh spontaneous carollings, brilliant, graceful, touching now the chords of tender emotion, now exhilarating like a generous wine. Writing of the state of things in London at this period, Lord Mount-Edgcumbe remarked: "So entirely did Rossini engross the stage, that the operas of no other master were ever to be heard, with the exception of those of Mozart, and, of his, only 'Don Giovanni' and 'Le Nozze di Figaro' were often repeated. . . . It is singular how every other composer, past and present, was totally put aside, and these two alone named or thought of." While quoting the noble amateur who gave us such a valuable record of musical events and impressions, it is but just to show that, whether or no the wish was father to the thought, he indited a prophecy which events have proved to be at least partially successful. "The frippery and meretricious style of modern music is to the ear like tinsel to the eye, brilliant, striking for a moment, perhaps captivating, but it will be transitory, and speedily lost in the fluctuations of taste; and I think I may venture to predict that Rossini will not long have ceased to write before he will cease to be remembered, and that his music will be thrown aside as that of so many of his predecessors and superiors already is; while the name of Mozart, with those of his two great countrymen, Handel and Haydn, will live for ever." There spoke the judgment of the cold, grave North, which the sudden invasion of the enchanting spirit from the South did for a time derange. Rossini would probably have answered from Milan or Naples—assuming that he could hear anything amid the deafening applause of his compatriots: "How does all this concern me? I am an Italian, writing for Italians. Don't blame my country's grapes if the wine drunk under a foreign sky is distasteful."

The historian of music in our fast-expiring century will have to tell what came of the triumph of pure melody as sung by Rossini. That composer's dazzling success in his own country was a perfectly natural process, intelligible alike in its source and significance; but the irresistible march of his genius through Christendom is a circumstance not all at once to be understood nor, in its effects, to be estimated. Did it lay bare, like some mighty flood, the foundation upon which popular appreciation of music rests? This question is not without importance at a time when the art is becoming artificial in the hands of men who can deal with it after no better fashion:

> New ways I must invent, my grovelling name
> To raise aloft, and wing my flight to fame.

It may not have been wholly undesirable in the early decades of the century, while yet Beethoven lived, and German music was advancing with giant strides, to assert the might of simple melody. It is, in sooth, much more necessary to do so now; and, mayhap, when the need reaches its height another Rossini will arise. Then, through the débris of the present schools, we shall see the natural foundation of the art, and begin to build upon it a new and better structure. These are suggestive matters for thought.

Meanwhile, it can hardly be doubted that the success of Rossinian tune beyond the bounds of Italy had a great and abiding influence. That it had an influence at the time is obvious on the face of history. Not many composers followed the example of Schubert when he avowedly imitated the Rossini overture, but there were many who trimmed their sails to the prevailing wind, and others who, with perfect good sense and propriety, sought by effort to surprise the secret of so great a power. In our time the Rossinian fashion has died out, and it would be as undesirable as it is impossible to revive it. But the Muse of pure melody can shape herself in many ways. Let us see her, if not in one, then in another, that there may be no need to echo William Blake's pitiful invocation of the "Immortal Nine":—

> Whether on Ida's shady brow,
> Or in the chambers of the East,
> The chambers of the sun, that now
> From ancient melody have ceased;
> Whether in Heaven ye wander fair,
> Or the green corners of the earth,
> Or the blue regions of the air,
> Where the melodious winds have birth;
> . . . . . .
> How have you left the ancient love
> That bards of old enjoyed in you!
> The languid strings do scarcely move,
> The sound is forced, the notes are few!

Returning to Rossini as an Italian composer, it should not be overlooked, especially at the present moment, that he was a reformer of his country's lyric stage. He is not generally regarded in that light, the popular conception of him being that he was a man who wrote showy music without much trouble and never had a serious moment. This is partly true and partly false. He was assuredly a serious reformer. For example, he abolished, in opera seria, the dreary fashion which made it "a desert of talk, dotted here and there with an oasis of song." In "Tancredi" the characters declaimed to an orchestral accompaniment, and the whole work became tuneful. In "Elisabetta" Rossini substituted a string quartet for the pianoforte in accompanying recitative, and he himself wrote out the "graces" which vocalists had long been allowed to supply at their own sweet will.

These may seem small matters to us as we look back upon them, but they were very considerable reforms in their day, and regarded by many, perhaps, as portentous. Despite them it is often contended that Rossini never took his art seriously. There were moments—too many of them—when he showed himself in truth as the flaneur of music, but the objection is far too sweeping. He was serious, beyond question, while writing the music to the plague of darkness in "Mosé"—music which gave rise to a charge that he had stolen it from some German master; and he was equally in grave mood when the first act of "La Donna del Lago" was conceived. Of the Finale to that act, Azevedo says: "Rossini has shown in an astonishing manner that the most difficult combinations cannot affect his inexhaustible inspiration"; adding, after reference to the various elements in the ensemble: "All these things which, taken separately, bear, each in its way, the mark of the most free, the most happy inspiration, finish by combining themselves, and, in so doing, producing an effect at once musical and dramatic, or, if you like, epic, of a sonority, warmth, truth, and clearness which we cannot describe in words." Numerous other examples might be quoted to show that Rossini was not always a mere melodist, flippant and careless in every other musical respect. Indeed, it stands to reason that the powers which, under the stimulus of French art, gave "Guillaume Tell" to the world stirred within him in earlier years, and, but for the constant necessity of pouring forth intoxicating tune in answer to clamorous demands, he might have anticipated by a long time that crowning development and demonstration. But enough of remarks which, as far as they are vindicatory, no man of sober judgment requires. Rossini must be judged by the standard of his day in the country for which he wrote, and so looked at he takes high and brilliant rank such as more than justifies the honours which yesterday were paid to his memory.

The Italian master's position in cosmopolitan art is, of course, another matter, as to which individual judgment can hardly escape the influence of national temperament and training. The children of the light-hearted and sunny South are not likely to be of one mind with those of more sombre races and climes, nor, perhaps, is it necessary that they should agree. The true verdict of history is not pronounced by the "most sweet voices" of the many, but by the thoughtful few through whom, as far as may be where human passion and prejudice never wholly disappear, the decisions of pure intellect are given. Nothing can deprive Rossini of his right to be regarded as one of the most astonishing and brilliant figures in musical history, or of his claim to stand first among those in whom Melody, the "soul of music," has enshrined herself. It may be said—will always be said, no doubt—that Melody might have made a better choice, and taken up her abode in the nature of a man more earnest, less of the earth earthy. But it is vain for us to arraign the action of Immortals. Let us be glad to find Melody, that gracious spirit, anywhere, and offer up our thanks for her, no matter the "muddy vesture" within which she may be enshrined. In this spirit we can all sympathise with the Rossinian celebrations whose echoes have not yet died away, especially with Italy's remembrance of her gifted son, to whom passed the instrument which, in the hands of the boy by the fountain of Callirhoë, "piped itself," and who, like the happy child in Sydney's "Arcadia," made melody as though he would never grow old.

FROM MY STUDY.

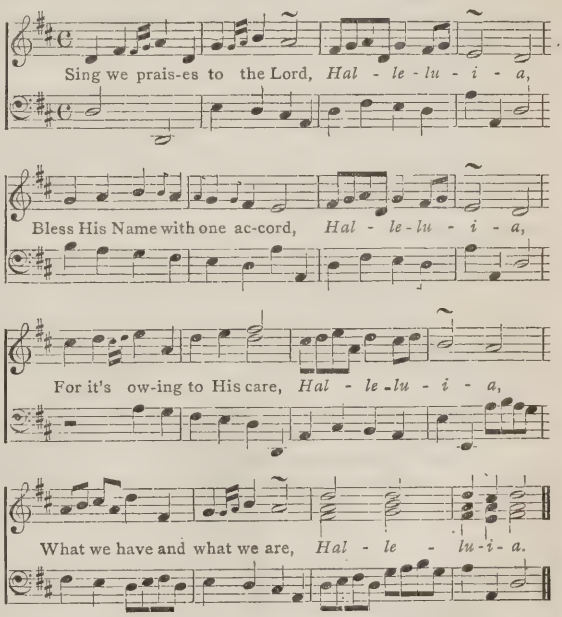
I am indebted to two correspondents for letters having reference to Bickham's "Musical Entertainer." A gentleman writes that he has a number of the sheets, originally issued in a separate form, and a lady describes a copy which has been in her family for generations. This volume contains twenty-four songs inserted, "some of them most curious," but it is very incomplete as regards the original matter. The entire "Bickham" numbers nearly, if not quite, 200 examples, whereas my correspondent's book appears to be short of that total by 114 pieces. The value of her fragment depends much upon the character and rarity of the inserted songs; but I may state that the first volume (100 songs), complete all but title-page, was sold not long ago by Ridler, of Booksellers' Row, for £2 10s. A copy of the entire work is now marked in Mr. Quaritch's catalogue at £5.

I spoke last month of a certain Y. as visiting my study, and promised him an introduction to the patient reader. It is sensible policy on a man's part to choose as intimates persons of diverse qualities and opposite views. It avoids monotony and prevents warping. The tree that is blown upon by a single wind leans to one side, but that which is buffeted by many stands upright. Moreover, variety in social intercourse stirs one's mental atmosphere, keeping it fresh and wholesome. Thus sings Gay:

> Variety's the source of joy below,
> From which still fresh revolving pleasures flow.

Not that Y. is ever a direct source of fresh revolving pleasures. I regard him as a corrective of the amiable, confiding, and imaginative W., who, at moments when he does not drop into doggerel, is a very nice fellow indeed, anxious to believe everything he sees and hears, and taking even the world of fiction so seriously that he has been known to weep over a novel as much as ever did the romantic cook-maid in Mayhew's "Greatest Plague of Life." W. comes into my study like the soft south wind, or a packet of Turkish Delight, or a bunch of Russian violets. He is saccharine and enervating. Y. has a bitter flavour and cuts like a nor'-easter. He grins sardonically (I have never known him laugh) if you speak of imagination, and his attitude with regard to matters of fact is one of profound distrust. He is a walking compendium of all the historic doubts that have ever found their way into print. Richard III. he looks upon as a much maligned person; Henry VIII. was a saint in his eyes till Mr. Froude appeared as that often-wedded monarch's vindicator, and now he is wavering; he is even suspected of belief in Archbishop Whateley's ingenious attempt to prove that Napoleon never existed. His favourite work in musical literature is Helmholtz on the "Sensations of Tone," and with that he agrees only as far as the theories laid down are capable of scientific proof. Lastly, he is generally understood to spend most of his time in hunting up matter for the correction of popular beliefs. In this industry he has met with one or two successes, qualified in his own estimation, however, by fear lest further enquiry should prove the data all wrong. "An unpleasant person!" say you? Well, if he be taken alone, that is possible; in conjunction with my other friend, he is a corrective of credulousness; a whiff of fresh, cold air in a hot room heavy with odours (risk of a chill, of course); a bit of rough road ("up" and burning red lanterns) in the course of an otherwise smooth and easy passage towards intellectual flabbiness and laisser faire.

When Y. visits me in my study, I know pretty well that he has, or fancies himself to have, discovered something wrong with a hitherto accepted fact. So, on his being announced the other day, I braced myself for another shock to common belief, especially as the muscles of his face now and then twitched into the momentary semblance of a smile and a faint glimmer shone in his usually lack-lustre eyes. Quoth my friend, presently: "Who is said to have written the tune usually sung to the Easter Hymn?" He knew very well, but, on such occasions, he is a catechist, and I am a meek catechumen. Therefore I answered, "Dr. Worgan." "And who was he; or, rather, what do your musical biographies say he was?" "Born 1715, died 1790; Organist of St. Botolph's and St. Andrew's, Mus. Doc. (honoris causâ) of Oxford; composed oratorios, 'Hannah' and 'Manasseh'; a learned fugal writer." "What do you know about the tune he is said to have composed?" "Only that I have never seen it set to any hymn but 'Jesus Christ is risen to-day.'" "Would you be surprised to hear that it was published in 1750, set to a Christmas hymn, and without any mention of Dr. Worgan at all?" "Not if you say so, but what proof have you?" My friend thereupon extracted from the pocket of his overcoat a calf-bound volume and passed it across to me, drily remarking: "Look on page 227." I looked, and saw the tune given below, headed "An Hymn for Christmas Day," composer's name not mentioned—contrary to the rule of the book:—



Sing we prais-es to the Lord, Hal - le - lu - i - a,
Bless His Name with one ac-cord, Hal - le - lu - i - a,
For it's ow-ing to His care, Hal - le - lu - i - a,
What we have and what we are, Hal - le - lu - i - a.

"Now I'll depart," said Y., "and leave you to digest my last words: That book was published during Worgan's life-time and the authorship of the tune is unacknowledged. Do you think Worgan wrote it?" "Stop," I called out, as Y. was closing my study door behind him; "if Worgan is not the composer, who is?" "That's not my business," exclaimed a muffled and receding voice; "I check other people's creed. I don't walk by faith, but by sight. Good day!"

I confess that Y.'s book, which he left behind him, had more interest for me than the paternity of any Psalm-tune, and, settling snugly in my easy chair, I began to examine it with the keen curiousness of a confirmed bibliophile. Here is the title-page:—

"Apollo's Cabinet or the Muses Delight. An Accurate Collection of English & Italian Songs, Cantatas & Duetts, set to Music for the Harpsichord, Violin, German Flute, &c. With Twelve Duettos for two French Horns, composed by Mr. Charles, and Instructions for the Voice, Violin, Harpsichord or Spinet, German Flute, Common Flute, Hautboy, French Horn, Basson, & Bass-Violin, Also a Compleat Musical Dictionary, & several Hundred English, Irish & Scotch Songs, without the Music. Two Volumes. Liverpool, Printed by John Sadler, in Harrington Street, 1757."

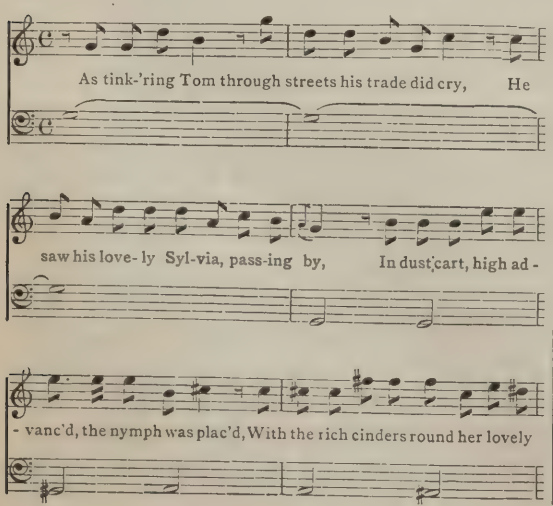
The frontispiece, engraved by the well-known Basire, represents a lady playing upon a harpsichord, while a gentleman leans upon her high-backed chair and sings. Near him are two other gentlemen performing respectively upon a flute and violin. In the clouds above are various Olympian musicians, to whom Apollo, flying up from the earth, presents an open book, presumably a copy of the "Cabinet" aforesaid.

The compiler of this most comprehensive work modestly keeps his name out of the title-page, but there is some reason to think that the publisher had a hand in it, since he assures subscribers that he has "done his utmost to make the whole useful and entertaining." I shall not ask obliging readers to accompany me through the instruction sections of the "Muses Delight." That would be imposing upon good nature, and running a risk of offence. Better go at once to the songs with music, where are compositions by Corfe, Broderip, Worgan, Arne, Boyce, Handel, and other well-known men of the day. By the bye, my friend Y. omitted to point out that the acknowledged authorship of several pieces by Worgan lends significance to the omission of his name in connection with the tune cited above.

So much, however, in passing. The compiler was evidently a man of judgment, and had, for his day, an uncommon sense of decency. His song-book is, indeed, a perfect storehouse of good old English melody, at once pleasing and manly. But I wish to fix the reader's attention upon an example of the few things in the collection which are satirical. This is a piece entitled "The Dust Cart," described as "a favourite Cantata, in Manner of the Moderns." It may be explained here that the favour shown to Italian opera, with its mingled Recitative and Aria, is often seen reflected in detached pieces of this period, several examples in the volume before me combining both forms of musical utterance. "The Dust Cart" hits at the "manner of the moderns" as thus shown by applying the mingled pomposity and elegance of the music to an ignoble subject. I am tempted to cite the opening recitative:—



As tink-'ring Tom through streets his trade did cry, He saw his love-ly Syl-via, pass-ing by, In dust cart, high ad-
-vanc'd, the nymph was plac'd, With the rich cinders round her lovely

Then follows a flowing and melodious Affetuoso: "O Sylvia, while you drive your carts To pick up dust, you steal our hearts." It leads to a second recitative: "Sylvia, advanced above the rabble rout, Exulting rolls her sparkling eyes about," and the "Cantata" ends with a Spiritoso in 6-8: "Shall I, who ride above the rest, Be by a paltry crowd opprest?" The melodies are exceedingly clever imitations of Handel's work of the same class in Italian opera.

In Pepys' Diary, under date May 7, 1678, is the following entry: "Here took up Knipp into our coach, and all of us with her to her lodgings, and thither comes Banister with a song of hers, that he hath set in Sir Charles Sedley's play for her, which is, I think, but very meanly set; but this he did, before us, teach her, and, it being but a slight silly short ayre, she learnt it presently." To this there is a footnote—I am quoting from the Mynors Bright edition of Braybrooke—which says: "The song in Sir C. Sedley's play, 'The Mulberry Garden,' is 'Ah, Cloris, that I now could sit,' the author of which, until within these few years, was supposed to be a Scotchman, from the circumstance of its having been sung to a Scotch air called 'Gilderoy.' Banister's music to it has not been discovered." Pepys' "Banister" may have been John Banister the Elder or the Younger, both of whom were living in 1678 (the senior died in October, 1679); but in all probability he was the interesting personage by whom public concerts were first established in London. On this point I should like some information, and especially desire to know whether Banister's "slight, silly short ayre," set to "Ah, Cloris, that I now could sit," exists anywhere within the knowledge of my readers.

In Roger North's "Memoirs of Musick" there is a reference to the origin of public concerts in London, and mention is made of a music-room which was in existence before that of Banister. After speaking of the preparedness of England for a musical revolution, North says: "A great means of bringing that foreward was the humour of following publick consorts, and it will not be out of the way to reduce them from the beginning. The first of those was in a lane behind Pauls, where there was a chamber organ that one Phillips played upon, and some shopkeepers and foremen came weekly to sing in consort, and to hear and enjoy ale and tobacco, and after some time the audience grew strong, and one Ben Wallington got the reputation of a notable base voice, who also set up for a composer, and hath some songs in print, but of a very low excellence, and their music was chiefly out of Playford's Catch Book." Of Banister's enterprise, North gives the following account: "The next essay was of the elder Banister, who had a good theatricall vein, and in composition had a lively style peculiar to himself. He procured a large room in Whitefryers, near the Temple back gate, and made a large raised box for the musicians, whose modesty required curtaines. The room was rounded with seats and small tables, alehous fashion. One shilling was the price and call for what you pleased; there was very good musick, for Banister found means to procure the best hands in towne, and some voices to perform there, and there wanted in no variety of humour, for Banister himself (inter alia) did wonders upon a flageolett to a thro' Base, and the several masters had their solos. This continued full one winter, and more I remember not."

The priority of the music-room "behind Pauls" does not affect Banister's claim to be the first giver of public concerts in London. It is evident from North's description that the older "consorts" still survive in the "Harmonic Meetings" held at taverns and gin-shops, where the audience supply their own music, with the aid of a professional pianist, who is the modern substitute for Phillips the organ player. At Banister's entertainments, on the other hand, the audience and performers were distinct, circumstances and proceedings being akin to those of the music hall, save that they were exclusively musical, and that the modesty which hid behind curtains has not survived into our time. In 1680 the Professors of Music severed connection with publicans and started the historic performances in York Buildings, from which our Concerts have descended.

In deference to a correspondent who wishes me sometimes to handle a graver topic than old songs, I now come down through two centuries, and take up a volume of Robert Browning's poems. Browning, you know, was an amateur musician, who had studied the art under a master, and, in more than one or two instances, obtained therefrom subjects for his muse. The book before me is "Men and Women," Vol. I., published in 1855, and the particular poem I have just read attentively, for the twelfth time or so, is entitled "Master Hugues of Saxe-Gotha." We are to accept Master Hugues as a composer of organ fugues, and it does not greatly matter whether he be a real or imaginary person. Apropos, however, I can find no mention of him in musical dictionaries. The speaker of the poem is the organist of a certain nameless church, who, having played out the congregation with one of Hugues' fugues, lingers in the gallery to enjoy a talk with the spirit of the dead composer. Hugues is there, he knows:—

> Every bar's rest, where one wipes
> Sweat from one's brow, I looked up and surveyed
> O'er my three claviers, yon forest of pipes,
> Whence you still peeped in the shade.
> Sure you were wishful to speak,
> You, with brow ruled like a score,
> Yes, and eyes buried in pits on each cheek,
> Like two great breves as they wrote them of yore,
> Each side that bar, your straight beak.

Seeing the composer up among the pipes, and being anxious to put the question, "What do you mean by your mountainous fugues?" the organist invents an excuse for keeping the sacristan waiting—

> See, the church empties apace,
> Fast they extinguish the lights—
> Hallo, there, sacristan! five minutes' grace!
> Here's a crank pedal wants settingt o rights,
> Baulks one of holding the base.

With this preliminary the organist turns to Hugues, reminding him that his masterpiece, "hard Number Twelve," has just been played "off-hand and runningly," but the performer wants to know the reason for and purport of such music: "I believe in you, but that's not enough. Give my conviction a clinch."

He goes on to describe the anatomy of the fugue—

> First, you deliver your phrase—
> Nothing propound, that I see,
> Fit in itself for much blame or much praise—
> Answer'd no less, where no answer needs be:
> Off start the Two on their ways!
> Straight must a Third interpose,
> Volunteer needlessly help—
> In strikes a Fourth, a Fifth thrusts in his nose,
> So the cry's open, the kennel's a-yelp,
> Argument's hot to the close.

There is more of this disparaging description, e.g.—

> One says his say with a difference—
> More of expounding, explaining!
> All now is wrangle, abuse, and vociference—
> Now there's a truce, all's subdued, self-restraining—
> Five, though, stands out all the stiffer hence.

At the end of the analysis the organist demands: "To what issue? Where is our gain at the Two-bars?" "Two-bars," a synonym for double-bar, is here demanded by the exigencies of rhyme. Similarly, he asks: "Something is gained if one caught but the import. Show it us, Hugues of Saxe-Gotha." The organist adds—not giving the shade of the composer time to answer—that, what with one thing and another, the fugue is like—being at a loss for a comparison and turning up his eyes, as men sometimes do in mental difficulty, he notices that over the gilt moulding and groining of the roof are many dust-laden webs of spiders. The very thing! Pointing to them, he continues:—

> So your fugue broadens and thickens,
> Greatens, and deepens, and lengthens,
> Till one exclaims—"But where's music, the dickens?"

Obscured by the spiders' webs, alas! Nevertheless, he hopes that "'twas for something his organ-pipes sounded, Tiring three boys at the bellows."

The organist now demands of unresponsive Hugues if the fugue is to be taken as a moral of Life—

> Such a web, simple and subtle,
> Weave we on earth here, in impotent strife,
> Backward and forward each throwing his shuttle,
> Death ending all with a knife?

Do we this while over us are Truth and Nature, as the gilded mouldings of the roof are above the obscuring webs? He accepts the situation as a fact:

> So we o'er-shroud stars and roses,
> Cherub and trophy and garland.
> Nothing grows something which quietly closes
> Heaven's earnest eye—not a glimpse of the far land
> Gets through our comments and glozes.

Yet the organist clings to a notion that the inventions and traditions of the past must have some value—that the web ought not to be destroyed. Surely Hugues was more than a mere mountain in labour! Better try the fugue again, and see what will come of it:

> What's the clef?
> Faith it's no trifle for pipe and for tabor—
> Four flats—the minor of F.

Still he has misgivings, for Nature is golden though we fling dust-clouds at her. On the whole, he advises Hugues to clear the arena of his fugue-voices: "Say the word, straight I unstop the full organ, Blare out the mode Palestrina." Ha! the candle has burnt out. Hallo, sacristan, show a light. Do you want to find me, when you come in the morning, at the foot of your "rotten-planked, rat-riddled stairs"? Do you suppose I carry the moon in my pocket? So, with the organist in absolute darkness and calling aloud for light, ends this suggestive poem.

We may not unprofitably think over the beautiful comparison of human life and the loud weavings and spinnings of Hugues in F minor; but, as a criticism of fugue, Browning's verses are utterly futile. It shows the poet to us as one who, after pondering golden sayings, the key of which he does not possess, puts them aside as unmeaning. When next I fall into a grave mood, with or without the instigation of a serious correspondent, it will be easy for me to show that the Robert Browning of 1877 saw much deeper into the meaning of music as an art than he of 1855.

X.

SOME OPINIONS OF ANTON RUBINSTEIN.

The opinions of great musicians upon one another and upon various questions connected with their art have an interest which those of professed writers on music seldom possess, and this, in the case of great executants, is increased by the rarity of their excursions into the field of literature. H. Herz and L. Gottschalk wrote light and amusing descriptions of their adventures in America; but Liszt, Rubinstein, Bülow, and Saint-Saëns seem to be the only pianists of note who have tried to express in writing their own serious thoughts on matters connected with music and musicians. Rubinstein's views have been made known through his autobiography, Mr. McArthur's book, and a little volume lately given to the world; and, believing that the time thus employed will be profitably spent, we propose to give them such consideration as our space will allow.

"Bach's works," said Robert Schumann, "seem written for eternity"; and from all we can learn of Rubinstein's attitude towards the music of the great Leipzig Cantor, he fully endorses that opinion. On many questions connected with music and musicians Rubinstein holds views either quite peculiar to himself or, at any rate, by no means universally entertained. Among the former may be counted his scheme for the establishment of sacred opera, as propounded in his letter, written to the Signale ten years ago; among the latter, his opinion, as expressed in conversation with Dvorák, that the influence of Wagner and Liszt and Berlioz was disastrous and had checked all musical progress. It is, therefore, highly satisfactory to find him at one with all the great musicians of the past and the present in the matter of Bach worship. For his fervent admiration of that great composer one can forgive many of his hard sayings. Mr. McArthur, in his monograph on Rubinstein, tells us that Bach is the first and last composer whom he presents to his pupils. In his reverence for Beethoven, his love for Schubert, and his enthusiasm for Chopin he is also in perfect accord with all true musicians. But there are several points, besides those above-mentioned, on which he differs widely from general opinion, and one or two of these seem specially to call for a few words of comment. In his recently published work he declares that to him the opera is altogether a subordinate branch of the art—he is not speaking of the music-dramas of Wagner, with which he has little or no sympathy, but of opera generally. He considers that emotion is fettered by words; for him the great "Leonore" Overture is a much higher expression of the "Fidelio" drama than the opera itself. Rubinstein has written, it is true, many operas, and elaborated a scheme which seems to rank opera as the chief of art-forms; but this preference for instrumental music is probably the result of his special vocation as a pianist. He would not be such a wonderful interpreter of the great masters had he not thrown his whole soul into their works; he has lived, moved, and had his being in an instrumental world; it is nearest to him, and therefore appears greatest. Rubinstein's attitude towards programme-music is also of a peculiar character; he looks upon any piece as enclosing a mood of the composer—i.e., as containing a programme; and considers it the task of an interpreter to discover that programme and convey it to his hearers. Now the whole gist of the discussion lies in that word "programme." Is the programme Rubinstein wishes to convey merely one of emotion, or one of ideas and events? He believes that composers throw themselves into certain moods by thought and observation, that these are reflected in their music, and that the subject-matter of this thought and observation can be discovered and conveyed. The mood, then, is an effect of which a programme (a romantic or even historical event, or some definite idea) is the cause, and from the former Rubinstein believes he can discover the latter.

There is something fascinating about this theory, for it is undeniable that Haydn, Beethoven, Schumann, and other composers set their emotions in vibration by some story or mental picture, and it would be bold to assert that an artist like Rubinstein, of strong imagination, fine feeling, and quick perception, could not, at any rate in certain cases, discover the composer's meaning hidden in the mood. He, however, surely errs in thinking he can convey a programme to his hearers; to some kindred spirit even that might be possible, but, as a rule, only the mood is conveyed, and that mood is interpreted by each hearer according to his character and state of mind or feeling. It is, however, this strong faith in his powers that enables Rubinstein to exert such a magnetic influence over his audience. It almost seems as if a few words from the lips of an interpreter previous to performance would be welcome; it might guide us to the proper spirit in which the music should be listened to, or, at any rate, it would enable us for the moment to think and feel with the interpreter. Such an innovation would of course be intolerable except in the case of artists of the highest rank. Who would not like, for instance, to hear a few remarks from Joachim before a performance of Bach's Chaconne in D minor; or an explanation of the poetic meaning of Schumann's tone-pictures from his gifted and sympathetic widow; or some æsthetic observations on Bach, Beethoven, or Chopin from an eminent pianist like Bülow or Rubinstein? The written opinions of master minds, such as Wagner, Berlioz, or Schumann on music or musicians have always been read with avidity, and why should not the expression of the thoughts and feelings of great artists who have lived in close communion with the great composers, who have become almost their second selves, be also acceptable? It would, we are well aware, be easy to turn such a suggestion into ridicule, and that very fact convinces us that, if properly carried out, it might throw life and soul into what to many is only a valley of dry bones.

The question of the meaning of instrumental music leads directly to the one of "reading." Is there one right rendering, say, of Beethoven's "Appassionata," or are there different ones equally deserving of acceptance? And what light does the eminent pianist throw on this terribly difficult and often debated question? Very little, we fear. With his views of instrumental music he ought, one would think, to admit that there was only one right rendering—the one which revealed the composer's intention. "It is often ludicrous," says Mr. McArthur, "to see him (Rubinstein) with eyes and mouth tightly shut as he listens to some singer giving, as he declares, 'every rendering under the sun but the right one,' to some of his songs or arias." In the case of his own music, Rubinstein, of course, knows the composer's intention; but in the case of Beethoven he evidently thinks he can discover it, so that the reasoning in either case ought to be similar. But in his recently published work, Rubinstein says: "To render an Adagio in a given tempo, according to one's feelings, cannot be doing injustice to the object." By "object" he means the composition. Ah! there the cat is let out of the bag! While endeavouring faithfully to reveal the feelings and thoughts of the great composers, he is at the same time revealing himself ("according to one's own feelings"), and it is just that bit of self which gives the special cachet to his playing. This revelation of self through the medium of music is mysterious, though too much of it is undoubtedly disturbing. If "one's own feelings" coincide with the composer's, well and good; but if not . . . .

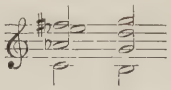
Rubinstein's remarks on pianists are of course well worthy of notice, and those on Liszt are specially interesting. Words, he tells us, are far too poor to describe his pianoforte playing, which was in every way incomparable. And to Liszt he adds the names of Chopin, Thalberg, and Henselt; and all these, he says, one must have heard to know what real piano-playing means. This of course must be taken cum grano salis. His admiration of Liszt's playing is undoubtedly genuine, for he does not hesitate to say some very hard things of him, both as a man and as a composer; and no doubt Chopin was unparalleled as an interpreter of his own music. But we imagine that one could form a very good idea of genuine pianoforte playing from hearing Rubinstein himself, even if one had never heard Thalberg or even Henselt.

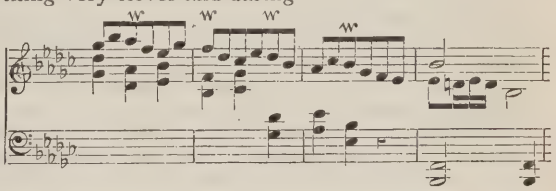
Rubinstein complains of the "editing" of the great composers—i.e., the marks of expression or indications of tempo, as in Czerny's edition of the "Well-tempered Clavier"; he considers both the one and the other often of a questionable nature. Here, again, we see how admirable a musician and how earnest a student Rubinstein is; he likes to think out the music for himself; to try and throw himself into the spirit of the composer, feeling sure that both speed and expression will reveal themselves to him. For himself he has a full right to complain of such editions—he can edit for himself. But for many young players and students who have not a strong individuality, assistance in these matters is by no means to be deprecated, even though it be not always of the best. On this subject Rubinstein expressed his views several years ago at length in a letter to the publisher Bartholf Senff.

Surely, while holding firmly to his own opinions, Rubinstein ought to be indulgent to those of others, for in one part of his recently published book he says: "If musicians could only agree on any one question in music!"

The harmonic methods—or, rather, want of methods—of our fin de siècle composers are really a matter for alarmed consideration. Can it be that the consistency shown by all the great composers in regarding certain progressions as good, and the remainder as bad, is a mere matter of individual taste, and is there no actual science of harmony at all? Up to within the last few years we were under the impression that though a certain amount of license might be permitted for dramatic or emotional exigencies, the principles of harmony were immutable, and that harmonic combinations of notes were suave or harsh according as the vibrational ratios of their component notes were large or small. We also thought that successions of chords were agreeable or disagreeable according to the extent to which they disturbed our feeling of tonality. But we have changed all this, it appears; the present idea is that you cannot be interesting unless you employ new harmonic progressions, and that, therefore, all the agreeable progressions having long been in common use, you must fall back upon the hideous ones. To take a single instance: it is generally known that consecutive fifths are regarded by musicians with (perhaps exaggerated) repugnance. Since they exercise a very disturbing effect upon the tonality, and are consequently felt to be ugly, and since beginners may easily make them unawares, the rule forbidding them is one of the first taught and most (rightly) insisted upon. Yet there are some cases in which they can be used without bad effect: the resolution of the chord of "German sixth" is one, especially in an inversion, thus:—



But there is a world of difference between a progression which may be tolerated and one which is good. Our modern composers do not accept this axiom, but hold that whatever man has (on occasion) done, man may (and should always) do. Here is a passage from a Mazurka by Paderewski which certainly does not sound very bad, but it seems quite uncalled for, and no doubt the composer thought he was doing something very clever and daring—



Grieg writes a bare fifth instead of a single bass note so constantly that our ears have become as accustomed to the ugly succession of these as to the Twelfth stop of an organ; but when he gives us, as he does in his latest work, a piece in which both hands play nothing but bare fifths throughout we begin to feel that the whole foundations of musical science are being undermined and a state of artistic atheism is spreading in our midst. If one needs confirmation of this misgiving one has only to look at the compositions of young France and Italy, when he will see an open defiance of all harmonic tradition absolutely appalling. We may instance Bruneau's outrageous production "Le Rêve," but this is only one of many. It is the fashion to hold Richard Wagner responsible for this godless tendency, but really it would be as fair to accuse Sebastian Bach. Composers with no ear for music were not created by, nor because of Richard Wagner. They have always existed, but in former times they languished in fitting obscurity. Now-a-days the least of a musician's claims to popularity is the goodness of his music.

At first we are inclined to wish there were some way of prohibiting and preventing such artistic outrages. We feel as if the musical societies or educational institutions ought to take some kind of action to punish the criminals. But another of the unhappy conditions of modern life is that any conceivable kind of protest against a bad thing only acts as an advertisement of it, and really seems to make the matter worse instead of better. Declare that a book is unfit for publication and you give it an immense sale. Try to put down a self-seeking demagogue and he is a public hero immediately. Scoff at a painter's pretensions and his fortune is made. So we only pray that our mild denunciations of the silly tendency among musicians towards bad grammar for the sake of notoriety may not assist the transgressors in their evil intentions. Let them alone, like Little Bo-peep's Southdowns, and they'll come home, leaving their fifths behind them.

Bunhill Fields Burial Ground—the place of sepulture of John Bunyan, Daniel Defoe, and Dr. Watts—is the resting-place of two old Psalmodists, William Shrubsole and his pupil Benjamin Jacob. The tombstones of these departed worthies have recently been restored by public subscription, on the initiative of Mr. F. G. Edwards. Shrubsole, who died in 1806, was the composer of the well-known tune "Miles's Lane," almost the only repeat tune that has found its way into "Hymns Ancient and Modern." The tune first appeared (in the key of C) in the Gospel Magazine for November, 1779, and the first strain of the melody has now been cut into Shrubsole's gravestone. Like all the old tunes, "Miles's Lane" has been shockingly "tinkered" by successive editors, most of whom in all probability have never seen its original form, or they might possibly have allowed the refrain, at least, to remain in its native simplicity. Benjamin Jacob, who died in 1829, was Organist of Surrey Chapel from 1794 to 1825, and one of the most celebrated performers in his day. He was one of the earliest to introduce (in 1808) "organ performances." With his friend, Samuel Wesley, Jacob was also one of the first pioneers of Bach's music in this country, and the published correspondence on that subject between "Old Sam" and the Surrey organist is full of interest. In 1809 Wesley was associated with Jacob in his organ performances, and subsequently Dr. Crotch was Jacob's colleague. These "performances," which were free, began at eleven o'clock in the morning, and 3,000 people would assemble in Rowland Hill's old chapel and patiently listen to a succession of organ pieces which lasted four hours in performance! Each organist played two or three pieces alternately, and at the end of each part both played a duet, Handel's "Hallelujah" and "Zadok the Priest" being the pieces chosen. The programmes were necessarily long; one, at least, contained no less than forty-six numbers, all organ pieces! One invariable selection was "Imitation of a thunder storm. Extemporary. Jacob." No wonder that Jacob was considered to be in advance of his time. Would that he had included his organic "thunder storm" in his published organ arrangements.

Mr. F. T. Piggott, whose paper on "The Music and Musical Instruments of Japan," read before the Congress of Orientalists last September, excited so much interest, discoursed on the same subject to the members of the Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts on the 11th ult. The discussion which followed the reading of the paper was unusually interesting, Mr. Piggott's answers to several questions put by well-known musicians who were present adding greatly to the information conveyed in the paper itself. Mr. Piggott studied the music and decorative arts of Japan during a residence in that country as legal adviser to the Cabinet. A sketch of the Lecturer's conclusions with regard to the musical system of Japan having been given in our issue for October last, no repetition of the views then adduced is here necessary. They will, moreover, shortly be available in more complete form, as Mr. Piggott's promised book on the subject is rapidly approaching completion, and the subscription list, we hear, is almost large enough to justify the expense of publication.

In our last issue we referred to the protest of a Liverpool amateur against the "rustle" nuisance caused by the simultaneous turning over of several hundred programmes. His suggestion was that the programme should be so devised that it might not be necessary to turn a leaf at any critical moment. It is difficult to see how this could be managed in the case of a cantata or oratorio when the words run to any considerable length. A more practical contribution towards the solution of the "programme crackling" question is furnished by a correspondent in the shape of a copy of one of the programmes used at the Gewandhaus Concerts at Leipzig. The paper on which it is printed is apparently made of pure white rag without a trace of size or stiffening and, as our correspondent poetically describes it, "the effect of the simultaneous turning of these leaves by a large audience is a soft sound, not unlike the rustling of the wind over a field of barley." The programme sent by our correspondent is dated December, 1890; it would be interesting to know whether they are still employed. In any case, the plan deserves a trial in London and Liverpool.

Dr. Hubert Parry's Music to "The Frogs" of Aristophanes, announced for performance at Oxford during the past week, has recently been published in vocal score by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, with an English version by Messrs. D. G. Hogarth and A. D. Godley. Several quotations from well-known musical works are most humorously introduced, the association of a familiar and rugged passage from Beethoven's "C minor" with Æschylus, and of a theme from "Les Huguenots" with Euripides being particularly happy. The score contains seventeen numbers. There is a brisk and tuneful Overture, which introduces the themes of two of the choruses, a delightfully quaint Funeral March in C minor (on a ground-bass of tonic and dominant), a Barcarolle, two Entr'actes, and a dozen choruses. The master-hand reveals itself in every page, the writing throughout being remarkable not only for contrapuntal freedom and melodic interest, but for breadth and solidity. The Chorus of Frogs; that beginning "Muse of the Dances divine;" and the final chorus, "Gods of the shadows below," may be instanced in proof of what has been said.

In response to the appeals—always numerous, but recently more so than usual—that our columns should be opened to the insertion of protests against the granting of Diplomas, Certificates, &c., by self-constituted bodies, the rapid increase of which is certainly alarming, we can only say that at present we have nothing to offer but sympathy. The evil exists, undoubtedly; but the individuals complained of are acting within their legal rights; and though the result, unfortunately, is that the public is misled, this is due rather to its ignorance than to deception on the part of the Associations referred to. It is a pity that these protests do not take a more practical form. Surely if concerted action were taken it would not be difficult to find a remedy.

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

A writer in the Overture, having occasion to touch on a point of national music, makes observations which we cordially endorse and recommend for consideration: "It is probable that Spanish music has been much influenced by the Moors, but they themselves are in the main of the Latin race, which seems to have a keener sense of rhythm than the Teutons. Listen to French music—it is quivering with life and movement. It may be thin and poor, empty and shallow; but such as it is, it is vivid and throbbing. German music, on the other hand, is apt to be, perhaps, deeper in feeling, but sadly sleepy, and, as Macfarren used to say, 'droning away like an old organ.' It is only the big men whose rhythm is really good. We English show some tendency, through our admiration of the Germans, to imitate their faults—imitation, in fact, generally does lead to copying faults—but in this matter we shall do well to be on our guard and have respect to the French. The countrymen of Shakespeare should not be found wanting in a sense of rhythm, and there is no reason why we should not combine that with deep feeling.

We must get out of the way of thinking in the eternal harmony-exercise language—a chord to a bar, with sostenuto bass. Verb. sap."

The following communication has been sent to us with reference to a recent action on the part of the Westminster Orchestral Society: "This young and enterprising society has signalled its seventh season by offering a premium of fifteen guineas for the best original composition by any British musician. The proposal brought forth many candidates for the prize, and on Monday last the adjudicators, Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, of the Royal Academy of Music; Dr. Bridge, of Westminster Abbey; and Dr. C. Hubert H. Parry, made their award. Most of the competing works showed much originality of form, melody, and orchestration, so that the task of adjudicating was not an easy one. The award was finally and unanimously in favour of the work of Mr. Walter Wesche, of Bayswater, under the motto—

> Alas! what boots it with incessant care
> To tend the homely, slighted shepherd's trade,
> And strictly meditate the thankless muse!

The work is in three movements, and will be given at the Society's next Orchestral Concert at the Westminster Town Hall, on Wednesday, the 16th inst. All lovers of music, and all who follow the progress of music in England, will be interested to hear this latest production of native talent."

According to a circular issued on the 3rd ult., the executive council of the proposed Cardiff Musical Festival had obtained a guarantee fund of £1,600, leaving £400 to complete the minimum amount. This, however, has not delayed preparatory measures, and it is officially stated that the first meeting will take place in September next, presumably after that at Gloucester; that Mr. Joseph Barnby has been engaged as Conductor, and that the following works will be performed: "Elijah," "Requiem" (Mozart), Symphony in C minor (Beethoven), Hubert Parry's "L'Allegro," Symphony in B flat (Schumann), Sullivan's "Golden Legend," Symphony in G minor (Mozart), Dvorák's "Stabat Mater," Stanford's "Revenge," Joseph Parry's "Saul of Tarsus," Schubert's Mass in E flat, Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang" and "The Messiah." The council state that they have secured a good professional orchestra, an excellent chorus, and first-class solo artists. That is the right way to attain something yet more important—the sympathy of the musical public.

Mr. de Pachmann is said to have been struck by an advertisement offering pianoforte lessons at the rate of tenpence an hour. He might well be, and it is a fair subject of remark as the result of competition, or as the price which modest incompetence sets upon its services. But Mr. Pachmann is reported to have visited the advertiser—a lady—under pretence of taking lessons. He "bungled through" a Waltz by Chopin, and was told that he had been badly taught. Then he paid his fee, handed the lady his card, and went away. This may have entertained him hugely, but we fail to see where the fun comes in, especially for the poor woman, who, we suppose, was doing her little best to earn a scanty living. When Napoleon and his staff once met a fatigue party of soldiers carrying heavy loads along a narrow mountain path, he scrambled out of the way, exclaiming, "Gentlemen, respect the burden."

For obvious reasons we cannot notice in this issue yesterday's performance of Bach's Magnificat, by the students of the Royal Academy of Music, as far as possible under the conditions for which it was written. But we can note with much satisfaction the increasing interest and value of the Students' Concerts, and hold up, as an example to be followed, the course taken with regard to the Magnificat, which, by the way, Sir M. Costa once objected to at Leeds on the ground that it was intended for a small number of performers, not for a large Festival orchestra and chorus. At the Royal Academy rendering the instruments were to be those provided for in the original score, with only twenty-five voices—the number Bach could command—in the chorus. The increased attention given to such matters, when old masterpieces are revived, is a most acceptable sign of the times.

The number of candidates entered for the forthcoming local examinations held by the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and Royal College of Music is 1,624, which is considerably in excess of last year. On Wednesday, the 24th ult., the preliminary examination of these candidates in the "Rudiments of Music" took place at ninety-two Local Centres, in the presence of the honorary local representatives. In almost every case the municipal authorities granted the use of rooms for the purpose. The papers are now being examined in London, and those candidates who pass will proceed to the final Local Centre Examination, which will, we understand, take place before Easter. There is a large increase this year in the number of schools and teachers who have applied to be registered under the Local School Examination Scheme of the Board.

We note with hearty commendation the exclusively English programme of Miss Dora Bright's Pianoforte Recital in Princes' Hall on the 16th ult. It would be well if other native artists—Miss Fanny Davies, to wit—would sometimes remember that Continental composers are not the only ones who have provided for the instrument. As it is, we seldom hear English pianoforte music, and for lack of encouragement our native musicians rarely write it. Miss Bright's selections may, of course, be challenged, but that has nothing to do with the principle involved. She played pieces by Byrde, Purcell, and Arne as representing the old masters, while from the modern repertory were taken examples of Sterndale Bennett, G. A. Macfarren, W. Macfarren, Mackenzie, Cowen, Moir Clark, Hubert Parry, and Stanford. Try again, Miss Bright.

Anent the Rossini centenary, a contemporary prints the details subjoined: "At Venice, where no fewer than ten of the Maëstro's operas were first introduced to the public, there will be a Water Festival, besides some operatic representations; while at Rome some of the leading musicians, including Marchetti, Terziani, Pinelli, and Maldura, have formed themselves into a committee to see that the date is kept with sufficient honour. The townspeople of Rossini's native Pesaro have resolved to purchase the cottage where he was born and convert it into a museum; while at Turin a grand performance of his 'Stabat Mater' will take place in the Theatre. Paris also will observe the centenary with a performance of 'Guillaume Tell,' but without the usual accompaniments of a laurel-crowned bust, palms, and orations."

A correspondent in the Far West of America sends us a newspaper cutting from which we gather that at a church ceremonial, "in addition to a good carefully-considered sermon, Mr. T. J. Pennell sang with fine effect the baritone solo from 'The Messiah,' 'For behold, darkness,' with the choir's support." As we understand English over here, this means that Mr. Pennell sang the sermon as well as the solo, but it is more important to note that the choir joined in "For behold, darkness." Where did they come in? What business had they there at all? Has a new version of "The Messiah" been adopted in Omaha? By the way, the motif of the sermon was this: "In these nineteenth century days it is hard to believe that the Goulds and the Vanderbilts came by their millions honestly."

Some time ago we referred to "a Mr. Wiegand" as giving organ performances in Australia. The indefinite article seems to have caused offence at the Antipodes, and several letters have reached us in assertion of this gentleman's artistic eminence. One correspondent, who had written before, observes: "I would not trouble so frequently only I fear that from want of reliable information you may be led to believe some of the opinions expressed by a few of our semi-educated local organists, who, I regret to say, are green with jealousy. I hope you receive the papers I regularly send you."

The opinions of the semi-educated local organists have, we are happy to say, not reached us, and we were quite unaware of the fact that jealousy had turned those unworthy professors green. But, always ready to do justice, we withdraw the indefinite article and substitute the definite. For "a Mr. Wiegand" please read "the Mr. Wiegand." Now is everybody satisfied?

Mr. Jude, the Liverpool Organist, to whom we recently referred as playing and lecturing in Australia, has been giving monologue entertainments consisting of songs with remarks and criticisms thereupon. The Townsville Daily Bulletin devoted a column to eulogistic remarks, saying, inter alia: "It is seldom that 'God save the Queen' has been heard with so much regret, mingled with sensations of loyalty, as when, last night, the audience broke up at the sound of its strains, and only the overwhelming testimony of clock-hands pointing to near eleven could drive home the truth that for over two hours all of us had been lulled to unconsciousness of the passage of time by the magician on the platform." Mr. Jude should find a grand pianoforte and a glass of water more profitable, at this rate, than Organ Recitals.

The following programme has been drawn up for the Gloucester Festival, but is, of course, subject to revision: "Bethlehem" (Mackenzie), "The Lord's Prayer" (Bridge), a new Cantata (C. H. H. Parry), "The Birth of Song" (Miss Ellicott), "Gethsemane" (C. L. Williams), Handel's "Joshua" and "The Messiah," Dvorák's "Requiem," Spohr's "Fall of Babylon," Bach's "My spirit was in heaviness," Mendelssohn's "Elijah" and "As the hart pants." Symphonies by Beethoven, Schubert, Mozart, and Mendelssohn will be played in the Cathedral, and secular orchestral pieces by Wagner, Berlioz, Mascagni, and Grieg in the Shire Hall.

When the printer's boy is allowed to work "at case," his spirit of mischief, or his ignorance, generally comes into play, and into public notice also if the "reader" be asleep. The young person in question was obviously entrusted with a Concert bill lately issued at Tredegar, and the following results duly appeared: "Rondo Cappriceioso," "O dolca Concerto," and "Long, wistful Words." The last example might pass careless readers as the title of a song appertaining to the "intense" school, but it is really the boy's version of "Song without Words," and, as such, a genuine achievement in its way.

Madame Valleria's Concert tour in Germany, with Miss Dews, Messrs. Foli, Harley, Ganz, Ysaÿe, and Albeniz, appears to have opened brilliantly enough in Berlin, where the company was honoured with the presence of the Empress Augusta Victoria, three princesses, and a large audience. Nevertheless, after a few additional Concerts elsewhere, the enterprise collapsed and the party broke up. The reasons for this have not been precisely stated, but in any case we regret that Mr. Percy Hutchinson's plucky attempt had no better fortune.

The City Press says: "Mr. T. Hastings Miller presented the report of the Music Committee on the subject of the appointment of a Principal at the Guildhall School of Music at a salary of £800 a year, and asked that this might be printed and the consideration thereof adjourned. This was agreed to. The Committee reported that they were opposed to the memorial signed by those within the Guildhall School of Music asking the Court not to make a selection of a Principal outside the School."

The latest concerning the Leeds Festival is that, at a meeting of the Committee, October 5, 6, 7, and 8 were selected as the dates upon which the Festival shall be held. The following works were recommended for inclusion in the programme: Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Brahms's "Song of Destiny," Bach's Mass in B minor, selections from the "Meistersinger," and new choral works to be specially written. Handel's "Messiah" and Mozart's "Requiem" are also under consideration.

That Dvorák's last great work, "The Requiem," produced with such conspicuous success at Birmingham last year, is steadily growing in popular favour may be gathered from the fact that numerous performances have already been arranged for. Among other places, it will be given during the present month at Manchester (Hallé), March 3; Birmingham, 10; Liverpool (Philharmonic), 22; Royal Albert Hall, 23; Brighton, 31; Kremsier, 11; Olmütz, 12 and 13, and at several places in America.

An interesting contribution has been made to the discussion concerning Mozart's skull by a correspondent in the current number of the Monthly Musical Record, who calls attention to the fact that Dr. L. A. Frankl, from whom the statements emanate concerning the fate of the skull in question, also published some twenty-five years ago what he declared to be an authentic statement attending the loss and recovery of the skull of Haydn.

It is said that the sculptor Tilgner has nearly finished the statue of Mozart, which he is modelling for the place at the back of the Vienna Opera. The monument will be "in elaborate rococo style, a small temple with complicated columns and cupids playing instruments much too dainty and delicate for a thoroughfare, especially during the long Austrian winters." It seems from this that Vienna cannot help making mistakes where Mozart is concerned.

It is so seldom that France bestows a thought on the music or the musicians of England that special significance attaches to the announcement, conveyed through M. Joncières, that the Paris Société des Compositeurs de Musique has recently elected Professor Villiers Stanford a Corresponding Member. The Professor and the Society are both to be congratulated.

An American journal states that there are managing editors in the States who tell the music critic very plainly: "See here, Mr. X., Manager Bumstein advertises with us, and I want you to give his concert a good notice—do you understand?" It is not added that the critic indignantly resigns his post, but perhaps such a sequel is taken for granted.

The death of Rosa Czillag in, it is stated, extreme poverty, illustrates the frail tenure by which artists hold their well-being, and ranks with the cases of Marie Marimon, Mario, and not a few others. Money comes lightly to them in the days of their prosperity, and departs as lightly; but "'twas ever thus" with the artist temperament.

We hear from Rome that the Royal Academy of Santa Cecilia, perhaps the oldest musical Society in Europe, has conferred honorary membership on Emeritus Professor Sir Herbert Oakeley, who has been passing the Winter in Italy.

Mr. A. R. Gaul has accepted an invitation to write a Cantata for the next Norwich and Norfolk Musical Festival.

A son of the late Mr. Scotson Clark is a baritone singer in New York.

THE ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

There was much to admire in the performance at the Royal Albert Hall, on January 27, of Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Golden Legend," which had been postponed in consequence of the death of the Duke of Clarence. The Choir, now unrivalled in the Metropolis, was at its very best, and therefore did ample justice to every number in which it had a share. The replies to Lucifer during the storm threatening Strasburg Cathedral were sung with unfailing steadiness and energy, whilst the more tuneful passages could scarcely have been rendered with greater smoothness or unanimity of expression. Under such circumstances it is almost superfluous to say that the beautiful unaccompanied evening hymn "O gladsome light" received a vehement demand for repetition that Mr. Barnby was powerless to resist. These choralists have often won honour by their rendering of the piece; but never more deservedly than on this occasion. Mr. Henschel repeated his splendid reading of the music of Lucifer, a part he has studied with such an artistic issue as to leave no scope for adverse criticism. His delivery of the satire in which the fiend so frequently indulges possesses the exact dramatic colouring suggested by the composer. Miss Medora Henson was an unaffected Elsie and sang the music with tenderness and refinement. The other soloists were Miss Hilda Wilson and Mr. Iver McKay, whose duties were discharged none the less scrupulously because they were familiar. In efficiency the band corresponded with its surroundings, and Mr. Barnby conducted with his accustomed watchfulness.

The Concert a fortnight later (the 10th ult.) consisted of "St. Paul," the noble work so long kept in the background by the more dramatic "Elijah." In these days, happily, it is not necessary to lessen the patronage accorded to one in order to increase the popularity of the other. The two works are so distinct, and in their respective ways such finished examples of the most elevated description of sacred musical art, that each may rest its claims to consideration upon its own particular qualifications. Again Mr. Barnby's well-trained chorus sang with rare spirit, point, and emphasis. Whether in the massive "Rise up, arise!" and "O great is the depth," or in the deliciously calm and reflective "How lovely are the messengers," the effect was all that could be desired by the most ardent admirer of Mendelssohn. The orchestra, like the chorus, offered a lesson in obedience to the Conductor that might be copied with benefit in several quarters. Miss Medora Henson sang the soprano solos with a large amount of devotional feeling and purity of expression, and Madame Patey gave the contralto music with all due effect. Mr. Wilbur Gunn, who was announced as a "new American tenor," did not succeed in diminishing appreciation of his British rivals. On the other hand, Mr. Plunket Greene, by his vigorous, fervid, and well-balanced interpretation of the great Apostle, placed himself at once in the front rank of Oratorio singers.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Mr. Henschel's music written for Mr. Beerbohm Tree's revival of "Hamlet" was a specially interesting feature at the fourth Concert (January 26) at St. James's Hall. The illustrative passages, together with some of the expressive strains accompanying the action, appear on the platform as a Suite, and with a view to meeting the altered conditions of performance, do not come in the precise order in which they are heard in the theatre. The five sections are respectively termed "Prelude," "Ophelia," "Interlude and Pastorale," "Ophelia's Death," and "Danish March." The three themes of the Prelude typify Hamlet's irresolution, his spasmodic eagerness for revenge, and Ophelia's gentle disposition. These excellently serve their purpose. The Ophelia movement (Adagio) has all the sweetness and winning grace of the heroine after whom it is named, and whether played independently or with its companions cannot fail to prove attractive. The Interlude (Allegro impetuoso) and Pastorale (Andante) are in capital contrast, the stern dramatic significance of the one bringing into relief the rural simplicity of the other, in which reliance is placed in the cor Anglais. The funeral movement is for muted strings and drums, but the doleful burthen is occasionally relieved by reminders of the brief melodies sung by the distraught maiden in the presence of the King and Queen. The Suite is brought to a stirring termination by the bold and thoroughly regal march employing the full resources of the modern orchestra. No greater tribute to the merit of Mr. Henschel's "Hamlet" music could be paid than the fact that in its later form no disappointment was experienced by those who had heard it in association with the Haymarket representation. The work was rendered by the band with the care born of the wish to present the talented Conductor's composition in the most advantageous light. The programme appropriately contained that noble and dignified piece, the Funeral March from Dr. Mackenzie's "Story of Sayid"; the Prelude to "Lohengrin"; and the "Unfinished" Symphony of Schubert. M. Gorski, the Polish violinist, played Max Bruch's first Concerto in G minor, and Miss Hope Glenn sang the aria "Pupille Sdegnose," from Handel's "Muzio Scevola."

The Concert in memory of Wagner, held on Thursday, the 11th ult., drew an overflowing audience. There was nothing novel in the scheme, four of the master's compositions being separated midway by the "Eroica" Symphony of Beethoven—unquestionably as fitting a work as could be selected for what was intended as an anniversary celebration. Each movement of the Symphony was played with correct spirit and proper observance of every detail that would assist the beauty and impressiveness of the monumental production. The Wagner pieces were the "Meistersingers" Overture, the "Siegfried Idyll," the Prelude to "Parsifal," and the Prelude and final scene from "Tristan und Isolde," all given with discrimination under the bâton of Mr. Henschel. In Isolde's moving utterances Madame Nordica acquitted herself of a difficult task in a fashion that could not but secure the hearty approval of every listener.

SIR CHARLES HALLÉ'S CONCERTS.

There was a satisfactory increase in the attendance at the fifth of these performances, which took place at St. James's Hall on the 5th ult. Within its limits the programme was certainly as varied and attractive as it could be, the classical and modern schools being equally well represented. Of the former the examples were Cherubini's fine and melodious Overture to "Faniska," which is too seldom heard; Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in G (No. 4), of which Sir Charles Hallé gave an astonishingly crisp and brilliant interpretation; and Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony in E flat, which displayed the qualities of the Manchester orchestra to the utmost advantage. At the request of many who had attended the performances of Berlioz's "Faust," the March, Dance of Sylphs, and Dance of Will o' the Wisps were repeated and the first-named excerpt was again loudly encored. We have yet to speak of the most interesting piece in the programme, a Suite in D by Dvorák (Op. 39). So far as remembrance serves this work was a novelty, but the character of the music affords no explanation for the neglect it has suffered. On the contrary, the Suite is in the Bohemian composer's best style, being throughout delightfully fresh, piquant, and melodious. The five movements are named respectively Prelude, Polka, Minuet, Romanze, and Finale. National phraseology is present to a varying extent in all the sections, but it is most prominent in the second, which, it need hardly be stated, differs widely from the ordinary dance polka of the English ball-room. Though written for a small orchestra the scoring is extremely felicitous, particularly in the Romanze, where the corno inglese is used with admirable effect. The influence of Beethoven is sometimes apparent, and in the Finale there is a distinct reminiscence of the Bonn master; but, as a whole, the Suite may be pronounced a delightful work and it should be heard again with all due celerity.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

The Saturday series was resumed on the 13th ult. with a programme the most noteworthy feature in which was the alternative version of Schumann's Symphony in D minor, which has been prepared by Johannes Brahms and Dr. Wüllner. The points of divergence in the new edition from the edition of 1851 have already been exhaustively discussed in The Musical Times, so we may content ourselves by saying that the test of performance by no means seemed to indicate that the new "blend" of 1841 and 1851 will supersede the version which has hitherto held the field. Cherubini's recently published Concert-Overture in G, of which the MS. had been mislaid for so many years, proves to be a splendid specimen of the great Italian master's genius. Though not so attractive as his "Anacreon" Overture, it is conceived in the "grand style" throughout, and the orchestration is remarkably felicitous and fresh—notably in the passages for the wood-wind quartet. Madame Roger-Miclos distinguished herself by an incisive and animated performance of the solo part of Beethoven's C minor Pianoforte Concerto; she was far less successful in Schumann's familiar Novelette in F, in her rendering of which romance was sacrificed to rhythm. Mr. Santley, the vocalist of the occasion, sang Vulcan's song from "Philémon et Baucis" with inimitable spirit. It is to be wished, however, that the anvil accompaniment had been less suggestive of an inharmonious blacksmith. In Schubert's "Erl-King" an unjustifiable orchestral accompaniment was substituted for the usual one. The programme also included the "Freischütz" Overture and the already hackneyed Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana," without which no musical entertainment is supposed to be complete. It is difficult to say whether the sentiment or the solecisms of this much belauded composition are more effectually revealed by so fine a performance as that given by the Crystal Palace band.

At the Concert on the 20th ult. Mr. Manns introduced a "Gipsy Suite" from the pen of Mr. E. German, who has already claimed favourable attention as a writer of instrumental music. The Suite is in four movements—a Valse mélancolique in A minor; an Allegro di Bravura, 4-4, in D minor; an Allegretto grazioso, 3-4, in G major; and a Tarantella in A minor—and is a clever, richly scored, and eminently enjoyable composition. We like Mr. German best in his vivacious moods, for in the Allegretto there is a slight lack of distinction in the principal melody—reminding one somewhat of that familiar type of piece entitled "Air of King Louis the —th"; and all waltzes nowadays are so very mélancoliques that Mr. German has not much scope for the display of individuality. But the Allegro and Tarantella are immensely spirited and bright, while the orchestration though a little "thick" in places, is remarkable for its sonority and ingenuity. The Suite, though placed last on the programme, was most cordially received, the applause continuing until Mr. German appeared to bow his acknowledgments from the platform. Master Otto Hegner had been announced to play Chopin's Concerto in E, but was suddenly disabled at the last moment by an attack of influenza. Mr. Manns was lucky in getting so able a substitute as Miss Adelina de Lara, who, without rehearsal, and at about two hours' notice, played Schumann's Concerto in truly admirable fashion. She has a delightfully elastic touch, brilliant technique, and plenty of intelligence, qualities which were again displayed in a clever transcription for pianoforte solo of Jensen's song "Murmelndes Lüftchen," and one of the most familiar of Mendelssohn's Songs without Words—played as an encore. In Chopin's Ballade in A flat she was neither more nor less satisfactory than Madame Schumann's pupils generally are in the works of this master. Mr. Manns directed fine performances of Wagner's "Faust" Overture—which so vividly depicts the misery and distress of Wagner's own life at the period of its composition—and Beethoven's Symphony in C, No. 1. Madame Clara Samuell sang Mozart's "Deh Vieni" with real charm of voice and great neatness of style, but at a most dirge-like tempo. In two of the late Sir George Macfarren's songs, "A Widow Bird" and "Pack clouds away," the obbligato accompaniment for clarinet was cleverly played by Mr. G. Clinton.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

It will be unnecessary to deal at length with these Concerts on the present occasion, because the programmes since our last notice have not contained any novelties nor has the co-operation been secured of any artists new to the Metropolis. If Mr. Arthur Chappell's patrons are satisfied with what may be termed a policy of laissez faire no one else has any right to complain, and meanwhile a brief chronicle of what is done is alone required. Taking up the record, we have first to speak of the Concert of Saturday, January 30, when Mr. Arbos made his appearance as leader and Miss Szumowska was the pianist. Excellent performances were secured of Beethoven's Quintet in C (Op. 29) and Schumann's Pianoforte Trio in D minor (Op. 63), and the Spanish violinist further displayed his own ability and the benefit of Mr. Joachim's teaching by his broad, vigorous, and technically excellent performance of Bach's familiar Prelude and Fugue in G minor. The rendering of Beethoven's so-called Sonata Pastorale in D (Op. 28) by Miss Szumowska was unconventional, and in the Andante the pace was decidedly too slow, but it was on the whole an effective interpretation. Brahms's new Vocal Quartets and Gipsy Songs were repeated for the last time this season, with the same executants as before—namely, Mr. and Mrs. Henschel, Madame Fassett, and Mr. Shakespeare—and these delightful little compositions evidently gave much pleasure to the large audience.

On Monday, the 1st ult., the concerted works were Haydn's Quartet in E flat (Op. 71, No. 3) and Beethoven's Sonata in A for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 69). Miss Szumowska was again the pianist, her selections being Chopin's Nocturne in F sharp (Op. 15, No. 2), the Mazurka in F sharp minor (Op. 59, No. 3), and the Scherzo in C sharp minor (Op. 39, No. 3), the artist being most acceptable in the third piece. Madame Néruda played Handel's Violin Sonata in D (No. 5) in her customary faultless manner, but once more she may be reminded that Handel wrote twelve Sonatas for violin or German flute, and that only two of them have been heard at the Popular Concerts. The vocalist was Mr. O'Mara, who, in spite of some hoarseness, made a pleasant impression by his artistic rendering of songs by Sternda Bennett Mendelssohn, and Jensen.

Schubert's Octet was performed for the last time this season on Saturday, the 6th ult., and the only other concerted piece was Haydn's Pianoforte Trio in E flat (No. 5). Here we have a further example of the conservative policy adopted in this enterprise, for although Haydn wrote about thirty Trios only six of them have been heard up to the present time. Mrs. Osborne Williams was the vocalist. On the following Monday the first work on the programme was a quasi-novelty—namely, Rubinstein's Pianoforte Trio in G minor (Op. 15), which had only been performed on one previous occasion. It is, on the whole, a pleasing composition, the themes being nearly all attractive, though the construction is loose and unsymmetrical. Beethoven's Septet concluded the Concert and Miss Szumowska introduced two pianoforte pieces by her countryman, Mr. Paderewski, a Thème Varié in A, from a set of pieces entitled "Miscellanea" (Op. 16), and an Intermezzo Polacca in C minor, from a series bearing the name of "Humoresques de Concert," published in several books. They are not important compositions, but they are piquant sketches in the best style of virtuoso music, and they were rendered with appropriate spirit. Mr. Oudin made an extremely favourable impression in Gounod's song "Le Vallon" and Lotti's "Pur dicesti," the last-named air being peremptorily encored.

The scheme of Saturday, the 13th ult., was composed, as to the instrumental portion, of three masterly works of the first grade—namely, Mendelssohn's Quintet in B flat (Op. 87), which was the first piece in the first programme of the Popular Concerts just thirty-three years ago; Schumann's Quintet in E flat (Op. 44), which has now taken its rightful place in the estimation of amateurs; and Beethoven's Sonata in D minor (Op. 31, No. 2), the last-named being played in his best manner by Sir Charles Hallé. Mr. Oudin was again the vocalist, his selections being the Recitative and Cantilène "Pour moi, si mes destins," from Gounod's neglected Opera "Polyeucte," and two songs by Herbert Bunning, all of which he rendered with much artistic effect.

Miss Ilona Eibenschütz made her first appearance this season on the 15th ult., and, despite serious defects in her interpretation of Beethoven's Sonata in C (Op. 53), generally known as the "Waldstein" Sonata, proved, by her intelligent and vigorous playing, that she is making satisfactory progress as an artist. She commenced the last movement much too quickly, but her interpretation generally was marked by the breadth and, if the term is admissible, masculine vigour which the work demands. Beethoven's Quartet in E minor (Op. 59, No. 2) and Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor (Op. 25) completed the instrumental portion of the programme, and Mrs. Helen Trust won several recalls by her delightful rendering of songs by Arne and Chaminade.

On the following Saturday the concerted pieces in the programme were only two in number and both by Mendelssohn—that is to say, the Quartet in E flat (Op. 12) and the Sonata in D for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 58). Once more Madame Néruda treated her admirers to Handel's Violin Sonata in D and Miss Eibenschütz selected Tausig's arrangement, or rather derangement, of Bach's Organ Toccata and Fugue in D minor as her pianoforte solo. The fondness of pianists for these caricatures of a great master's creations remains an insoluble mystery. Mr. Brereton was the vocalist at this Concert.

Mr. Schönberger, the pianist on Monday, the 22nd ult., may be thanked for letting us hear once more Weber's beautiful Sonata in A flat, although the rendering of the first and second movements could not be admired owing to the liberties taken with the composer's text, especially as regards the nuances. The third and fourth sections were, however, extremely well played. The concerted works were Dvorák's fine Quartet in E flat (Op. 51) and Mozart's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor; Mr. Plunket Greene was admirable in Schubert's "Gesang des Harfner's" and three effective Slavonic songs arranged by F. Korbay.

WIND INSTRUMENT CHAMBER MUSIC SOCIETY.

The fourth Concert of the season, held at the Royal Academy of Music on Friday, the 12th ult., began with an absolute novelty in the shape of a Quintet in F major, for flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon, by A. Carnall. This work displays some freshness of invention, but is rather lacking in that quality of unity essential to a satisfactory whole. The opening is better than the conclusion, the comparative neatness of the first Allegro evoking anticipations that are not realised in the Finale, which, by the way, embraces a theme that is almost rollicking in its merriment. Even before the last movement is reached a slight falling off is perceptible. The two middle movements are an Adagio and an Intermezzo (Allegro and moderato). The work was favourably but not enthusiastically received by the subscribers. The performers were Messrs. A. P. Vivian, Davies, Alexander Smith, Busby, and James, who were also associated in E. Pessard's Pastorale (Op. 14, No. 1) and G. Pierné's Aubade (Op. 6), melodious trifles repeated by special desire from a preceding Concert. Mr. James evinced perfect command of his instrument in F. David's Concertino (Op. 12) for the bassoon, and the same may be said of Mr. Smith in connection with the clarinet solo (No. 1) of F. Berr. The effect of J. Hasselman's Duo Concertante in F, for flute and horn, with pianoforte accompaniment, was unfortunately marred by a misunderstanding which necessitated a stoppage during the Andantino movement. The closing work was G. Onslow's Sextet (Op. 30), which went with spirit throughout. In this the four wind executants—the oboe having no part—had for companions Mr. J. Haydn Waud (double bass) and Mr. Stanley Hawley (pianoforte).

THURSDAY SUBSCRIPTION CONCERTS.

Messrs. William Nicholl, Septimus Webbe, and Hans Adolf Brousil devoted the first part of their programme at Princes' Hall on the 4th ult. to three compositions by Grieg, two of which were instrumental. The Sonata in A minor (Op. 36) for pianoforte and violoncello, a favourable specimen of the composer's constructive ingenuity and power of holding attention, was played by Messrs. Webbe and Brousil, who brought out its principal points in a felicitous manner. The former subsequently gave, with considerable judgment, the "Holberg Suite" (Op. 40). Mr. Nicholl's contribution naturally came between these pieces, and consisted of the "Cycle of Songs" (Op. 44), with its picturesque "Reminiscences from Mountain and Fiord." Each of the four sections descriptive of some type of female native was rendered with irreproachable taste by Mr. Nicholl, who was specially complimented after the tuneful passage relating to Ingeborg. The Finale too was sung with much fervour. For the second part he selected "Songs of the North" of another description—namely, Mr. Malcolm Lawson's arrangement of "Turn ye to me," "Loch Lomond," and "Speed, bonnie boat," accompanying himself, and in the delivery of which equal success attended his efforts. There was yet a further vocal piece in Raff's "Ave Maria," excellently given by Miss Marian McKenzie. Mr. Brousil had for violoncello soli Davidoff s Romance in G and Klengel's Scherzo in D minor, and joined Mr. Webbe in Mendelssohn's graceful Variations in D. The general scheme was evidently acceptable to the numerous assemblage.

MR. RICHARD GOMPERTZ'S CONCERTS.

On the 3rd and 18th ult. Mr. Gompertz, with the assistance of Messrs. H. Inwards, E. Kreuz, and C. Ould, who style themselves the "Cambridge University Musical Society's String Quartet," gave Chamber Concerts at Princes' Hall. Pains had evidently been taken to frame programmes of exceptional interest. Thus it came about that all the instrumental works performed—not excepting even the Haydn Quartet—belong to the category of the unhackneyed. Opportunities of hearing Beethoven's famous "posthumous" Quartets are so rare that Mr. Gompertz deserves a special meed of praise for including two of them in his scheme. Choice fell upon those in B flat (Op. 130) and A minor (Op. 132). Apart from the attractiveness due to their profound, intensely subjective character, these works enjoy special notoriety, the former on account of its final movement being the last music penned by its immortal composer, the latter owing to the Adagio molto in the Lydian mode, written by Beethoven as a "Song of Thanksgiving" on recovery from a severe illness. Considerable difficulties lie in the way of an entirely satisfactory performance of these exacting Quartets. Fortified, however, by sympathy and the confidence engendered by constant association, the executants acquitted themselves in a manner which won the highest encomiums. Brahms's String Quartet in C minor (Op. 51, No. 1), although individual and characteristic, does not exhibit the Hamburg master in an altogether congenial mood—a fact which, no doubt, accounts for its lack of popularity. On the other hand, we are disposed to regard the Sonata for pianoforte and violin in E major (Op. 38) by Mr. Algernon Ashton (introduced at the second Concert by the composer and Mr. Gompertz) as one of the most satisfactory of Mr. Ashton's efforts to which our notice has been drawn. The work has breadth, melodious charm, and considerable originality. Agreeable diversity was afforded by the cultivated singing of Miss Fillunger and Mr. Shakespeare. Two melancholy songs by Madame L. Heritte-Viardot, brought forward by Miss Fillunger, proved clever, but unnecessarily depressing.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

Within eight days the three leading amateur orchestral societies whose headquarters are at St. James's Hall gave Concerts during February, and comparisons might therefore be easily instituted; but it is preferable and more judicious to notice briefly each performance on its merits. The Royal Amateurs were first in the field on the 13th ult., and under the direction of Mr. George Mount gave what may fairly be described as creditable performances of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and the Overtures to "Masaniello" and "The Bohemian Girl." Master Otto Hegner made his re-appearance after a considerable absence, and showed satisfactory improvement in Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor and smaller pieces by Chopin and Schumann. The Meister Glee Singers rendered able assistance.

On the 18th ult. the Stock Exchange Orchestral Society gave its second performance for the present season, the programme being in every respect commendable. The first piece was a new Funeral March in B flat minor, with a Trio in the remote key of D major, by the Society's President, Mr. J. F. H. Read. Though not, perhaps, very fresh either in subject-matter or development, the piece is cleverly put together, and the effect is enhanced by the melancholy tones of a passing bell which are heard at measured intervals. Two movements from a Suite in A, by Mr. William Wallace, gave the impression that the young composer has much ability. The work, we are told, was suggested by Ibsen's play "The Lady from the Sea," and the music is certainly tinged with sombre Northern colouring. The composer is a native of Greenock, and was for some time a student at the Royal Academy of Music. A good performance was secured of Gade's brief and genial Symphony in B flat, and Miss Lilian Griffiths, a young violinist (formerly a pupil of Mr. Ludwig, and more recently of Professor Heermann, of Frankfort), gave a sound and in almost every respect satisfactory rendering of Beethoven's Concerto. Another débutante, Miss Alice Schidrowitz, displayed a pleasant soprano voice and considerable vocal skill in Hérold's air "Jours de mon enfance." With the exception of Mr. J. F. Barnett's pleasing characteristic pieces, "The Flowing Tide" and "Fairy Land," which were conducted by the composer, the Concert was under the direction of Mr. George Kitchin, who may be congratulated on its complete success.

On the following Saturday it was the turn of the Strolling Players. The principal pieces in their programme were Kalliwoda's melodious if somewhat weak Symphony in E flat (No. 2), Cherubini's "Anacreon" Overture, and one of Bizet's Suites from "L'Arlésienne." All of these were very creditably rendered, under the direction of Mr. Norfolk Megone, and the too-frequently heard Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" obtained its usual encore. A well-written Trio for violin, clarinet, and pianoforte, by Mr. Eaton Faning, was excellently played by Messrs. Morris, Beddane, and Izard. The piece is in one movement in B flat, with, however, an episode in G minor. Miss Zagury and Miss Schidrowitz—both, we believe, pupils of Madame Liebhart—gave much satisfaction in various vocal excerpts.

HAMPSTEAD CONSERVATOIRE.

Another example of the excellent work carried on in connection with the Hampstead Conservatoire was afforded on Monday evening, the 22nd ult., when Professor Villiers Stanford's Birmingham Oratorio "Eden" was presented to the notice of North London amateurs, who assembled in large numbers to hear this much-debated work. We have nothing to retract nor to modify concerning it, our opinion concerning its conspicuous merits and its minor defects remaining unchanged; but at the lowest estimate "Eden" is an Oratorio that should be heard and judged, for in aim, and to some extent in achievement, it has more significance than the majority of works recently produced in this branch of art. The performance, under the able direction of the Composer, was, on the whole, admirable. The choir commenced a little unsteadily, but the tenors and basses distinguished themselves later on, the difficulties of the second part, or "Act," denominated "Hell," being surmounted in very praiseworthy fashion. Miss Anna Williams and Mr. Henschel were again unexceptionable in the parts they created at Birmingham, and Miss Margaret Hoare, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Brereton were entirely satisfactory as the remaining soloists.

BRIXTON CHORAL SOCIETY.

The Brixton Choral Society gave a Chamber Concert, at the Brixton Hall, on the 15th ult. A well-arranged programme was presented, which included a varied selection of pieces—vocal, instrumental, and choral, of all kinds. The singing of the choir in several part-songs and in Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer" showed a gratifying advancement, and if the steady improvement be maintained it will not be a difficult matter to prophesy that the Society will soon rank among the finest bodies of singers in London. Much of the excellence of the choir is due to the admirable training of the Conductor, Mr. Douglas Redman, who on this occasion also appeared as a composer of a Quartet for strings. The ability shown in the Quartet is of no mean order, while the composer's method of dealing with his melodious and graceful subjects gives evidence of power which only requires still further development to become of wider value. The Quartet was played by Messrs. Muller, Novak, Krause, and Melling, and the audience showed their appreciation of the talent of the composer by calling him twice to the platform to acknowledge their applause. The interest of the Concert was further sustained by the singing of Madame Clara Samuell and Mr. David Hughes; Herr Muller gave some violin solos and Mr. W. J. Kipps presided at the organ.

MR. AND MRS. HENSCHEL'S VOCAL RECITALS.

Among the musical entertainments of the season which are now anticipated with the gratitude which we are told is a lively sense of favours to come, are the Vocal Recitals of Mr. and Mrs. Henschel, and the large audiences in St. James's Hall on January 27 and the 10th ult. testified to the esteem in which performances equally instructive and enjoyable are held by the increasing number of amateurs interested in high-class song. On the first of the above-named occasions a considerable number of pieces not frequently heard in the concert-room were included in the programme, among them being a duet "Quel onda che rovina," by Padre Martini; Handel's "Oh, Sleep! why dost thou leave me?" from "Semele"; and "Qual farfaletta," from "Partenope"; a pretty Lullaby by Tschaikowsky; a duet from Boieldieu's "Les voitures versées"; and sundry lyrics by Mr. Henschel, the most striking of which was the graphically written ballad "Der Schenk von Erbach," of which Mr. F. Corder furnished a careful translation of Paul Heyse's original verse. The Harem Keeper's ditty from Mozart's "Die Entführung," Beethoven's "Busslied," and various pieces, all interesting, by Schubert, Brahms Stanford, and Mackenzie, made up the bulk of the scheme.

The programme of the second Recital was not less varied, and, generally speaking, well-chosen airs by Pergolesi, Mozart, and Handel, known only to connoisseurs, occupied the early part of the programme. Arne's quaint song "Polly Willis" and the old Irish ditty "The Glen of Kenmare" worthily represented native art, and songs by Schubert, Loewe's "Erl-König," of which Mr. Henschel once more gave an unsurpassable rendering, the duet from the fourth act of Goetz's "Taming of the Shrew," and excerpts from Boieldieu's "Jean de Paris" and Lortzing's "Czar and Carpenter" contributed to swell the interest of the Recital. Mr. Henschel was represented by his fine ballad "Jung Dieterich," his charming song "There was an ancient King," and four "Lieder im Volkston." It is scarcely needful to add that the whole of the selections at both Recitals were interpreted with exquisite refinement, and that Mr. Henschel's accompaniments left no loophole for adverse criticism.

THE "VICAR OF BRAY" AT THE SAVOY.

Mr. Edward Solomon has been more successful than the majority of comic opera composers basing their style upon that of Sir Arthur Sullivan. Since "Billie Taylor," with which his name first became familiar, Mr. Solomon has furnished a number of works of like character, nearly all of which have possessed an abundance of tunefulness and have often evinced, through the medium of the orchestra, a keen appreciation of the whimsical. These qualities are particularly noticeable in the "Vicar of Bray," originally played a few months short of ten years ago at the Globe Theatre, with the late Mr. W. J. Hill as the portly and suave Rev. William Barlow, and reproduced on Thursday, January 28, by Mr. D'Oyly Carte, after having undergone extensive revision both by the author (Mr. Sydney Grundy) and the composer. The present score contains half-a-dozen entirely new pieces, and includes among its distinctive features careful part-writing and effective employment of the ecclesiastical mode in some of the music for the black-coated students. The revival derives all the advantages obtainable from picturesque decoration, a chorus of merry children as well as of adults, and the dramatic experience combined with ability in divers ways of the Misses Brandram (excellent as the Widow), Snyder, and Duggan; and Messrs. Rutland Barrington (the Vicar), Courtice Pounds (the Curate), Richard Green, and Denny.

MISS DORA BRIGHT'S PIANOFORTE RECITAL.

A young English pianist who has the hardihood to give a Recital consisting entirely of works by British born composers deserves encouragement, and it may further be said that Miss Dora Bright was successful alike in her programme at the Princes' Hall, on the 16th ult., and in its execution. It might be regarded in some measure as a historical exposition of the development of keyboard music in this country, as it commenced with two trifles by William Byrde and ended with a group of pieces by living composers. The second and third selections were a Suite in G minor of Purcell and a Sonata in D minor by Arne. The latter is an extremely vigorous work and suggests the influence of Scarlatti, which is not surprising, as Arne made himself acquainted with Italian music, instrumental as well as vocal. The first and most important of the selections by nineteenth century composers was Sterndale Bennett's Sonata "The Maid of Orleans," which has been generally neglected by pianists for fully a decade. The titles of the movements and the extracts from Schiller which follow them, may be accepted in a general sense as indicating the character of the music in some measure; but we doubt whether they assist the listener very much in forming his impressions, for Sterndale Bennett was certainly not a writer of programme music. Following the Sonata came pieces by Sir George Macfarren, Mr. Walter Macfarren, Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, Mr. F. H. Cowen, Mr. J. Moir Clarke, Dr. Hubert Parry, and Professor Villiers Stanford. As already indicated, Miss Bright's playing was marked alike by admirable technique and artistic intelligence of no mean order. The Recital was in every sense a conspicuous success.

MR. CHARLES FRY'S RECITALS.

Music was again a very prominent feature at Mr. Charles Fry's Recital at the Hampstead Conservatoire, on January 30, when a goodly company of Shakespeare-lovers assembled to hear that delightful comedy "As you like it." That the audience liked it—i.e., the performance—was very evident, the applause being both frequent and hearty, and they were quick to appreciate Mr. Fry's remarkable variety of voice and gesture in the different characters, especially his fine impersonations of the faithful Adam and the clown Touchstone. A small band (led by Mr. T. E. Gatehouse) played very creditably orchestral pieces by Dr. Mackenzie and Berthold Tours, and Henry Gadsby's characteristic Suite "The Forest of Arden," which, composed originally for the Philharmonic Society, was most suitable in its association with the play. The vocal pieces were sung by the choir of St. Gabriel's, Willesden Green, in aid of the building fund of which church the Recital was given. They acquitted themselves specially well in Berthold Tours's effective part-song "Hymn to the moon," and Masters Jones and Davis were encored for their singing of "It was a lover and his lass." The best effect was, however, made in Bishop's glee "What shall he have who killed the deer?" which was sung with much vigour. The music was ably directed by Mr. Henry Baker. The Recital will be repeated on the 16th inst. at the Birkbeck Institution.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

At the fourth meeting, on the 9th ult., at the Royal Academy of Music, Mr. E. Algernon Baughan read a paper on the Development of Opera. After having prefaced his Lecture by the contention that drama did not appear unnatural when expressed by song, because singing was an idealised form of speech, Mr. Baughan gave a resumé of the progress of opera from Monteverde to Wagner, and pointed out that the latter's mezzo-recitativo, symphonic use of the orchestra, and Leitmotif had been tentatively employed by Gluck and Weber. The Lecturer contended that concerted singing was intrinsically artificial because it was unnatural that several persons should simultaneously exclaim in neatly dovetailed phrases. For music to appear natural when allied to drama (and the appearance was the sole point) it should follow the course of human dialogue. Opera was not organic drama, for it consisted of a congerie of arias, recitative, concerted singing, and ballets. Mr. Baughan discussed the relation of music to emotion. He thought the whole strength of music lay in its power to convey abstract emotion. But when music was united to drama it gained a new significance by becoming illustrative of the emotions of individuals. So that motifs, besides musically interpreting abstract emotions, gained a precise dramatic meaning by being associated with the concrete ideas and emotions which impel the dramatis personæ to action. Mr. Baughan considered that music could convey but not represent emotion, which was not a fact but a state of feeling, and, therefore, could not be represented. The point was, could composers convey their emotions to their audience by means of music? Music originally came into existence as an ideal form of expressing feelings for which words were inadequate. Words did not convey but merely suggested emotions; but the tone of voice, an elementary form of music, conveyed to the hearer the precise meaning of the speaker. Music exaggerated, idealised, and then notated that tone of voice. Mr. Baughan contended that to compose music solely for the sake of producing beautiful sound forms was to glorify a means into an end, and he asked: Ought music to seek inspiration from notes? literature from words? painting from pigments? He thought, however, that Berlioz had misunderstood the function of music, which was not primarily a descriptive art but one that interprets the very essence of life and thought—emotion. With regard to the charge of "ugliness" brought against modern music-dramas, the Lecturer pointed out that the appropriate was a sine quâ non of dramatic art, and that if the theory of absolute beauty were to be applied to literature, "Macbeth," "Othello," and the rest would have to be banished from the stage. To use only "beautiful" music was to illustrate but one side of life. In conclusion, Mr. Baughan insisted that rules deduced from absolute could not be applied to dramatic music, because to interpret the numerous emotions of a drama ceaseless and unfettered changes of tonality and expression were required. There was an animated discussion, in which Mr. Cummings (chairman), Mr. Southgate, Mr. G. B. Shaw, and Mr. E. F. Jacques took part.

MR. HENSCHEL ON SONG-WRITING.

At the distribution of certificates, on the 13th ult., at Beckenham, to the students of the Beckenham, Streatham, and Wimbledon Schools of Music, which are under the direction of Mr. Ridley Prentice, Mr. Henschel addressed the pupils on "Ambition in Song-writing." Mr. Henschel said he had chosen this subject because, to write a song was the first thing that occurred to a musical student who, having passed an examination in harmony or counterpoint, considered himself or herself fairly on the road to immortality—or making money. This desire to make money by art was the bane of our young composers. Formerly a literary or musical work was judged on its own intrinsic merits; the real judges now-a-days—as far as public opinion was concerned—were the chartered accountants. The standard of artistic success of a new oratorio or opera was set up by a comparison of monetary receipts. For example, a short opera, let them call it "Artineria de Marina," met with universal success. It was, however, not long enough to fill an entire evening, so it was preceded by Gluck's "Orfeo," ending with "Che farò." Imagine a new play being preceded by "Hamlet" ending with "To be or not to be"! No truer words were ever spoken by Schiller than when he said, "Where and whenever art deteriorates it is always the fault of the artists." The masses as such did not know the difference between good and bad in art. They only knew what tickled their fancy. But there was born within thousands a desire to know, and if those to whom they looked for guidance deceived them, and did not give them their best, it was as dishonest an act as that of the artizan who gave his employer inferior work. The purpose of art was to make the world brighter, happier, and better. Students should disdain to stoop. Their ambition should be to raise those to whom they appealed to the pure heights of true art. Let them always remember Goethe's words, "The man that has satisfied the greatest and best of his time has lived for all time." In conclusion, he besought them not to write a song or anything else unless the spirit moved them, and not to let their spirit be moved by paltry, trashy verse, nor to confound sentimentality with sentiment. The former was superficial aimless pity and affected emotion, while the latter was true emotion, which grew out of the contemplation of an incident; and it was the sentiment, not the incident, which was the fit object for musical expression. Let them look for inspiration to the true poets, living or dead, and, above all, be true to themselves; and the glorious consciousness of having always done their best for the progress of their art would be far more precious to them than money, which, however, rarely failed to find out those who worked earnestly, conscientiously, and faithfully.

M. MASSENET'S "WERTHER."

The long-expected first performance of M. Massenet's three-act opera "Werther" took place on the 16th ult., at the Imperial Opera of Vienna, in the presence of the composer, and before a distinguished audience, including a number of musicians of note, as well as many members of the Austrian aristocracy. The ably-compiled libretto, the joint work of MM. Édouard Blau, Paul Milliet, and Georges Hartmann, has been translated and adapted for the German stage by Herr Max Kalbeck. It closely follows the lines of Goethe's familiar and world-famed story of "Werther's Leiden," and is divided into four tableaux, the entire action taking place at the quaint old town of Wetzlar, in the year 1772. The score of the work was completed so long ago as 1884, shortly after that of the same composer's "Manon," the character of the music being, moreover, it is said, very similar to that exhibited by its successful predecessor. To judge from the highly favourable reception accorded to it at the first performance in question, M. Massenet has scored a fresh success with the present work. In a notice of the performance contained in Le Ménestrel, that journal sums up its critical observations concerning the score of "Werther" in calling it "a passionate commentary to the words, infusing life and warmth into every nook and corner of the drama." Nor are the comments furnished in the Viennese papers less favourable to the new work of the distinguished French composer. The interpretation is described as an excellent one; M. Van Dyck as the melancholy hero, Fräulein Renard as Lotte, Fräulein Forster as Sophie (Lotte's sister), and Herr Seidl as Albert, exerting themselves to their utmost to ensure success; while the orchestra, under the skilful direction of Herr Jahn, rendered capital service. The playing by the latter of an Intermezzo, while the picture of Wetzlar on a snowy Christmas night is shown, produced a most marked impression. With the solitary exception of a Christmas hymn, sung by children in the last act, there is no chorus in the opera. "Werther" had been magnificently put on the stage; the mise-en-scène in the concluding act, when the hero dies in the village street on Christmas Eve, being especially effective. The composer was recalled a great number of times at the conclusion of the performance.

OBITUARY.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. John Old, of Reading, which took place on the 4th ult., after a painful illness. He was born at Totnes, May 28, 1827, and was head of the eldest branch of the family which, from 1336 to 1815, occupied Rowton Hall. He studied music at the Royal Academy, under Sterndale Bennett, Loder, Goss, and Molique, and afterwards with Thalberg and Liszt. After successfully practising as a conductor and teacher in Torquay, Mr. Old settled at Reading, where he founded the Layston College of Music. His compositions include a sacred drama called "The Seventh Seal," a three-act opera on the subject of "Herne the Hunter," and a large number of miscellaneous vocal and instrumental works. Among his pupils who have attained eminence may be named Miss Mary Davies and Miss Agnes Larkcom. Mr. Old was much respected, and his loss will be widely felt. At his request, a copy of his opera "Herne" and two other compositions were buried with him.

Mr. Victor de Pontigny, who died at the end of January last at Upper Norwood, where he had resided for over thirty years, was born November 27, 1804. He was probably the greatest authority of his day on percussive instruments, his numerous articles on the "Drum" and kindred instruments in Grove's Dictionary of Music exhibiting a remarkable amount of erudition and research. He was a friend of Sir Frederick Ouseley, and for many years a member of the Musical Association, before which Society in 1876 he read a valuable paper on "Drums."

Mr. Joseph Goss, youngest brother of the late Sir John Goss, died on the 13th ult. at "The Avenue," Surbiton Hill, Kingston-on-Thames.

We have also to record the following deaths, viz.:—

On the 2nd ult., at Perugia, Agostino Mercuri, popular operatic composer, aged fifty-three.

On the 2nd ult., at Potsdam, August Schubert, distinguished clarinet virtuoso, formerly a member of the orchestra of the Berlin Opera, aged eighty-one.

On the 3rd ult., at Paris, Madame Viguier, excellent pianist and teacher of the instrument, aged fifty-seven.

On the 3rd ult., at Ems, Hermann Mansfeld, musical director and composer, aged fifty-nine.

On the 4th ult., at Milan, Alessandro Bottero, one of the most famous of Italian buffos; born at Genoa in 1831.

On the 13th ult., at Paris, Lambert Massart, distinguished violinist, favourite pupil of Kreutzer, and teacher of Henri Wieniawski and Teresa Tua; a professor at the Conservatoire. Born at Liège in 1811.

On the 18th ult., at Paris, Lucien Dautresme, Senator, composer of the successful opera "Cardillac" and other operatic works, aged sixty-five.

We regret to record the death of Mr. Frank Boyle, which took place at Barnstaple on the 6th ult. Mr. Boyle was for some years well-known as a pleasing tenor singer. He made a special mark at the Promenade Concerts some seasons ago, and a very promising career seemed then open to him. Failing health, however, interfered with the realisation of these hopes, and although, for a short time, a temporary restoration to health enabled him to resume his engagements, the renewal of his malady finally put an end to his artistic career.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Town Hall was literally packed in every part at the Concert of the Festival Choral Society on the 4th ult. The occasion was the first performance, since the Festival, of Professor Stanford's dramatic Oratorio "Eden." The composer was invited to conduct his work, and his presence gave additional interest to the event. The vocal principals were Miss Anna Williams, Miss Margaret Hoare, Miss Annie Holmes, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Robert Grice, and Mr. Henschel. All did their work well, Miss Williams and Mr. Henschel repeating their Festival triumphs. The band was complete in every detail, and the chorus in full force. The performance was a very fine one, almost without a flaw. Details are unnecessary here, but it may be said that a second hearing confirms the impression that in "Eden" we have a work of the highest rank—one breathing the truest art-spirit of the age. True, that in Act I. there is little dramatic action, but the beauty of the music gains upon one as it becomes more familiar; and the vivid colouring of the second act and part of the third shows a sustained power that comes little short of genius. The Oratorio was listened to with profound attention, and the composer, who was most cordially received on entering the hall, was greeted at the close with acclamations loud and long.

The Midland Musical Society—Conductor, Mr. H. M. Stevenson—gave a performance of Dr. Mackenzie's "Rose of Sharon" in the Town Hall on the 13th ult. The solos were taken by Miss Laura Taylor, Miss Florence Bourne, Mr. Charles Slater, Mr. James Snape, and Mr. William Evans, of whom the first and last were the most successful. The Society is amateur as regards chorus and band, but for this Concert the services of Mr. F. Ward were engaged as leader, and professional aid was also requisitioned in the brass and wood-wind sections of the orchestra. There was an enormous attendance, and the most hearty applause was bestowed upon the performance at every opportunity for that demonstration of approval to be made. At both Concerts Mr. C. W. Perkins rendered valuable assistance at the organ.

On the 6th ult. a Concert was given by the Amateur Orchestral Society in the Town Hall. Our clever young violoncellist, Mr. A. J. Priestley, played the E minor Concerto of August Lindner, for the first time in England. The work is good and interesting, but it requires better orchestral support than it received then for one to judge fairly of its merits. The last movement is very brilliant for the soloist. Mr. W. A. Langston conducted, and vocal pieces were contributed by Miss Mabel Grove and Mr. Richard E. Riley.

The third of Messrs. Harrison's Popular Concerts was given in the Town Hall on the 8th ult., with Madame Nordica, Mr. Santley, Mr. Ben Davies, and a young local contralto, Miss Alice Hill. The Meister Glee Singers also appeared, and Mdlle. Janotha (pianist), Miss Marianne Eissler (violinist), and Mr. Bisaccia (accompanist) completed the artistic corps.

Miss Marie Fromm gave a Pianoforte Recital in the Masonic Hall on the 11th ult. Schumann's "Carnival" and Liszt's "Don Juan" Fantasia were the most important pieces in the programme. The young lady is a good, if not exceptional, pianist, and her performances were warmly appreciated by the audience.

The Midland Musical Guild opened its session on the 6th ult. The President for the year, Mr. S. S. Stratton, gave his address, the subject being "Music and the Age." A Concert took place afterwards, among the pieces being a String Quartet in F minor, by Mr. Fred. Ward; two movements of a Pianoforte Trio, by Mr. A. E. Daniel; and a song, "Dear Land," by Mr. E. J. Breakspeare, all members of the Guild.

MUSIC IN BRADFORD.

An event which attracted some attention on the part of local musicians was the performance of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" at the Girlington Wesleyan Chapel on January 21. The chapel choir was largely augmented by members of the old choral society, and the chorus, with the advantage of Mr. Robertshaw's leadership, acquitted itself handsomely. Miss Cockroft, Miss E. Rhodes, and Mr. H. Ingle were responsible for the solo work, which was extremely well done. Mr. William Widdop presided at the fine organ with much ability.

A remarkably successful Concert was given by the Bradford Kyrle Choir on the 22nd of the same month. The work with which it came before the public on this occasion was Gaul's new Cantata "The Ten Virgins," which, in parts, lends itself very fully to picturesque effect, and generally gives every opportunity for graceful and expressive treatment. The four principal parts were undertaken by Miss Brenda Richardson, Miss Annie Richardson, Mr. C. Osbrey Smith, and Mr. Albert Barnes, the latter also discharging the function of Narrator. The choruses, especially the final double chorus, received excellent treatment, and Mr. Akeroyd must be congratulated on a very efficient performance. Mr. Clough played the accompaniment with good judgment. The Cantata was supplemented by a miscellaneous programme to which the contributors were, in addition to the ladies and gentlemen named, Miss Matthews, Miss Sewell, and Mr. Iveson (vocalists), Mr. W. Schrumpf and Mr. Herbert Golden. The Kyrle Choir also gave a Concert on the 10th ult. in St. John's Wesleyan Schoolroom, Manningham, in aid of that school. The "Bride of Dunkerron," which was performed by the same organisation last season, was the principal feature of the programme, Miss M. Weber, Mr. Arthur Broughton, and Mr. Albert Barnes taking leading parts. Miscellaneous selections made up the second part.

Mr. S. Midgley gave a most admirably arranged Concert of chamber music in the Church Institute. The executants were a combination led by Miss Shinner, and including, in the absence of two of the regular members temporarily laid aside by influenza, Miss Zoe Pyne, Miss Fletcher, Mr. Midgley, and Mr. G. Drake. Miss Shinner and Miss Cecilia Gates were responsible for instrumental solos. The chief pieces of the programme were Beethoven's Quartet in C minor (Op. 18, No. 4), Mendelssohn's Quartet in E minor (Op. 44, No. 2), and Bennett's Sextet. Miss Una Buckshaw gave a very pleasing impression by the rendering of four songs.

The annual Concert in connection with St. John's Church, Horton Lane, of which Mr. Henry Coates, the Organist and Choirmaster, has the responsible management, brought together a very large audience in the Technical College on January 26. The programme, which was of elaborate dimensions, was carried out with more than ordinary success, excellent chorus work being accomplished by the choir and numerous musical friends, and songs being rendered by Miss Lettie Speight, Miss Maud Atkinson, Mr. H. Connelly, Mr. E. Greenwood, Mr. J. W. Calverley, and Mr. J. W. Knight; and humorous pieces by Mr. Kingston Barnes. A similar gathering followed in connection with All Saints' Church on January 30, when the musical programme was carried out by Miss Coates, Madame Armitage, Mr. Kingston Barnes, Mr. T. H. Carroll, Mr. Lawson, Mr. Rayner, Master F. Pullan, and the choir of the church.

At the annual Meeting of the Bradford Festival Choral Society, held on the 1st ult., Mr. G. F. Sewell, the Hon. Sec., reported that there were 292 members on the roll, and Mr. J. H. Dixon, the Hon. Treasurer, announced a balance at the bank of £250, which includes a subscription of £100 from the Bradford Subscription Concerts Committee, given, it was stated by the Chairman (Mr. W. M. Hertz), in order that the Society might have an adequate band at their performances. Mr. R. H. Wilson was re-appointed Conductor.

The Orchestral Concert of the Bradford Subscription series, on the 13th ult., found Sir Charles Hallé recovered and leading his forces with his usual vigour, Lady Hallé also taking her share in the work of the evening. The Overture to "Ruy Blas," Beethoven's Grand Symphony in B flat (No. 4), Dvorák's Orchestral Suite in D, two selections from "Cavalleria Rusticana," and the Overture to "Preciosa" offered interesting orchestral variety; and the individual contributions of Lady Hallé and Madame Nordica added much charm to the evening's entertainment.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND WEST OF ENGLAND.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Never has a performance of the Bristol Orpheus Glee Society been attended with greater success than that which took place on the 18th ult. in Colston Hall. The pieces contained in the programme were well selected, and they were sung with unsurpassable artistic excellence. Among the familiar compositions were Cooke's "Strike the Lyre" and "Hohenlinden," S. S. Wesley's "I wish to tune," H. Smart's "A Capstan Chorus," Reichardt's "Image of the Rose," and Genée's "Italian Salad"; while the new ones were a sweet and flowing part-song, "How dear to me," of C. Pinsuti; a melodious trifle, "Phyllis tarries," of C. F. Lloyd; a scholarly and graceful four-part piece, "Song should breathe," of W. H. Cummings; and a clever and highly effective composition, "The reason why," in eight parts, of Sir Robert P. Stewart. "Ye streams that round," from the opera of "Lodoiska" of S. Storace, and Professor Stainer's "Bind my brows" were revived after a lapse of several years. Mr. Harper Kearton was the soloist, and accomplished his task admirably. The large audience heartily appreciated every piece, and were most enthusiastic in their applause. Mr. George Riseley conducted with his usual skill.

The Saturday Popular Concert on the 20th ult. was, as usual, noticeable for the singing by the choir of part-songs, glees, and choruses of a light and melodious character, chosen to suit the thousands of artizans who attend these gatherings. Miss Annie Lea, Mr. Edward Branscombe, and Mr. W. Thomas contributed songs. Miss Eissler's violin solos were greatly appreciated, as were the organ pieces of Mr. Riseley. The band performed Overtures and selections. It may be mentioned in passing that Mr. George Gordon, the Conductor of the Society, took part of his forces to Bristol South on the 10th ult. and gave a Concert in the Town Hall there.

Church music is making great progress in Bristol now. For years the Church of St. Mary Redcliffe took the lead, the Rev. C. E. Cornish, Vicar, and Mr. J. W. Lawson, the Organist, joining heartily in presenting to large congregations suitable sacred works with the aid of an orchestra at church festivals. Mr. A. R. Gaul's "Holy City" was given here on the 9th ult. Other churches have followed the example. The most encouraging changes have been made at the Cathedral during the short time Dean Pigou has been there. Reference to this matter was made in last month's issue of The Musical Times. Further advance in the direction of rendering the services more beautiful, devotional, and popular in the true sense of the word is to be recorded; and on the 10th inst. Recitals of sacred music in the Nave are to be established on the lines of those at Gloucester.

A committee of musical amateurs of Clifton have engaged Mr. Carl Armbruster to give a series of five Concert-lectures on Wagner's "Parsifal" at Clifton on successive Thursday afternoons. The first Lecture took place on the 18th ult., a large and deeply interested assemblage being present. Mr. Armbruster will go through the whole of the work at the subsequent Lectures, and analyse every part of it.

At Mr. Liebich's third Chamber Concert of the season, on the 1st ult., Beethoven's Trio (Op. 97) for pianoforte and strings, Dvorák's Trio (Op. 21) for the same instruments, and Raff's Sonata in E minor for pianoforte and violin (Op. 74) were the chief works brought forward. The executants were Mr. Josef Ludwig, Mr. Leo Stern, and Mr. and Mrs. Liebich; Mr. Montague Worlock was the vocalist. The Concert was a great artistic success.

Miss Mary Lock, with her associates—Mr. Theo. Carrington (vice Mr. Hudson), Mr. F. S. Gardner, Mr. H. Bernard, and Mr. E. Pavey—gave the third popular Chamber Concert of the seventh season at Redland, on the 15th ult. A Sonata in D minor (Op. 75) for pianoforte and violin, of Saint-Saëns; Mendelssohn's Quartet in F minor (Op. 2) for pianoforte and strings, and Spohr's Quartet in G minor for two violins, viola, and violoncello were the principal works. Mr. Hall was the vocalist, and Mr. J. H. Fulford was the accompanist.

Miss Fanny Davies gave a Pianoforte Recital in Clifton on the 2nd ult.

The intermediate Concerts of the Bristol Festival Society, on the 26th and 27th ult., took place too late for notice in this month's issue.

The Cheltenham Festival Society gave a capital Concert on the 9th ult., under the direction of Mr. J. A. Matthews, the able and courteous organiser and conductor of the Society. Mendelssohn's "Athalie" and "Loreley" were the chief works performed. The principal vocalists were Miss Emily Davies, Miss Susan Harrhy (a pupil of Mr. Matthews), Miss Dora Barnard, and Miss Mary Morgan; while Mr. Charles Fry, of London, an elocutionist of high repute, declaimed the connecting lines in the first-named work. Principals, choir, and band discharged their duties well; while the skilful delivery of the lines in "Athalie" by Mr. Fry intensified the effect that work produced. The delightful singing of a charming part-song, "Song and Summer," written for the choir by Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, of Coventry, who conducted its performance, was an agreeable feature, and it was repeated at the demand of the audience. Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" Overture and the other pieces in the programme were well given; and Mr. Fry won further laurels by his recitation of a Scene from Act IV. of "King Henry V.," "The Village Choir," and "An Ode to the Terrestrial Globe," from the "Bab Ballads," the latter being given in response to an encore.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(From our own Correspondent.)

A special general meeting of the Dublin Musical Society was largely attended at the Royal University, on the 19th ult., when the proposal of the Committee to wind up the Society was defeated by an overwhelming majority of the subscribers and guarantors of the Society.

Mr. Rouseby's English Opera Company had a successful run of seven weeks at the Leinster Hall, and in addition to its popular répertoire of operas gave the Dublin public a selection of music from Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana."

A series of six Violin Recitals is being given by Mr. T. Werner at the Molesworth Hall, and amply demonstrates the accomplished artist's knowledge and mastery of all schools and branches of his art.

The Chamber Music Recitals at the Theatre of the Royal Dublin Society are now always crowded on Monday afternoons, thereby showing that their educational value is appreciated. The executants are Signor Papini, Messrs. Rawlingson, Grisard, and Rudersdorff, with Signor Esposito at the pianoforte.

At the fourth of Dr. Collisson's Popular Concerts, which took place at the Leinster Hall on Saturday evening, the 20th ult., the principal vocalists were Mesdames Nordica, Adelaide Mullen, and Swiatlowsky, with Dr. Gordon Fletcher and Mr. Arthur Taylor, supported by Mr. Rudersdorff (violoncello), Miss Josephine Sullivan (harp), and Dr. Collisson (pianoforte). Madame Nordica was also announced to sing at the Concert of the Railway Benevolent Institution, on the 22nd ult., supported by local artists.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

Messrs. Paterson's Orchestral Concerts were brought to a triumphant close with literally a flourish of trumpets, for by additions to the "wind" the orchestra numbered 100 performers instead of 80. The occasion was further interesting as being the first Wagner Concert ever given in Edinburgh. The noisy "Rienzi" Overture and the exciting "Walkürenritt" (which the audience would fain have had repeated) were perhaps the best; the "Siegfried Idyll" and "Siegfried's Death" also call for praise.

The programme-book, which contained a short life of Wagner, an estimate of his place in the history of opera, and explanatory notes on the musical excerpts, was specially written by Mr. Franklin Peterson. Praise is due to Mr. J. C. Dibdin, who edited and largely wrote the other five Concert-books; they were all beautifully printed and profusely illustrated, and the interest of their contents gave very general satisfaction.

On January 30 Sir Charles Hallé, who has done more than anyone to educate public musical taste in Edinburgh, again gave what, till the interruption of last year, was an annual Pianoforte Recital. He was assisted by Lady Hallé, and a well-filled hall and an enthusiastic welcome showed that appreciation of the younger and more vigorous school has not robbed him of the respect and the gratitude we ought never to tire of expressing. His selection of Schubert's "Fantasia Sonata" as the opening piece was a direct challenge by the champion of the classical school, and his playing of it was characterised by all the delicacy of execution and nuance with which we are so familiar. His other solos were a Nocturne and Scherzo (C sharp minor), the latter of which was splendidly played. Lady Hallé chose Spohr's Eighth Concerto (which we have so frequently heard at Reid Concerts) and some compositions by Dvorák of varying interest. A couple of Brahms-Joachim Hungarian Dances were warmly applauded, and the Recital was brought to a close by a very enjoyable performance of the "Kreutzer" Sonata, played in perfect sympathy and with delightful appreciation of its beauties.

On the 4th ult. Mr. Edward Lloyd's Company gave a Ballad Concert, of which the most noteworthy feature was the eminent tenor's singing of Gounod's "Lend me your aid" and of "Scots wha hae" (an encore), where his voice rang like a trumpet. Mr. Watkin Mills was also very successful in winning the applause of the large audience by "O ruddier than the cherry" and Barnby's "Thou whom my heart adoreth."

The Lecture on "Old English Melodies" that Miss Wakefield delivered recently to the members of the Philosophic Institution in Edinburgh was admirable alike in manner and in method. Miss Wakefield had much to say that must have been new to the majority of her hearers, and she showed much discrimination in picking out the salient features of her theme. The sketch she drew of the historic conditions attending the growth of English melody was graphic and picturesque, and she illustrated her Lecture by singing twenty-two songs as examples of the different styles and periods of which she touched. "Chevy Chase" was rendered with a patriotic verve as remarkable as was the tender grace with which "Drink to me only with thine eyes" was sung.

The Winter series of Lectures at the Literary Institute was brought to a conclusion by two musical programmes. On the 18th ult. the Edinburgh Quartet (Messrs. Daly, Dambmann, Hamilton, and Laubach; Messrs. Dace and Gibson at the pianoforte; Mr. Seligman, vocalist) submitted an interesting and varied programme which was warmly received; and on the 25th ult. Mr. Franklin Peterson delivered an illustrated Lecture on the "Development of Art in Song." Mrs. Peterson sang "My mother bids me," "Where is another," "Who is Sylvia?" "The Wanderer," "Es muss ein Wunderbares sein," and other songs.

The Kirkcaldy Choral Union, under Dr. Allum's conductorship, has risen in numbers to 150 members, and at the Annual Concert, on January 28, the choral singing in "The Messiah" eclipsed all previous efforts and gave great pleasure to a crowded house. The soloists were Miss Charlotte Walker, Miss Sarah Berry, Mr. Gordon Fletcher, and Mr. Ffrangcon Davies. A small orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. W. H. Cole, did excellent service, and special mention must be made of the trumpet obbligato to "The trumpet shall sound," magnificently played by Mr. Davie, of Stirling.

At the Reid Concert this year, as intimated in last month's Musical Times, an entirely new departure was made by Professor Niecks. Fulfilling the desire of the "pious Founder" of the Reid bequest, the programme was chosen with a view to illustrate the development of music during the eighteenth century; and fulfilling what would certainly have been General Reid's desire had he understood the needs and the wants of his country to-day, the orchestra was to all purpose a purely Scottish orchestra. It consisted of seventy performers, of whom nine-tenths were musicians resident in Edinburgh and Glasgow. It is to be hoped that if Professor Niecks does not always interpret quite so literally General Reid's instructions about the music of his own time, he will not lose hold of what may easily be made the nucleus of a long desired element in our musical life—a resident orchestra.

The experiment was crowned with triumphant success. Many who only knew the Professor as a littérateur and somewhat of a musical recluse, were not a little astonished at the evident mastery of all the details of orchestral work which he was able to show. Another evidence of Professor Niecks's many-sided musical talent was a delightful Concert-book written with the ease of one who is a master both of his subject and of the vehicle of expression.

The most interesting number in the programme was Bach's Suite in D, for the adequate performance of which the services of Mr. Morrow, with his specially manufactured trumpet, had been secured. Mr. Sons played the lovely Aria (on the G string) with great expression and artistic success. Other orchestral numbers were Handel's Concerto for two violins and oboe (in its original form), Haydn's Symphony in E flat, and Cherubini's "Lodoiska" Overture. Mr. Max Pauer was the solo pianist, and in Mozart's beautiful Concerto in A major he pleased the audience better than in three pieces by Rameau, Couperin, and Scarlatti. The vocalists were Miss Marguerite Macintyre and Mr. Ffrangcon Davies.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The performance by the Glasgow Choral Union, on January 28, of Mr. Hamish MacCunn's "Queen Hynde of Caledon," took place too late for notice in last month's Musical Times. If the new Cantata does not attain the level of high musical art revealed in the same composer's "Lay of the Last Minstrel"—and in several respects it does not reach that level—Mr. MacCunn has, nevertheless, again shown his resources as a writer of dramatic music. There are, true enough, shortcomings in the work, the most glaring of which is the anti-climax in the last scene of the four into which the Cantata is divided. The song for Eric ought to be a very popular number, and the Scotch colouring to be found in Uisnar's "Improvisation" is remarkably attractive. It need hardly, we fancy, at this hour be said that the orchestration throughout the work is a prominent feature—if it does not, indeed, err on the side of over-elaboration. The soloists were Miss Fillünger, Madame Emily Squire, Mr. Henry Piercy, and Mr. Andrew Black, and the chorus and band were taken well in hand by Mr. Joseph Bradley.

A couple of performances of Sullivan's "The Prodigal Son" were recently given by the Woodside Church Musical Association, a choir which is fortunate in its Conductor, Mr. J. W. Sharpe. On each occasion he had the excellent aid of Mr. W. J. Clapperton at the organ. At the Glasgow Quartet Concert, on the 16th ult., the feature of the evening was Dvorák's Quintet in A major for pianoforte and strings. It is a distinctly characteristic example of the Slavonic composer's style, and its interpretation by Miss Fanny Davies, Messrs. Sons, Marienhagen, Freund, and Piening was very creditable to the artistic perception of those artists. Beethoven's Trio in B flat (Op. 97) and Bach's D minor Concerto for two violins were also in the programme and met with much acceptance.

A scene which is, happily, without precedent took place at the last Orchestral Concert for the season of the Glasgow Choral Union, on January 30. The plebiscite programme had attracted to St. Andrew's Hall the customary overflowing audience; there was a great deal of hearty applause during the evening, and at the close of the performance a demonstration of a singularly enthusiastic character took place in favour of Mr. August Manns, the Conductor. Eventually he had to say a few words, and it was his references to the orchestra and himself doing their work "under the oppressive burden of a strangely unsympathetic critique" which roused the audience to an unwonted pitch of fervour. Never before, we venture to believe, has such unanimity of sympathy been shown in St. Andrew's Hall, and it is only just and proper that the exhibition of feeling in favour of Mr. Manns should be frankly acknowledged.

The twelfth Concert of the series was given on the 5th ult., when Mr. Edward Lloyd made his first appearance under the auspices of our premier choral society for some years.

On the evening of the 8th ult. Sir Charles Hallé and his Manchester orchestra appeared in St. Andrew's Hall. The Concert was the first of a series of three, the band numbered seventy-nine performers, and the veteran Conductor himself was the solo pianist. He was heard to the satisfaction of everybody in Beethoven's Fourth Concerto, and under his bâton Brahms's Second Symphony in D major was accorded a remarkably good performance. Other pieces in the programme included the Overtures to "Oberon," "Les Deux Journées," and "Der Fliegende Holländer," and Miss Thudichum showed that she has gained much in animation of style since she last sang in Glasgow. The second Concert of the series took place on the 22nd ult. Dvorák's Third Symphony in F (Op. 76) was in the programme, as also Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, wherein Sir Charles once more showed his reverence for every bar of the Salzburg master's engaging text. The third and fourth movements of the Symphony were played with stimulating force. Mr. Willy Hess gave as his violin solos the Adagio from Spohr's Eleventh Concerto and a Tarantella by Wieniawski (both in masterly style), and Madame Schmidt-Köhne sang Beethoven's "Ah! perfido" and Mozart's "Mia speranza adorata" with considerable success.

A private meeting of the guarantors in connection with the Choral and Orchestral Concerts was held on the 22nd ult., to consider the position of the present scheme in relation to the Scottish Orchestra Co., Limited. Prior to the meeting the guarantors had received a copy of the correspondence which has been going on for some time between the Company and the executive Committee of the Concerts. After a pretty lengthy discussion on both sides of the question, it was resolved to at once proceed with the Guarantee Fund, and that arrangements for next season's Concerts should commence so soon as the Fund reaches a minimum amount of £2,000.

MUSIC IN LEEDS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The members of the recently-founded Leeds String Quartet gave their second Concert on the 1st ult., in the Philosophical Hall. The attendance showed a marked improvement upon that at the first Concert in January; and warm appreciation deservedly rewarded the efforts of the four talented artists, who played Beethoven's Quartet in F (Op. 18, No. 1), Kiel's Waltzes, and the Theme with Variations from Schubert's Quartet in D minor. Mr. Benton's Select Choir sang two part-songs with taste and refinement.

The second Leeds Subscription Concert was given on the 3rd ult., in the Coliseum, when Sir Charles Hallé's orchestra occupied the platform and a splendid programme was performed, ranging from Mozart's "Magic Flute" Overture to Liszt's First Hungarian Rhapsody, and including Beethoven's C minor Symphony, Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll," Mendelssohn's "Melusina" Overture, and Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite. Miss Macintyre sang two Wagnerian excerpts and the Vocal Waltz from Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet."

For the ninth Huddersfield Subscription Concert (the 2nd ult.) Mr. and Mrs. Henschel were engaged to give one of their charming Vocal Recitals. Our best thanks are due to these gifted artists for their endeavours to improve the prevalent taste in the matter of vocal chamber music. The tenth Concert (16th ult.) was devoted to orchestral music. Mr. de Jong's band gave a somewhat unequal performance of a very miscellaneous programme. Miss Agnes Janson was the vocalist.

On the 15th ult. the fifth of Mr. J. H. Sykes's Subscription Concerts was given in Halifax. Mr. de Jong's orchestra was successful in an attractive programme, a notable feature in which was a selection from the Concert-giver's new opera "Sylvia."

A capital Concert was given on the 1st ult. at the Albert Hall, Sheffield, in aid of the Jessop Hospital. The Jessop orchestral band, under Mr. F. A. Smith, played Beethoven's First Symphony, the Overture to the "Nozze di Figaro," and the March from "Tannhäuser." The vocalists were Madame Amy Sherwin and Mr. Santley. Miss Lottie Matthewson played violin solos, and organ pieces were contributed by Mr. J. W. Phillips.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The two Concerts given during the past month by the Liverpool Philharmonic Society served to introduce at the one a new artist and at the other a comparatively new work. On the second ult. Miss Olga Neruda joined Sir Charles Hallé as solo pianist, creating a favourable impression, and a fortnight later Braun's Cantata "Sir Olaf" was produced. The work in question is from the pen of a native and erstwhile resident of Liverpool, and was first heard about three years ago. For his book Mr. Braun has laid under contribution the well-known poem by Heine, and in the pages of his score he has manifested a strong grip of that side of art which deals with the romantic and sensational. His second important work, "Sigurd," has been already favourably alluded to in these columns, and it was a fitting act on the part of the premier local Society to hold out the hand of encouragement to a promising young musician.

Among the things worthy of notice in the present summary may be enumerated Bishop's "Jolly Beggars," which was revived late in January at a Burns celebration. For this Mrs. Christian Williams has to be thanked in the first instance, and the whole of the pretty and bright music of the operetta or melodrama proved acceptable. On the penultimate day of the same month Mr. H. S. Melsing gave an excellent Pianoforte Recital at St. George's Hall.

Two neighbouring Cathedral organists, Dr. Roland Rogers, of Bangor, and Dr. J. C. Bridge, of Chester, have been laid up with the prevailing epidemic, and a performance of Cowen's "St. John's Eve," in the Cestrian capital by the local musical society, had to be postponed. At other places in the district choral work is being done, as, for instance, at Warrington under Mr. Crossley, at Southport by Mr. Hudson and Mr. Clarke, at Liscard with Mr. J. Ross, and at Rock Ferry under Mr. Pemberton. A Concert was announced at the last-named place for the 25th ult., with Sullivan's "Prodigal Son" and Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron" in the programme. At Birkenhead a performance of Handel's "Messiah" has been given under Mr. Chisholm, and St. Catherine's Amateur Musical Society has been also in evidence.

Instrumental music has been represented in Liverpool of late by the Wirral Orchestral Society, at the Art Club, conducted by Mr. E. Schiever; and by the last of the Chamber Concerts, with which the name of the Richter leader is associated, at the same place; by a Smoking Concert given through the agency of the Liverpool Orchestral Society and Mr. A. E. Rodewald, at the City Hall; by one of a similar order to the members and friends of the Musical Club by the President of the year, Mr. Argent; and by the final Orchestral Concert of the Sunday Society, on the 21st ult.

At the Naval Exhibition Mr. Dibdin—a nephew of the famous writer of sea songs—has been giving illustrated Lectures, and these have formed an attractive feature of the undertaking. A capital little orchestra has also been retained for the same, the conductor being Mr. F. Wright.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Too late in January to be recorded in my last report, we had a Concert of considerable orchestral and other interest. An injury to his hand prevented M. Sapellnikoff fulfilling his engagement; but, of course, Sir Charles Hallé was quite ready for such an emergency, and gave us another opportunity of listening to Mendelssohn's G minor Concerto and to some of those selections from Chopin which nobody plays with more grace and intelligence. An admirable rendering of Beethoven's B flat Symphony, with its broad and almost sacred Adagio, and the performance of Henschel's Suite, arranged for Concert purposes from the "Hamlet" incidental music, and given under the direction of the composer, could not fail to gratify all the lovers of classical completeness and those who delight in modern freedom and versatility—in short, all the disciples of orchestral music. A certain gloom, perhaps necessarily, pervades the Shakespeare illustrations; and, coupled with a sameness of key and theme, which might have been avoided, produced a feeling of sombre monotony which the Danish March failed to quite disperse. But several of the movements would, if given separately, pleasantly serve to vary a programme in which the surroundings were more cheerful and brisk. At the same Concert (the fourteenth of the series) Miss Thudichum surprised by her vastly increased power and fulness of voice, and quite as much by the greater vigour and variety of style which she had acquired since her previous visit. Madame Sophie Menter's second appearance here was quite as successful as the first, and her playing of Liszt's Concerto in A, and still more her execution of the lighter and more understandable selection in the after-part of the programme, was simply astounding as a display of complete and apparently easy overcoming of all mechanical difficulties.

The performance of "Elijah," on the 11th ult., afforded a fresh evidence of the delight of performers and listeners in the one Oratorio of this century. It will be time enough to talk of the waning popularity of Mendelssohn when the successor to "Elijah" appears. As the triple Concerto of Beethoven was repeated in London with exactly the same performers—Sir Charles and Lady Hallé, with Signor Piatti, as soloists—on the evening following its finished rendering here, the bare mention of its production in Manchester on the 18th ult. will suffice. But, in addition to four "Romantische Stücke" of Dvorák, charmingly played by Lady and Sir Charles Hallé, the programme was enlivened by the delicate vocalisation of Mrs. Henschel.

Saturday evenings continue to be devoted to the less earnest devotees of sweet sounds, who regard music more as an amusement than as an art, and as Mr. de Jong's Concerts are passing through their twenty-first season, they claim precedence. To the fifteenth entertainment, on the 6th ult., an attractive programme drew an immense audience; and a very interesting selection from English operas was given, including the chief excerpts from Sullivan's "Ivanhoe" and Cellier's "Sultan of Mocha." Too much of the latter work was sung; for the experience which secured the success of "Dorothy" had not been gained when the "Sultan" was produced at the Princes' Theatre of this city. Still, a wealth of melody was displayed and an abundance of the raw material which, later, the lamented author was able to turn to better account. Miss Henson and Mr. Ffrangcon Davies received great applause; in the latter case, stimulated by a somewhat too demonstrative demeanour. Miss Alice Walker and Mr. Barrow sang, as they usually do, quietly and well.

Mr. Barrett's entertainments go on, following the old lines, and showing great ingenuity in catering for the taste of his patrons. At Mr. Lane's Wednesday evening meetings there is a growing predominance of the so-called humorous sketches, the fun of which is not often easily discovered. It would be well not to go too far in the music hall direction. Such artistic singing as that of Mr. Kinnell, Miss Ada Lee, Madame Moody, and Miss Alice Walker contrasts rather strongly with "The Four 'Oss Sherrybang."

At the Concert Hall, on the 15th ult., Mr. Borwick justified and increased our interest in his growing reputation as a pianist; while Mr. Willy Hess gave further evidence of the brilliancy of his violin playing.

MUSIC IN NORWICH.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Important changes have recently taken place among the executive of the Musical Festival. Mr. C. R. Gilman, who has so ably filled the office of Honorary Secretary for several years, has felt compelled to resign that position, and the Committee has been fortunate enough to induce Mr. F. Oddin Taylor, a gentleman who has for many years been an ardent supporter of the Triennial gatherings, to take the vacant position, while Mr. Gilman becomes Chairman of the Committee of Management, vice Mr. Hay Gurney, deceased. In consequence of removal to a distant land, the obliging Assistant-Secretary (Mr. S. J. Carman) has also been compelled to sever his connection with the Committee, his place being taken by Mr. Arthur Taylor.

On the 6th ult. Madame Serruys, a lady well known here as a teacher of singing, gave a Vocal Recital in Noverre's Room, which was attended by a large and fashionable audience. Madame Serruys had the assistance of her daughter, Miss Van Breydel, and Miss Marian McKenzie. The latter lady had not been heard in Norwich since the last Festival and was therefore doubly welcome. To add variety to the entertainment, the services of Mr. Arthur Bent were enlisted, and his performance of two movements from Max Bruch's Violin Concerto (Op. 26) was received with great applause. Later he played Holmes's Nocturne in A and Spohr's Scherzo, and, as an encore, the well-known Barcarolle by the same master.

The Norfolk and Norwich Musical Union gave its forty-first Concert on the 11th ult., in St. Andrew's Hall, under the conductorship of Dr. Bunnett. Barnett's well-known Cantata "The Ancient Mariner" was the principal feature in the programme for the third time during the past twenty years. The solo vocalists were Miss Vinnie Beaumont, Mrs. H. Miller, Mr. Sawford Dye, and Mr. F. W. Dalby, the three last-named being residents in the locality. The second part of the programme was of a miscellaneous character, consisting of solos for the principal voices, and Mozart's Overture to "Don Giovanni" for the band.

The eighty-second Concert of our premier instrumental Society, the Philharmonic, came off at Noverre's Room, on Wednesday evening, the 17th ult., in the presence of a large audience. As these ré-unions are the only opportunities which occur in Norwich for hearing Symphonic music they are looked forward to with interest by all interested in the higher branches of the art. On this occasion Mozart's Symphony in E flat and that by Spohr in D minor were chosen, the Larghetto, Scherzo, and Finale only of the latter being played. Both Symphonies went fairly well, although further practice would have improved the last movement of Mozart. Dr. Horace Hill, the Conductor, had composed a "Sonnet" specially for the occasion, for oboe and orchestra, of a very pleasing character. It commences with a graceful melody in E minor for oboe, with accompaniment for strings con sordini, followed by a brief movement in the relative major, wherein prominence is given to the violoncello. The oboe part was capitally rendered by Mr. E. V. Davies, the only London professional on the orchestra. The same gentleman did good service in Handel's Overture to "Giustino," where the oboe has much prominent work. Grieg's two Melodies for strings (Op. 34), an Entr'acte from Gounod's "La Colombe," and Nicolai's Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" were also included in the programme. The vocalists were Miss Kathleen Grant and Mr. E. A. Bracey. The band, which has increased in proficiency as well as in numbers, was led by Mr. F. W. B. Noverre.

An interesting event in connection with the Tonic Sol-fa Jubilee has just taken place in the Church of St. Lawrence in this city. To commemorate the work of Miss Glover, the daughter of a former rector of the parish, who taught a tonic sol-fa system in Norwich from which the present system sprang, a brass memorial tablet has been fixed in St. Lawrence Church, and this was unveiled on Thursday afternoon, the 18th ult., in the presence of several members of the College Council and of the Jubilee Committee, including Mr. J. Spencer Curwen, the President, Professor Sedley Taylor, Mr. Spedding Curwen, Mr. Graham, and several local musical men. A choral service preceded the unveiling, after which the Ven. Archdeacon Perowne (who was a pupil of Miss Glover) delivered an eloquent discourse on the loving labours to which that lady consecrated her life.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

On January 28 the Sacred Harmonic Society performed Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Barnett's "Ancient Mariner." The principals were Mesdames Dotti and Belle Cole, Messrs. Ben Davies and Bantock Pierpoint. Band and chorus were again excellent, and Mr. John Adcock added another success to his honourable career as a Conductor. The Society is in the full tide of success and efficiency and should now essay a bolder policy in selection of works for performance, and might safely increase the number of Concerts in its season.

The Amateur Orchestral Society, numbering sixty-five members, gave its annual Concert on January 30, under the direction of its esteemed Conductor, Mr. Ralph Horner. His training has been most successful, as was shown in the performance of such difficult selections as Grieg's Suite "Peer Gynt," Schubert's Overture "Rosamunde," Ponchielli's "Dance of the Hours," and other hardly less exacting pieces. The Concert was most enjoyable.

Sir George Grove visited Nottingham on the 11th ult., to perform the ceremony of opening a Bazaar promoted by the Philharmonic Choir, with the object of acquiring a fund for establishing a musical library without taxing the members and of providing the Committee with a reserve of capital. Sir George was supported by the Mayor and other civic dignitaries and a number of local professional musicians.

Herr Georg Ellenberger's third Concert took place on the 11th ult. Two notable pieces in the programme were Herr Emil Kreuz's viola solo, Schumann's "Märchenbilder" (Op. 113), and Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in C minor (Op. 60). Miss Cantelo again distinguished herself at the pianoforte.

A new Cantata, "Confucius," by Mr. Ralph Horner, was produced for the first time at the Albert Hall on the 19th ult., under the direction of the Composer, who had engaged an efficient orchestra, and Mdme. Antoinette Sterling, Miss Dorothy Vincent, Mr. Joseph O'Mara, and Mr. Andrew Black as principals. The work proved to be of more than average ability and was warmly received.

Mr. and Mrs. Henschel and Madame Sophie Menter were the artists at the Drawing-Room Concert on the 16th ult. A large audience warmly greeted their efforts, and the Concert was an exceptional success.

At Mr. Allen's Classical Concert, on the 22nd ult., Dr. Joachim met with a warm welcome from a large audience. With Messrs. Burnett, Wiener, and Whitehouse as his colleagues, the Quartets in D major (Mendelssohn) and E minor (Beethoven) were beautifully played; Dr. Joachim received an enthusiastic recall for his performance of Bach's Chaconne. Mr. Whitehouse's violoncello solo, Sonata in A (Boccherini), was also very warmly received.

MUSIC IN BERLIN.

The Valleria Concert Party, who were booked for an extensive tour through Germany (which we regret to learn has since been abandoned), began operations here in the Philharmonie on the 3rd ult., before a fairly large audience, which included the Kaiserin. The troupe consists of Madame Valleria, Miss Dews, Mr. Orlando Harley, Signor Foli, M. Ysaÿe, and Señor Albeniz, with Mr. Wilhelm Ganz as accompanist. Combination concerts of this type are practically unknown here, and it is gratifying to be able to record the success of the experiment, at least so far as a Berlin audience is concerned; even the local critics, who are not prone to receive foreign singers with rapture, admit the vocal ability of the quartet, all of whom are of English-speaking race, and have been trained in English traditions. If the programme was of a not specially interesting nature, at least several of the selections, which to an English audience would seem hackneyed, were new or little known to the Berlin public. A Handelian air is seldom heard in Berlin concert rooms, and Madame Valleria's selection of "Waft her, Angels," had therefore something of novelty to recommend it, in addition to the singer's sound method of rendering. Madame Valleria was heard to even greater advantage in "Connais-tu le pays" (Thomas) and roused the audience to enthusiasm by her intelligent singing of Schumann's "Widmung." Again, Mr. Orlando Harley, in singing the—to London concert-goers—familiar "Lend me your aid," was undoubtedly introducing something new and strange to the large majority of his hearers. Miss Dews had an easy task before her; whatever she might choose to sing, her superb voice was bound to conquer her audience. The genuine contralto is a voice almost unknown in the Vaterland, the German "Altstimme" being but a feeble substitute for the full noble tones which characterise our English school of Oratorio contraltos. Of the instrumentalists, Señor Albeniz's rather free interpretation of Scarlatti failed to commend itself greatly to German taste; M. Ysaÿe, on the other hand, was warmly and deservedly applauded for his playing of an arrangement of Bruch's Scotch Fantasia and of Joachim's Variations.

Madame Etelka Gerster gave a Concert in the Singakademie, on January 31, which all whom either curiosity or reminiscence of the past could move felt bound to attend. It is fourteen years since Etelka Gerster first appeared here, making the fortune of Kroll's Theatre, and moving her audiences to a frenzy of admiration. Since that time the favourite prima donna has experienced varied fortunes, and alarming rumours of the complete loss of her powers were at one time in circulation. On the present occasion the former idol of Berlin deliberately challenged comparisons between the present and the past by her selection of such old battle-horses as "Caro nome" and "Ah! non credea," with "Ah! non giunge." The present scope of the singer's powers may be gathered from the fact that her greatest effect was made in the lovely Andante cantabile in which Amina laments her faded flowers. Whatever Etelka Gerster may have lost from the popular prima donna standpoint, she has gained immeasurably in the direction of truthful musical expression.

One of the great events of the month has been the Concert given by Rubinstein, with the assistance of the Philharmonic Orchestra, on the 12th ult. The programme consisted exclusively of the great pianist's own compositions, and the performance created the usual phenomenal enthusiasm. The proceeds of the Concert, with the public rehearsal, amounted to over £800, the whole of which will be devoted to various charitable and artistic institutions.

Mdlle. Posnanska, the young pianist of whom I had occasion to speak so favourably last October, appeared again at the Philharmonic Concert of the 8th ult., when she played Rubinstein's D minor Concerto and Liszt's Polonaise in E, and deepened the extraordinary impression she had already made. What Rubinstein thinks of her talent is shown by the significant fact that the master undertook to assist at the Concert given by his pupil in the Singakademie on the 20th ult.

MUSIC IN NEW YORK.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The rivalry between the New York Philharmonic and Symphony Societies in their search for novelties has resulted in the performance of the same composition on successive Saturday evenings. On the 6th ult. at the Symphony Society Bruch's Concerto (No. 3) for violin was played by Miss Geraldine Morgan, daughter of the late John P. Morgan, and a week later Madame Camilla Urso played the same Concerto at the Philharmonic Society's Concert. Choruses of female voices seem to have somewhat suddenly acquired considerable popularity. The Rubinstein Club, of New York, recently performed Bendl's "The Watersprite's Revenge"; and the same charming work was also given by the Ladies' Choral Club, of Newark, N.J. This Society is not only confined exclusively to ladies, but the Conductor is also of the same sex, Miss Ada B. Douglass, who has shown by her success in training and leading the Society that she possesses the requisite gifts for such works. This Society has now in rehearsal Bendall's "The Lady of Shalott," which will be sung at its Recital in April, and a temporary chorus is studying Smart's "King René's Daughter" for performance in the same city for a local charity.

At Chickering Hall, on January 30, the Mozart Club gave its first Concert. This is an organisation of wind instruments exclusively; comprising flute, clarinet, bassoon, and horn. The programme included Beethoven's Quintet (Op. 16), Scherzo from Onslow's Quintet for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and horn, an Octet by Gouvay, and songs by Ambroise Thomas, Massenet, and Van der Stucken.

Sullivan's "Golden Legend" was sung by the Choral Union of Hartford, Conn., in that city on the 5th ult., under the direction of Mr. Richard P. Paine. The performance was highly successful, the local critics being enthusiastic in their praise. The orchestra was the Germania, of Boston.

In Boston the season is particularly brilliant. Mr. Carlyle Petersilea is giving a series of Tuesday afternoon Recitals and analyses. Mr. William Heinrich is giving a cyclus of historical Concerts in Steinerts Hall. At the Fourteenth Symphony Concert Mr. G. W. Chadwick's Pastoral Prelude was produced for the first time. Mr. Carl Baermann is in the midst of a series of Pianoforte Concerts, in which he has the assistance of other soloists, including Messrs. C. M. Loeffler, O. Novacek, and L. Shultz, besides many miscellaneous Recitals and Concerts. The venerable Handel and Haydn Society will be heard on Good Friday night in Bach's "Passion" according to St. Matthew, and on Easter Sunday in "St. Paul."

A curious programme was performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Chickering Hall on the evening of the 9th ult. It was composed of Handel's Concerto for strings and two wind choirs in F, Berlioz's Symphony "Harold in Italy," the Prelude to "Lohengrin," and some selections from "Siegfried" and "Götterdämmerung."

Mr. Harold Bauer, Miss Ethel Bauer, and Mr. Herbert Walenn held the final Concert of their series at the Hampstead Conservatoire on Saturday evening, the 13th ult., when a large assemblage warmly complimented the executants on their finished performance of some choice chamber compositions. The more important were Brahms's Quartet for strings (Op. 51, No. 2) in A minor and Schumann's Quintet for pianoforte and strings (Op. 44) in E flat, in the former of which the able violinist and violoncellist were assisted by Miss Winifred Bauer and Mr. Carl Engel, whilst in the latter the pianist, Miss Ethel Bauer, availed herself of a golden opportunity. As regards solos the same lady gained unanimous approval for her rendering of Schumann's "In der Nacht" and Rubinstein's "Staccato Study" (as an encore); Mr. Harold Bauer played with much brilliancy Sarasate's "Zigeunerweisen"; and Mr. Herbert Walenn gave with good effect Servais's Fantaisie "Souvenir de Spa." The instrumental character of the programme was pleasantly varied by Miss Daisy Defries, who sang several times during the evening.

An extremely interesting Tennyson Recital was given by Miss Edith and Miss Dora Tulloch, at the Princes' Hall, on Wednesday, the 17th ult. This is not the place to dwell on the striking ability displayed by the last-named young lady, who only numbers twelve summers; yet we may compliment her on the success she achieved in her selections from "The Idylls of the King" and other works by the Poet Laureate, and express the hope that with further study and perseverance she may attain a high position as an elocutionist and possibly as an actress. Music played an important part in the performance, Miss Edith Tulloch, a pleasant soprano, contributing songs by Hubert Parry, Celli, Clay, and Mackenzie, being perhaps most successful in the last-named composer's charming "What does little Birdie say?" Mr. William Shakespeare contributed lyrics by Sullivan and Cusins, materially adding to the success of the entertainment.

Mozart's "Requiem" and Mendelssohn's "Athalie" were performed at Union Chapel, Islington, on the 3rd ult., in aid of Dr. Barnardo's Homes. The choruses were rendered with much spirit by the members of the Psalmody Class, who had been carefully trained by Mr. Robert Williamson, the Hon. Choirmaster. There was no orchestra, but the accompaniments were played on the beautiful organ of the Chapel by Mr. Fountain Meen, whose name is sufficient guarantee that they were rendered in a most masterly manner. Miss Florence Monk sang the principal soprano music with much taste and refinement, the other solo music being efficiently rendered by Misses Maggie and Lizzie Jones, Mr. G. Micklewood, and Mr. W. Bradford. Miss Lizzie Jones deserves special mention for her excellent enunciation. The verses in "Athalie" were declaimed by Mr. Charles Fry with his customary dramatic power.

The North-West London Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Mr. Bernhard M. Carrodus, gave an excellent Concert at Stanley Hall, Junction Road, on the 3rd ult. The orchestra, consisting of sixty performers, was thoroughly efficient in all respects, the rendering of Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony deserving and receiving special recognition, and the Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" being encored. In addition to the songs contributed by Miss Kate Hancock, and solos by Mr. Herbert F. Sharpe (pianoforte) and Mr. Henri Colonieu (flute) there was a special attraction in the presence of Mr. J. T. Carrodus, who gave Bach's Chaconne and De Bériot's Tremolo in his own irreproachable style. Mr. B. M. Carrodus should be congratulated on the success of his efforts to establish an orchestral society in this district.

In aid of the funds of the Blind Institution, High Road, Clapton, an entertainment by inmates styling themselves the East London Juvenile Blind Choir, took place at the Eyre Arms Assembly Rooms, St. John's Wood, on Thursday, the 11th ult. By the efficiency with which they went through musical sketches in gipsy character, recitations, and drills with dumb bells and long wands, with Miss E. V. Foakes (the school-mistress) as Conductor, these young people yielded no small measure of gratification to their audience. Miss M. Ansell (assistant teacher), who played the whole of the accompaniments, began the programme with a telling rendering of a pianoforte selection from "The Bohemian Girl." The hall was well filled, so that there is reason to hope that the excellent Institution founded by Miss S. Rye will substantially benefit by the proceedings.

On Monday, the 15th ult., a very successful entertainment was given at the Bow and Bromley Institute, by Mr. and Mrs. Wallis, of Leeds. The inclemency of the weather prevented the hall from assuming its usual well-filled appearance, but those who had ventured through the snow testified by frequent applause their enjoyment of the fare provided. The programme consisted of songs, recitations, duets, and there were also two dramatic scenes in costume—the first from the "The School for Scandal" and the second from "The Hunchback," in which Mrs. Wallis's charm of manner and dramatic ability were particularly apparent. Mr. Lawrence Rainbow contributed some pianoforte solos during the evening.

Herr Jan Mulder, an admirable violoncellist, gave a Concert on the 10th ult. at the residence of Mrs. George Jackson, when the programme was of an interesting character. There is always a large amount of attraction afforded by the playing of Herr Mulder, but its intrinsic value was augmented on this occasion by the importance of the pieces brought forward by him. Among these was a Sonata for violoncello and pianoforte, by the Rev. C. J. Ridsdale, which proved a work of thoughtful conception, worked out in a thoroughly musician-like style. The composer, who was at the pianoforte, also played some solos written by himself, and further assistance was given by Mr. van der Bruyn (violinist), Mdlle. Lorenzi and Mr. Henry Ward (vocalists).

There are many who would confine the flute to the orchestra, but if any such were present at the Invitation Concert, given by the Royal Academy of Music on the 16th ult., when Mr. Frederic Griffiths played a number of flute solos, their opinions must have been at least considerably modified. Mr. Griffiths's mastery of his instrument, intelligent phrasing, and remarkable refinement was specially shown in two movements from a Concerto in E flat, by F. Langer, and in two pleasing and effective pieces, a Romance and Saltarello by Mr. Edward German, the performances of which elicited hearty applause from a critical audience. The other performers were Miss Hannah Jones, Mr. William Nicholl, and Mr. Septimus Webbe, whose artistic performances were fully appreciated.

Mr. Edgar Haddock, assisted by Madame de Pachmann, gave the first of two Beethoven Recitals at Steinway Hall on the 23rd ult. The scheme, which was not without its dangers, comprised the six Sonatas, Op. 12 (Nos. 1, 2, and 3), 23, 24, and 30 (No. 1), for pianoforte and violin. These beautiful works were rendered with great unanimity of expression, and the refinement of Madame de Pachmann's style and touch was much appreciated. As such a programme appeals to the cultured few rather than to the musical public generally, it is matter for rejoicing that the audience was not only attentive and enthusiastic, but also fairly numerous. Perhaps the greatest impression was produced by the lovely Sonata (Op. 12, No. 3).

The fourth Clapham Philharmonic Concert of the present series was given at the Assembly Rooms on the 11th ult., when a crowded and appreciative audience listened to a Pianoforte Recital by Mr. T. A. Matthay. The programme included works by Brahms, Schumann, Henselt, Beethoven (the "Moonlight" Sonata), Raff, Grieg, and Nicodé, but the greatest applause was earned by the performance of Chopin's Scherzo in B minor and Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody, in which the special powers of the performer were aptly shown. Mr. Walter Mackway greatly pleased by his delivery of Beethoven's "Adelaide," Handel's "Where'er you walk," Mozart's "The Violet," and a song by Mr. Matthay.

A successful performance of Carter's Sacred Cantata "Placida" was given at the Willoughby Road Wesleyan Chapel, Hornsey, on the 11th ult., by the choir and friends. The solos were sung by Madame Barter (soprano), Mrs. Cross (contralto), Mr. H. Crook (tenor), Mr. W. Young (tenor), Mr. Jarrett and Mr. Andrews (basses), who all did their work well, singing with good execution and taste. With a trifling exception the choruses were very effectively given, and betokened much hard work at rehearsals. Thoroughly sympathetic and efficient accompanists were found in Mrs. Jarrett and Mr. R. Wolfenden, who played the pianoforte and American organ respectively. Mr. J. R. Kilner, the Chapel Organist, conducted.

The fortieth Private Musical Evening of the South London Musical Club took place at the Gresham Hall, Brixton, on the 9th ult. The programme included "The Little Baltung," a Cantata for men's voices by Alice Mary Smith, in which Mr. W. J. Ives gave an admirable rendering of the part of the Old Balt; an "Ode to the Sons of Art" (Mendelssohn), and "The Brooch of Lorn," from the "Lord of the Isles" (Gadsby), all with orchestral accompaniment. A humorous piece, entitled "The Goslings," composed for the Club by Professor Bridge, and several glees and part-songs were also sung. Mr. Brewster played on the organ the wind parts of the Cantatas arranged for the occasion by Mr. Charles Stevens, who conducted with his usual ability.

The series of Concerts in aid of the fund of the Marylebone Free Library, the first of which was given at St. George's Hall on the 19th ult., only call for passing mention in order that attention may be drawn to the commendable object for which they are given. The Concerts, of which four more are to follow, are carried out by performers who are more or less well known, and whose efforts are apparently thoroughly appreciated by the audience. At the first Concert Miss Hilda Wilson, Miss Agnes Wilson, Mr. W. Nicholl, Mr. Templer Saxe, Mdlle. Jeanne Douste (pianoforte), and M. Emile Sauret (violin) took part. The remaining Concerts are to be given on Saturdays, the 5th, 12th, 19th, and 26th inst.

Among the Organ Recitals given at the Bow and Bromley Institute on Saturday evenings, that by Mr. W. G. Wood, on the 13th ult., deserves special mention; Mr. Wood's rendering of Best's Air with Variations and his own Concert-Overture in C minor being particularly successful and receiving the hearty applause of a crowded audience. Part-songs and choruses were contributed by the Stock Exchange Male Voice Choir, under Mr. G. Kitchen, and violin solos by Madame Anna Lang. Mr. Fountain Meen accompanied.

There was quite an array of R.A.M. students at the Bow and Bromley Institute on January 30, the occasion being a Pianoforte Recital by four members of Mr. Tobias A. Matthay's class: Miss Lilias Pringle, Miss Christine Taylor, Miss Edith Purvis, and Miss Lily West. A pianoforte quartet by Moscheles, a duo by Raff, and solos by Beethoven, Chopin, Grieg, Nicodé, and Bach-Tausig formed the programme, and songs were given by Miss Edith Hands and Mr. Barlow. There were numerous recalls and encores during the evening. Explanatory notes by Mr. T. A. Matthay, most skilfully adapted to the needs of the ordinary hearer, were inserted in the programme.

The North-East London Choral Society, Morley Hall, gave, as the second Concert, tenth season, Ebenezer Prout's Dramatic Cantata "The Red Cross Knight." The choruses were exceedingly well rendered, and the soloists, Madame Clara West, Miss Mary Chamberlain, Mr. J. H. Mullerhausen, Mr. Frank Broadbent, and Mr. Morgan Williamson, were each well adapted to their respective parts. Mr. Harlow gave efficient help in the tournament scene, &c., with the cornet; Messrs. Fountain Meen and Louis B. Prout were the accompanists (pianoforte and harmonium), and Mr. John E. West conducted.

The second Concert of the season given by the Woodside Park Musical Society took place at the Woodside Hall, North Finchley, on the 18th ult., the works chosen for the occasion being J. F. Barnett's Cantata "Paradise and the Peri," and Bennett's "May Queen." The solos were effectively rendered by Miss Florence Monk, Miss Lizzie Jones, Mr. Edwin Houghton, and Mr. Robert Grice. The accompaniments were played by Miss Preston (pianoforte), Mr. C. E. Jolley (harmonium), and a professional string quintet led by Mr. H. Lewis. Mr. Alfred J. Dye as usual conducted.

At the City of London College Mr. T. E. Gatehouse gave a very excellent Violin Recital on the 18th ult. Mr. Gatehouse displayed great executive ability and power of expression. He received many recalls, but for the "Saltarella" the audience would accept nothing less than an encore, when the unaccompanied movement from "Souvenir de Haydn" was given with great effect. Miss Mary Hay gave some charming songs, obtaining more than one encore. Mrs. Fitzhenry, whom we were pleased to see on the platform again after a long absence, and Mr. Alfred Izard were at the pianoforte.

Mr. Ferdinand Dunkley gave an interesting Concert, on the 8th ult., at St. Aubyn's Hall, Upper Norwood. He was heard in Schumann's "Faschingsschwank," in pieces by Chopin and Schubert, and, with Mr. P. V. Sharman, in Grieg's Sonata in F for violin and pianoforte. In these, as well as in several pleasing songs of his composition—effectively sung by Miss Maggie Purvis and Mr. W. E. Buchanan—Mr. Dunkley gave proof of artistic gifts and excellent training. Handel's Sonata in A was also admirably played by Mr. Sharman.

Amateurs will be glad to note that Mr. G. A. Clinton announces a series of three Wind Chamber Concerts, at Steinway Hall, on the 8th inst., April 6, and May 3 respectively. The list of performers engaged includes the most renowned players of their respective instruments, who, moreover, have had the advantage of playing together for many years; and the works promised present a most interesting and admirable selection. Mrs. Hutchinson, Madame Clara Samuell, and Mr. Braxton Smith have also been engaged.

On the 28th ult. the Arcadian Musical Society gave Van Bree's Cantata "St. Cecilia's Day," in the Iffley Hall, Hammersmith. The choruses, under the direction of Mr. Berthold Tours, jun., went excellently, and the solo work was safe in the hands of Miss Pendrell Smith. Miss Minnie Hailstone was an efficient accompanist. In the miscellaneous part of the programme Miss Chester, Messrs. Fellowes Prynne, A. J. Silver, A. Webster, and Henry Pope were the performers.

At the meeting in Grand Lodge, called on January 27 to move a resolution of sympathy with the Royal Family on the death of the Duke of Clarence and Avondale (Lord Mount-Edgcumbe in the chair), Mr. Edward Cutler, the Grand Organist, played the following pieces:—Dead March in "Saul" (Handel), Prayer in D major and Offertory in G minor (Lefèbure-Wély), Funeral March from the Sonata in A flat (Beethoven), and "Siegfried's Tod" from "Götterdämmerung" (Wagner).

The Kyrle Choir, under the direction of Mr. F. A. W. Docker, gave a performance of "Elijah" on Wednesday, the 3rd ult., at St. Andrew's, Stockwell, the soloists being Miss Mary Bliss, Miss Robinson, Mr. Vivian Bennett, and Mr. C. Beaumont Barr. Dr. Turpin presided at the organ with his usual skill. Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" was given on the 16th ult., at St. Botolph's, Aldgate. The soloists were Miss Jessie Tillett, Mrs. G. Lloyd Edwardes, Mr. Ager Grover, and Mr. C. Beaumont Barr.

Mendelssohn's "Athalie" filled the first part of the Clapton Choral Society's Concert on the 8th ult., Miss Gertrude Urling, Miss Ada Boys, and Miss Mary Chamberlain being the soloists. The second part was of a miscellaneous character, the conspicuous numbers being Miss Chamberlain's song "Oh, flower so fondly cherished" (Marras), and those numbers in which the orchestra and chorus co-operated. Mr. Jeffreys, the Conductor, kept his forces well in hand throughout.

Mr. Dannreuther and Professor Niecks have been appointed examiners for the Liszt Scholarship, which will be competed for at the Royal Academy of Music on April 8 next. So rich à prize—seeing that it includes three years' free education at the Royal Academy of Music and a sum of £75 per annum to enable the holder to prosecute his or her studies abroad during two years—ought to attract a large number of competitors.

Sterndale Bennett's "The Woman of Samaria" was given on Sunday afternoon, the 21st ult., at St. John's, Waterloo Road, and attracted a very large congregation. The solos were admirably rendered by Master Willoughby, Miss M. Tunnicliffe, Messrs. J. Gostick and Frederick Winton; and the Church choir, augmented to sixty voices, sang the choruses. Mr. S. S. Martyn conducted, Mr. Henry J. B. Dart presiding at the organ as usual.

It is worthy of note that the hymn "Sleep on, beloved," sung on the occasion of the funeral of Mr. Spurgeon, was written by Miss Sarah Doudney, who based it on the practice of the early Christians of singing "good-night" in preference to "farewell" on the death of their friends. The hymn, which is now a favourite at many memorial services, has, during the past few days, been erroneously attributed to several poets.

The annual Meeting of the Governors of the Benevolent Fund of the late Sacred Harmonic Society was held on Tuesday evening, the 23rd ult., in the Library of the Society of Arts, John Street, Adelphi; Mr. E. M. Mannering, the President, in the chair. The report stated that the total expenditure for the year 1891 was £156 15s. 6d., of which sum £151 5s. was expended in relief by monthly pensions to some, and special donations to others.

The sacred Cantata, entitled "The Epiphany," by Dr. H. J. Edwards, of Barnstaple, was rendered in the fine new Parish Church at Hornsey on January 29. The choir, which numbers over fifty voices, sang very creditably, and the organ accompaniments were supplied by Mr. H. J. Gresham. The soprano solos were excellently sung by Master Porter. Mr. H. J. Baker conducted.

On the 2nd ult. Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion" was given at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, Tottenham, with Master Porter and Messrs. Grover, Parkin, and Bayley as soloists; Mr. Goebel, leader; and Mr. J. H. Judd, Organist. The choir gave a very satisfactory rendering of the work, under the direction of the Organist and Choirmaster of the Church, Mr. C. W. Offord.

The second of two Lectures on Richard Wagner's "The Art-work of the Future" will be given by Mr. W. Ashton Ellis, at Trinity College, Mandeville Place, on the 30th inst., at 8 p.m. The first Lecture was given on the 24th ult., too late for notice in our present issue. The Lectures are given on behalf of the Wagner Society.

The Wandsworth Choral and Orchestral Society, started in January this year, bids fair to distinguish itself as a local musical institution. Nearly 150 members have already been enrolled, the number comprising a large section of the organists and choirtrainers of the district. Mr. G. A. Higgs is the Conductor.

REVIEWS.

Gio. Paolo Maggini: His Life and Work. Compiled and edited from material collected and contributed by William Ebsworth Hill, and his sons William, Arthur, and Alfred Hill, by Margaret L. Huggins.

[W. E. Hill and Sons; Novello, Ewer and Co.]

The series of interesting publications undertaken by Messrs. Hill with the view of throwing light upon the history of the violin and its makers, has reached its third number in the valuable monograph on Maggini now under consideration, which has been edited with such admirable tact and discretion by Mrs. Huggins. We use the term "valuable" advisedly, for the result of the researches initiated and directed by Messrs. Hill at Brescia and elsewhere has been to put before the public a considerable mass of authentic documentary evidence on several points which had hitherto remained in obscurity. To take a few of these, first we may begin by mentioning that the examination of the Brescian archives has placed beyond a doubt what previously rested on circumstantial evidence—the relationship of Maggini to Gaspara da Salò. Direct proof is now forthcoming in the shape of a legal document dated 1602, and signed by both parties, in which Maggini states himself to be the apprentice (garzone) of Signor Gaspero. Another question satisfactorily cleared up is the date of his death. It was supposed by some that he lived to be an old man, whereas a schedule presented by his son in the year 1632 alludes to him as already deceased. Thirdly, that Pietro Santo Maggini, also a maker of violins, and hitherto generally believed to have been his son, is conclusively proved by the registers of the church of S. Agatha not to have occupied this relationship.

The account of Maggini's life and work is appropriately prefaced by a brief historical sketch of Brescia. It was a town rich in historical associations. Pausanias mentions, curiously enough, that one of the kings of the Ligures—the first people known as inhabiting this "earthly paradise" (as an Italian writer calls it)—was famed for his skill in music. In the Middle Ages its history was chequered by intestine feud and foreign invasion, but it was always a home of the arts and sciences, and many famous Italians claimed it as their birthplace. As early as the middle of the fifteenth century it was celebrated for its musical instrument makers, a table of whom is given on page 27.

The particular branch of the Maggini family to which Gio. Paolo belonged came from Botticino, and they appear to have been people of some substance, for the father of the subject of this monograph, on settling in Brescia, followed no occupation. The facts of Gio. Paolo Maggini's life are sparse, but fairly clear. He was still an apprentice of Gasparo da Salò at the age of twenty-one. He married in 1615, and settled in a house now occupied by a saddler named Zanetti, where he plied his trade as a "Maëstro di violini," assisted by a certain Jacobo de Lafranchini. Income tax returns of the years 1617 and 1626 give information as to the success which attended his efforts, and in 1632, as stated above, he was already dead.

The great services rendered by Maggini in the development of violin making are treated at considerable length in these pages. Neither Gasparo da Salò nor Maggini can be considered as the inventor of the violin, though no specimens of that instrument earlier than those of Gasparo's are known. But it is contended by the authors of this treatise, with a great show of probability, that he did more than anyone else of his time for the differentiation of the violin from the viol and for the creation of the model which in its essentials is that of to-day. Although he left no pupils and created no school, he gave rise to an extraordinary amount of copying, legitimate and the reverse. Both Andrea Guarnieri and Antonio Stradivari, in the dimensions of their violas, closely followed Maggini's model; while in the case of violins, comparative tables of measurement furnish very strong evidence for the belief that the two greatest makers, Stradivari and Giuseppe Guarnieri, were largely indebted to their Brescian forerunner. This opens up the "Long Strad" question, on which there is a difference of opinion. The Messrs. Hill are firm believers in the reality of that type, as proved by expert measurement, and they have no hesitation in pronouncing their firm conviction, based on comparative tables of the dimensions of pre-1690 Stradivaris, of "Long Strads," and of Magginis (given in the Appendix of this volume), that Stradivari's "Long Strads" were inspired by Maggini. But his services to the art of violin construction do not end here. The Dumas-Maggini set afford tangible proof of the remarkable forethought exhibited by him in the construction of violas and violoncellos as well. His instincts were sounder than those of Amati and Stradivari as regards the placing of the sound-holes and outside proportions. In fine, his contributions to the development of violins, violas, and violoncellos are summarized as follows: 1, Initiated the model of the modern violin; 2. Among the first to use corner-blocks and linings as we know them; 3. Among the first to use the straight way of the grain for belly wood; 4. Initiated increased system and accuracy in thicknesses; 5. Initiated the modern viola; 6. Initiated the modern violoncello. It remains to be added that the volume is beautifully illustrated with three coloured plates, drawn by Mr. Alfred Slocombe, of the Dumas-Maggini violin; admirable cuts of his devices, photogravures of violin heads and of his house in Brescia, and a reproduction of a print representing Brescia in the seventeenth century. It is interesting to learn that sufficient material has been collected by Messrs. Hill for a further volume on the other makers of the Brescian school.

Unison Chants for the Psalter. Edited by the Rev. Canon Sir F. A. G. Ouseley and Edwin George Monk. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

Among the several vast improvements which have been made generally in the musical rendering of the English Church Service, within living memory, perhaps the most conspicuous is the change in the mode of delivering the Psalms. The wretched alternation of parson and clerk, or "duet service" as it used to be called, is virtually a thing of the past, and chanting, either Anglican or Gregorian, is employed wherever practicable. But there must ever be many places in which the musical resources do not admit of full harmony, and, even where they do, a good bold unison at times is very effective, if only by way of contrast, and this collection of over three hundred single chants cannot fail to be extensively serviceable. The collection was originally commenced under the joint-editorship of Sir Frederick Ouseley and Dr. Monk, but, owing to the decease of the former, the chief part of the work has been carried out by Dr. Monk who has laboured so long and zealously in the cause of ecclesiastical music. Two editions are before us, the larger with the harmonies in full for the use of the organist, and the smaller with the melodies only for the choir and congregation. The organ edition gives, in many cases, two or more variations in harmony to each chant, and suggests the different verses of the Psalms and Canticles in which they should be employed. In their interesting preface the editors state that they "still maintain their old convictions as to the superiority of Single Anglican Chants over all other forms." As to this, there may be difference of opinion; but there can be none as to the argument that correct unison is better than bad harmony. What choirmaster who has to do with voluntary singers whose attendance is irregular has not had his soul vexed by the spectacle confronting him sometimes of, say, a dozen trebles, two altos, no tenor, and four basses? It is to such, chiefly, that we heartily commend this collection.

FOREIGN NOTES.

The birth centenary of Rossini was to be celebrated on the 29th ult. at the Paris Opéra by the performance of "Guillaume Tell." The work has been most carefully remounted and rehearsed with an excellent cast, even the minor parts being represented by first-rate artists. Rossini's chef d'œuvre was first produced at the Institution in question on August 3, 1829, the principal artists taking part in the memorable representation being Adolphe Nourrit (Arnold), Dabadie (Tell), Madame Damoreau-Cinti (Mathilde), and Mdlle. Mori (Hedwig). The Tyrolienne, danced on that occasion by M. Paul, Mesdames Taglioni and Montessu, was likewise to be restored in this commemorative performance.

The revival of M. Lalo's opera "Le Roi d'Ys" was announced to take place at the Paris Opéra Comique on the 22nd ult., the work having been in preparation at that Institution for some time past.

The Paris Eden Theatre has been purchased by a syndicate, and after having been entirely rebuilt is to be opened as a new Théâtre Lyrique, when it is hoped some of the glories of its predecessor of that name may be revived. M. Detroyat, a well-known Paris journalist, is at the head of the undertaking.

Another successful pantomimic piece, "La Statue du Commandeur," by MM. Eudel and Mangin, was brought out on January 31, at the Paris Théâtre d'Application. The music is from the pen of M. David, the piece being a witty travesty of Molière's "Don Juan." It was excellently interpreted by M. Clerget, M. Chameroy, and Mesdames Feriel and Litini.

M. Reyer's opera "Salammbo," first produced some time since at the Brussels Théâtre de la Monnaie, is in course of active preparation at the Paris Grand Opéra, the composer having made some important alterations in the score of the work. There are also being mounted at the institution in question the ballet "Sylvia," with the graceful music of the late Léo Delibes, as well as a new ballet, "Maladetta," by MM. Gailhard and Paul Vidal.

A highly successful Concert was given, on the 13th ult., by the Belgian Musical Artists' Society, at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, the programme consisting entirely of compositions by Mdlle. Augusta Holmès. The Conductor was M. Barwolf, and the gifted lady composer, who was present, received a perfect ovation on the part of an enthusiastic audience.

Auber's "La Muette de Portici," which has recently been most successfully revived in several Italian towns, has just been received with remarkable enthusiasm also at the National Hungarian Theatre of Budapest, with Madame Markus as the Fenella, and the tenor Runcio as Masaniello. The opera was first produced at the Paris Opéra in 1828, and has therefore stood the test of time well, so far.

Wagner's "Die Meistersinger" is to be brought out at the Paris Grand Opéra next season, with M. Lasalle as Hans Sachs, M. Van Dyck as Walther, Madame Cara as Eva, and M. Renaud as Beckmesser.

Liszt's "Prometheus" was announced to be performed on the 22nd ult., by the Berlin Philharmonic Choir, under the direction of Herr Siegfried Ochs. The interesting work was last produced here in 1864, under Von Bülow's direction.

The Heckmann Quartet has found a new leader in Herr Carl Halir, the eminent Weimar violinist.

In the course of this year's Bayreuth Festival performances, from July 21 to August 21 inclusive, there will be eight representations of "Parsifal," and four each of "Tannhäuser," "Tristan und Isolde," and "Die Meistersinger." Among the artists of the Berlin Opera, Mesdames Sucher, Staudigl, and Herzog have been again engaged by Frau Cosima Wagner.

An excellent performance of Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" is reported from Weimar, where the difficult and exacting work was recently produced for the first time by members of the personnel of the Hof-Theater only. Madame Naumann-Gungl and Herr Teller sang the titular parts, and Herr Richard Strauss conducted.

Frau Ingeborg von Bronsart's opera, "Hiarne," has met with an enthusiastic reception on its first performance last month at the Royal Opera at Hanover.

The performances in connection with this year's Music-Festival of the Lower Rhine, at Cologne, are to include the following works—viz., on the first day: Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture, Mendelssohn's 114th Psalm, Brahms's "Triumphlied," excerpts from the "Götterdämmerung," Schumann's D minor Symphony, and Beethoven's Ninth; on the second day: Cherubini's "Anacreon" Overture, Verdi's Requiem, and Berlioz's "Roméo et Juliette" Symphony. On the third day there will be, as usual, a miscellaneous programme. Dr. Wüllner will be the Conductor.

Albert Niemann, the veteran Wagner-tenor, appeared once more, at a Berlin Wagner Concert last month, in the part of Siegmund, in "Die Walküre," with Frau Sucher as the Sieglinde. Niemann's interpretation of Siegmund has never been equalled by any of his successors; and although unaided, in the present instance, by dramatic action and stage accessories, his performance aroused the most profound enthusiasm.

The valuable music library of the late King Charles of Wurtemburg has been bequeathed by the deceased monarch to the Conservatorium of Stuttgart.

A Musical Festival is to be held by the German male choirs of Bohemia from August 13 to 15 next, at Teplitz.

The directors of the Berlin Krollsche Theater have made arrangements for the performance of opera at their establishment throughout the year, instead of during the summer season only as hitherto. Thus the German capital will possess henceforth two permanent operatic institutions.

A bust of Richard Wagner, modelled by the well-known sculptor, Herr Kietz, was unveiled on the anniversary of the master's death, last month, at the Dresden Hof-Theater.

An extraordinary success of Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde," with Fräulein Malten, of Dresden, and Herr Max Alvary, of Hamburg, is reported last month from Königsberg. The performance, under the direction of Herr Göllerich, is, moreover, described as having been an excellent one generally.

The Committee of the Salzburg Mozart Society are about to take active steps with the view to converting the Society into an International one.

At the German Theatre of Prague a new "musical comedy" in three acts, entitled "Ivan Galeano," was recently produced for the first time, and exceedingly well received. The composer is Herr J. Stern, and the libretto, founded upon a Spanish subject, is from the pen of Herr Singer.

At one of the Academic Concerts at Leipzig last month an interesting feature was introduced by the revival of C. M. von Weber's C major Symphony, written by the composer when twenty-one years old, and to some extent foreshadowing, in the treatment of the horns and the tremolo of the strings, the Overture to "Der Freischütz."

Wagner's "Die Meistersinger" and "Rienzi" are being re-mounted at the Berlin Opera, where the performance of the complete cycle of the Bayreuth Master's operas is shortly contemplated. The revival here, last month, of Philipp Rüfer's opera, "Merlin," met with the same qualified success as on the occasion of the first production of the work some five years ago, owing to the fatal defects of the libretto.

Gounod's "Roméo et Juliette," one of the veteran French master's finest operatic works, met with such a noisy and determined opposition on the part of a section of the audience upon its performance last month at Mantua that the police had to be called in and the theatre had to be cleared.

It is reported from Milan that Signor Sonzogno, the eminent music publisher, has received no less than sixty-one one-act operatic scores in response to the fresh competition recently invited by him. Fifty-six of this number have been admitted by the jury of experts, whose decision is to be made known some time during next month.

The St. Cecilia Academy, of Rome, has appointed to an honorary membership Dean Müller, of Amoeneburg (Prussia), the gifted composer of a highly popular "Weihnachts Oratorium" and other sacred works. The reverend gentleman has just completed an important new work on "The Passion of our Lord."

The Madrid Heraldo makes the somewhat startling proposal of celebrating the forthcoming centenary of the discovery of America with a performance, in the Spanish capital, by the Angelo Neumann Company, of Wagner's "Der Ring des Nibelungen." We presume that the selection of the work in question is chiefly owing to the fact of its being the "biggest thing" on the lyrical stage our contemporary could think of.

At the Avenida Theatre, of Lisbon, a new operetta, "Roupa de Francezes," by the popular Portuguese composer, Senhor Freitas Gazul, was produced last month; while another work of a similar type, by Senhor Cyriaco de Cardoso, is about to be brought out at the same theatre.

The first performance of a new opera, "Raffaello," by the Maëstro Maffezzoli, the director of the Australian Italian Opera Company, is shortly to take place at Sidney, some portions of the work having already been successfully produced at Melbourne.

On the recent second anniversary of the death of the celebrated tenor, Gayarré, a bronze bust of the deceased artist was unveiled in the foyer of the Royal Opera House, of Madrid, there being also a special operatic performance to commemorate the occasion.

A new opera, entitled "Hesen" (The Witch), by the Danish composer, M. August Enne, has just been brought out, for the first time, at the Royal Theatre of Copenhagen, where it met with great success. The libretto of the work is founded upon Arthur Fitzger's drama of the same title.

The first performance of a posthumous opera, "Winkelried," by M. Louis Lacombe, was announced to take place last month at the Grand Theatre, of Geneva.

The first performance of MM. Roddaz and Van Dyck's new ballet "Carillon," to which M. Massenet has written the music, was announced to take place at the Imperial Opera of Vienna on the 21st ult.

To the ever-increasing number of prospective participators in the forthcoming Vienna Exhibition may now be added the St. Cecilia Academy, of Rome, the oldest musical institution of its kind in existence. The Academy will contribute to the exhibits a great number of valuable historical documents and other articles of special interest in connection with musical art.

A very successful first performance is reported at the Imperial Opera of St. Petersburg of a new one-act opera, entitled "The Poet," the music by M. Krotkoff. Another new operatic work from the pen of M. Koratchewko, entitled "Prince Serebreny," is shortly to be produced at the Imperial Russian Opera. The libretto of the latter work is founded upon one of Count Tolstoi's novels.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"SIMPLIFIED" MUSIC.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—In your January issue (page 16) the proposed reform of musical notation, known as "Simplified Music," is inaccurately criticised; provision is made in this system for notes of greater duration than a beat. It is to be regretted that your musical critic's attempt to translate a bar of ordinary music into the new notation "only succeeded in making it look like a veritable scarecrow!" Had the work been properly done he would have illustrated one of the main objects in view—viz., close resemblance (except as to rests) to ordinary music in its simplest forms of 2-4, 3-4, and C time. If he had informed your readers that "Simplified Music" is declared to accomplish with nine that for which ninety-six forms are now employed, they would have been in a better position to appreciate the grounds "on which the system stands self-condemned." In justice to this reform, I venture to ask that judgment be suspended until the publication of a work now in the press. Your critic makes an amusing assertion as to the two readings required for clefs in pianoforte music. "Once grasp the idea of the stave of eleven lines, and the difficulty vanishes." This is poor consolation for suffering learners! It sounds more like retrogression than progress. The eleven lines were discarded centuries ago because they were too confusing. What is to become of the "idea" when the treble clef makes its appearance in the lower stave or the bass clef in the upper stave, as occurs frequently when it suits a composer's convenience?—Yours obediently,

E. Raymond Turner,
Hon. Sec., Simplified Music Association.

Rutland House, Epsom.

[We judged the system, naturally, from the prospectus sent us, which does not mention that provision is made for notes of more than a unit in length. But, apart from this, and granting, for argument's sake, the merits of this proposed reform, do the members of the Association realise what the adoption throughout Europe and America of a new notation would mean? Is it not obvious that the cost alone of such a change, to say nothing of its difficulty, places it out of court as a practicable scheme? We have no sympathy whatever with attempts to bring forward a new musical notation. The present system may not be perfect—few things are; but it has one supreme merit—universality. We cannot regard those who would deprive it of this quality as friends of progress.—Ed. M. T.]

Want of space compels us to hold over some interesting correspondence on the subject of the "Vicar of Bray."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music is always kept in stock, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Barnstaple.—The Epiphany, by Dr. H. J. Edwards, was given in the Parish Church on the 11th ult. with marked success. The performers included the members (men and boys) of the Parish Church choir, with the addition of a large proportion of the members (male and female) of the Exeter Musical Festival Society. The composer presided at the organ, and the performance was ably conducted by Mr. S. Harper—who replaced Dr. Gardner, of Ilfracombe, absent through illness. Mr. Harper also sang the tenor solos. The other vocalists were Mrs. Davis, Miss Hortop, Miss Willis, and Messrs. G. Harper, N. Deane, R. Bath, and G. Garland.

Biggleswade.—An Organ Recital was given in the Parish Church, on the 17th ult., by Mr. J. G. Cooper. The programme included Fugues by Bach and Mendelssohn, Handel's Concerto in B flat, two pieces from Rossini's Stabat Mater, and several works of lighter style by French and English composers.

Burton-on-Trent.—On Thursday, the 11th ult., the Musical Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's St. Paul. The principals were Miss Thudichum, Miss Frances Turner, Mr. Chas. Chilley, and Mr. Thurley Beale. Mr. H. T. Abbott was leader of the band, and Mr. L. F. Day conducted.

Epsom.—The Choral Society gave a Concert on the 4th ult., when Mendelssohn's music to Athalie was the chief feature. The solo vocalists were Madame Madeline Hardy, Miss Mary Hay, Miss Mary Tunnicliffe, and Mrs. Sidney Norman, the verses being recited by Mr. Charles Fry. The choir gave an efficient rendering of the choruses, under the direction of Mr. Avalon Collard. The second part was miscellaneous, and included, among other choral pieces, a new part-song, "Speak to me with thine eyes, love," by J. W. Elliott, and songs by Mr. Millward, Mr. Harry Lee, Madame Hardy, and Mr. Avalon Collard.

Helensburgh.—The Choral Union gave its first Concert this season on the 4th ult., when Handel's Samson was performed. The chorus, numbering over eighty, under the able leadership of Mr. Thomas Brash, sang with fine feeling, reflecting great credit on the Honorary Conductor. The principals were Miss Marjorie Eaton, Miss Helen G. Mainds, Mr. T. E. Gledhill, and Mr. James Fleming. An orchestra, numbering twenty-two, under the leadership of Mr. W. H. Cole, played the accompaniments. Altogether the Concert was one of the most successful ever given by the Society.

Hemel Hempstead.—The members of the Choral Society brought their fourth season to a close by a very successful performance of Dr. Storer's dramatic Cantata The Tournament, at a Concert held in the Town Hall, on the 16th ult. The second part of the programme contained glees and part-songs by Webbe, Hatton, Faning, &c. The soloists were Miss Ada Loaring, Miss Phipps, Rev. A. Pattrick (Minor Canon of Christ Church, Oxford), and the Rev. H. Carpenter. Miss Morgan presided at the pianoforte and Mr. Acford at the harmonium. The Conductor was Mr. Frank Gatward, Organist and Choirmaster, Parish Church, Great Berkhampstead.

Huntingdon.—On Wednesday evening, January 27, Gaul's sacred Cantata The Ten Virgins was performed by a choir of eighty voices and a band of thirty performers, in the Corn Exchange, the Composer conducting. The orchestra, which included several local musicians, was augmented by professionals from London, Cambridge, and Bedford, and the manner in which the performers acquitted themselves proved the great pains and ability with which Mr. Frank Clark had trained the choir. The performance on the whole went off remarkably well, and excepting a slight difficulty here and there with the stringed instruments, no fault can be found. The leading artists were Miss Alice Davis, Miss Annie Holmes, Mr. W. Driver, and Mr. S. Westby Daniels. Altogether the performance was one of the most successful ever given in Huntingdon, and much credit is due to all who took part in it. At the conclusion the Conductor was accorded an outburst of applause.——The Cantata was repeated at Trinity Church on Thursday evening, and with great success. Mr. Gaul again conducted.——The Cantata was also given on the 2nd ult. at St. Neots, and on the 11th ult. at St. Ives, under the direction of Mr. Frank Clark; Mr. Claude Hunter presiding at the organ.

Knottingley, Yorkshire.—An excellent performance of Elijah was given in the Wesleyan Chapel on Monday, the 15th ult. The choir and orchestra numbered about 120. Mr. Moxon, of Pontefract, was at the organ, and Mr. Acomb, of Leeds, was leader of the orchestra. The choruses were sung throughout with remarkable vigour and precision. The artists were Miss Monteith, Miss Bessie Dore, Mr. Percy Palmer, and Mr. Sydney Jameison. These excellent singers were well supported in the concerted music by members of the chorus. The Chapel was crowded by an appreciative audience. Great praise is due to Mr. Archer, the local choirmaster, and to Mr. Bagley, through whose enterprise the performance was given. Mr. C. J. Dale, of the Finsbury Choral Association, conducted.

Leicester.—A Concert was given at the Temperance Hall on the 10th ult. The vocalists were Mesdames Russell and Maude Harding, Miss A. M. Jelley, Messrs. Alfred Page and J. R. Orgill, who acquitted themselves in a manner which was fully appreciated by the large audience. Mr. C. Mansfield, Mr. J. W. Mansfield, and Mr. C. Leonard Burrows played Reissiger's Trio in E flat with much effect, and Miss V. Nalder accompanied.

Middlesbrough.—The Musical Union gave its second Concert of the season on the 17th ult., introducing, for the first time in the district, Miss Brema (soprano) and Mr. Plunket Greene, whose singing, among others, of three Hungarian melodies created a marked impression. Mr. Willy Hess, with a string quartet made up of the Messrs. Speelman and M. Vieuxtemps, played Beethoven's No. 2 in G major, and other selections; and himself contributed a violin solo. The chorus, under Mr. Kilburn, gave a selection of unaccompanied part-songs, including a fine example of sixteenth century writing by "Clemens non Papa." Miss Louie Heath played the exacting accompaniments with great taste and ability.

Mirfield.—The Battyeford Amateur Musical Society gave a performance of The Building of the Ship in the Town Hall on the 11th ult., under the able direction of Mr. J. E. Ibeson, its Conductor. The solos were efficiently rendered by Miss F. Moore, Madame Oscar Pollock, Mr. C. Blagbro, and Mr. Gordon Heller. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous. There was a very large and fashionable audience.

Newbury.—The Amateur Orchestral Society gave an excellent Concert on the morning of the 9th ult., the Conductors being Mr. J. S. Liddle and Mr. Eatwell. Dvorák's Overture The Peasant, a Rogue, Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony, and some lighter pieces, including the Intermezzo from Mascagni's Cavalleria (encored), were given with much spirit and expression. Vocal solos were contributed by Miss Marian McKenzie and Mr. Stuart Higgs, and instrumental pieces by Mr. Liddle (violin), Mr. Clement Hann (violoncello), and Mr. A. Thomas (flute). Mr. Thomas Webb was an efficient accompanist. The Concert was repeated, with slight alterations, in the evening.

Reading.—The first Subscribers' Night of the Orpheus Society was given in the Town Hall on January 27, the following artists being engaged: Miss Mary Reeve, Mr. Edward Houghton, Mr. John Thomas (solo harp); Mr. N. P. Allen accompanied; Mr. F. J. Read conducted. ——A sacred Concert was given in King's Road Chapel on the 3rd ult., consisting of the first two parts of Haydn's Creation. Soloists: Miss E. Luke, Mr. J. C. Allen, Mr. A. W. Knill; Mr. E. P. Collier, Conductor; Mr. A. W. Moss, Organist.——The Temperance Choral Society gave a Concert on the 9th ult., the first part consisting of Handel's Acis and Galatea. Artists: Mrs. Hutchinson, Mr. J. Gawthrop, Mr. J. Bridson; organ, Mr. Howard Moss; pianoforte, Mr. P. R. Scrivener; Conductor, Mr. A. W. Moss. Part two, ballads, part-songs, &c.

Sherborne Abbey.—Handel's Messiah was performed in the Abbey in the afternoon and evening of the 11th ult., for the benefit of the Choir Boys' Endowment Fund. The solos were taken by Mrs. R. Ensor, of Milborne Port; Mrs. Kelly, Mr. C. Pillow, and Mr. Seymour Kelly, of Chichester. The Abbey choir, augmented for the occasion to about 100 voices, formed the chorus, and Mr. G. E. Lyle presided at the organ.

Stalybridge.—Mr. Sydney Hall gave his annual Concert in the Town Hall on the 16th ult. The principals were Miss Sarah Berry, Mr. J. Dean, and Mr. Gordon Heller. There was a good attendance notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather. Miss Berry was very successful with Hatton's "The Enchantress," while Mr. Heller's rendering of Ernest Bryson's "The Sea hath its pearls" found much favour with the audience. Mr. S. Hall accompanied.

Stonehaven, N.B.—The annual Concert of the Choral Society was given in the Town Hall on the 12th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. J. R. Brooke, Organist of Fetteresso and St. John's Churches. The first part consisted of Van Bree's St. Cecilia's Day, which was given with good taste and precision by both chorus and orchestra. The second part of the programme consisted of part-songs, &c. The soloists engaged were Miss Mary Simmers, Mr. George Strathdee, and Mr. H. Hollingworth (solo violinist), who also led the orchestra with great ability. The Committee of Management are to be congratulated on the success of their endeavours, for without doubt it was one of the best Concerts given by the Society.

Winchester.—Mr. W. T. Best, Organist of St. George's Hall, Liverpool, gave an Organ Recital on the afternoon of the 9th ult. on the new organ, one of the finest in the city, which has recently been placed in St. Paul's Church. The programme, which occupied nearly two hours, included compositions by Bach, Mendelssohn, Sullivan, Berlioz, and a Toccata of Mr. Best's own. There was a very large congregation.——A Meeting was held at the invitation of Mr. Arthur Warburton, son of Canon Warburton, on the 4th ult., to consider the formation of a musical society for men, the object of which would be to raise the musical standard in the city and give periodical Concerts of vocal and instrumental music on the lines of Dr. Mee's Club at Oxford. A resolution in support of the scheme was passed, but it will not come into effect until next winter, and until there are seventy subscribing members.——Two Concerts, arranged by Mr. Arthur Warburton, were given on the afternoon and evening of the 1st ult. The contributions, chiefly by local musicians, were of a high class. Miss Lovett sang solos by Meyerbeer, Mattei, and Hope Temple; and Mr. Gostelow (Organist of the Parish Church, Luton) played pianoforte solos.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. Thomas Blackith, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Totteridge, Herts.—Mr. Gerald M. Coleman, Organist and Choirmaster to the Presbyterian Church, Rangoon.—Mr. Edward E. Douglas-Smith, to St. Peter's Church, Cranley Gardens, South Kensington.—Mr. Reginald W. Bartle, to St. Lawrence's.—Mr. A. Mangelsdorff, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Benington, Boston, Lincolnshire.—Mr. W. H. Howse, Organist and Choirmaster to the Presbyterian Church, Port Elizabeth, South Africa.—Mr. J. H. Clifford Johnston, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Olave's.

MISS

(CONTRALTO)

(Late Westmoreland Scholar and Parepa-Rosa Gold Medalist of the Royal Academy of Music) is at liberty for Concerts of every description.

Northern Review, December 11th, 1889.

"The recit. 'Elijah, get thee hence,' was exquisitely rendered by Miss Hooton, who possesses a contralto voice, rich in quality and powerful enough to suit any hall, however large. Miss Hooton's singing is artistic and full of expression, and that she will ere long become one of our best contraltos, if indeed she is not entitled to that distinction already, I have not a shadow of doubt. Miss Hooton's rendering of 'O rest in the Lord' was an exceptionally fine effort, and had the conductor permitted it, the audience would have had it repeated."

Nottingham Daily Express, January 10th, 1891.

"Miss Hooton sang 'Hymen, haste' (Semele), Handel, with much richness and power. . . . Both her songs 'La Charmante Marguerite' (old French) and 'Will he come?' (Sullivan) were enthusiastically received. There is no doubt at all that Miss Hooton will take a very high place amongst contraltos. She has everything in her favour, youth, good looks, a splendid voice, which she has been trained to produce in an excellent manner, while she pronounces very distinctly, and has evidently the right musical feeling."

Miss Marie Hooton has fulfilled engagements at:—

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION

ON THE

Sacred Passion of the Holy Redeemer

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY THE

REV. W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON, M.A.

SET TO MUSIC BY

J. STAINER.

This Work is an attempt to supply the want long felt of an easy and short form of Passion Music suitable for use in ordinary parish churches. It is composed for two solo voices, a Tenor and a Bass, and for the church choir. At intervals hymns occur, in which the whole congregation can join. The performance will probably not extend over forty minutes in duration, thus giving an opportunity for a suitable "address" if thought advisable. No orchestra is required, the accompaniments being specially adapted for the organ only; much of the expense usually attending Passion Services will therefore be avoided. The book of the words, for distribution among the congregation, will contain the music of the Hymns; by this means it is hoped that the congregation will be induced to take part heartily in the service.

VOCAL SCORE, PAPER COVER, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

PASSION SERVICE

NEW SACRED WORK

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL,

Composer of the "HOLY CITY," "RUTH," &c.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed, the work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively: 'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

Church-music which is modern in form, interesting to a choir, and devotional in effect, whilst also of easy execution and of moderate compass for the voices, is certainly much needed in these days when choral services are almost universal. This want is specially felt with regard to music for the Office of Holy Communion, and it is hoped that these services will be found well within the capabilities of an ordinary choir, yet not wanting in an effort to give due expression to the solemnity of the words. PRELUDES and STUDIES: Musical Themes of the Day. By W. J. HENDERSON, Author of "The Story of Music."

 In this volume Mr. Henderson discusses a new Wagner's "Ring des Nibelungen," and prints other Wagnerian Essays. An essay on "The Evolution of Piano Music" presents many facts not before accessible in collected form, some of which are not to be found in any other work in English.

BOOK X.—TOCCATA, PRELUDES, AND FUGUES.
PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

The Tenth Book contains (1) The great Toccata and Fugue in D minor (Dorico); (2) A little known Prelude and Fugue in A minor, which, although not taking rank among Bach's greatest works, is yet of much interest (vide Preface); (3) Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, universally regarded as one of the Master's best works, and eminently fitted to display the resources and grandeur of the Organ; (4) The Fugue in C minor on a theme by Legrenzi, with its brilliant and Fantasia-like Coda; (5) A detached Prelude in A minor, which only requires to be better known to command wider appreciation than it has hitherto obtained.

UNISON CHANTS

FOR THE PSALTER

A COLLECTION OF SINGLE ANGLICAN CHANTS

APPROPRIATED TO THE DAILY PSALMS IN THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

EXPRESSLY SELECTED AND ADAPTED FOR THE USE OF CHURCH CHOIRS AND CONGREGATIONS

EDITED BY

THE REV. CANON SIR F. A. G. OUSELEY,

Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., Precentor of Hereford, and Professor of Music in the University of Oxford, 1855-89,

AND

EDWIN GEORGE MONK,

Mus. Doc., Oxon., Organist and Master of the Choir, York Minster, 1859-83.

THE VOICE PART—Price One Shilling. ORGAN HARMONIES—Price Five Shillings.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

IN furtherance of a more general chanting of the Psalter in Churches, this Book of Unison Chants is an attempt to supply a plan sufficiently easy to secure extensive adoption, yet varied enough to be attractive, upon the one and only basis regarded by the Editors as being universally practicable—viz., the employment of Single Chant Melodies, to be sung "in Unison."

The present Work, projected (and even announced) some score of years ago, is intended to meet the need indicated, by providing a Series of easy and suitable Chants, for Unison Singing only, for the monthly course of the Psalter in the Book of Common Prayer. Not only have small and moderately qualified Choirs been kept in view, but also particularly the Voice of the great Congregation. In order to secure this much to be desired end—Chanting of the Daily Psalms by Choir and Congregation combined—the following means are proposed:—

I. Singing in Unison (strictly speaking, Octave-Singing).

II. Employment of Chants of Restricted Compass only; especially as to all Reciting-Notes.

III. Provision for Change of Chant at every fresh Psalm; and also, whenever in the course of any of the longer Psalms such change could be made to follow the significance of the Sacred Text, conduce to its clearer understanding, or enforce its teaching.

IV. Suggestion for occasional Change of Instrumental Harmony as a further mode (often of much value and potency) of heightening the desired expression; or of calling attention to important divisions, and changes of subject or utterance, in cases when actual change of the voice-part seemed undesirable.

Transposition has been largely resorted to, in order to meet the requirements of a limited vocal range; and, more rarely, slight modifications and excisions have been necessary, to carry through and ensure the specific scope and purpose of the Work.

It will not, it is hoped, be imagined by any that in this advocacy of Unisonal Chanting distinctively for the Psalter there is the slightest wish to discourage the use of Choral Harmony in Divine Worship, with all the moving and noble effects produced by well-balanced and refined Part-Singing; or a desire for the further extension of Unison-Singing; beyond its common employment for the People's Part in Confession, Lord's Prayer, Response, and Creed. Not to mention simple "Anthems" and "Services," which are available for Choirs where practice and discipline prevail, the Canticles with carefully selected Chants, as well as Hymn-Tunes, may readily be sung in Harmony by such Choirs against the Congregational Unison, by reason of constant recurrence, and consequent familiarity: advantages which cannot attach to the Hundred and Fifty Psalms of David, which do not quickly become well known to those singers who chant on Sundays only, and are unaccustomed to daily use of the Psalter in Matins and Evensong.

THE CHRISTIAN PILGRIM

A SACRED CANTATA

COMPOSED BY

J. E. NEWELL.

PREFACE.

The growing custom of performing complete works in places of public worship has led the composer of the "Christian Pilgrim" to hope that his Cantata may be found acceptable in choirs, where the larger and more difficult works of the great masters are often inadmissible; it contains twenty-four numbers of Solo and Concerted Pieces, and can be effectively rendered, with either Pianoforte or Organ Accompaniment.

The words are selected passages of Holy Writ and well-known Hymns, and are intended to portray the life of the Christian Pilgrim through the many trials and temptations that beset him on his heavenly way, to the final triumph of eternal life.

PART I.

1. Prelude.
2. Pilgrims here and strangers we (Chorus and Soprano Solo).
3. Grant that in the stranger's land (Chorale).
4. As when the weary traveller (Contralto Solo).
5. I was wandering and weary (Tenor and Contralto Solo and Chorus).
6. Love not the world (Quartet).
7. Beset with snares (Chorus).
8. Oft as I look upon the road (Bass Solo).
9. Lead us not into temptation (Chorus).
10. Blessed is the man (Duet—Tenor and Bass).
11. Flee from evil (Chorus).
12. The Pilgrims' March.

PART II.

13. Fight the good fight (Chorus).
14. I'm but a stranger here (Soprano Solo and Chorus).
15. Strangers and Pilgrims (Chorus).
16. Prepared the trumpet's call to greet (March Chorus).
17. The Lord my pasture shall prepare (Tenor Solo.)
18. Yea, though I walk (Quartet).
19. It is near, it is near (Chorus).
20. Dear Lord, I see my home (Soprano Solo).
21. Blessed are the pure in heart (Chorus—Female Voices).
22. I have fought a good fight (Bass Solo).
23. Thine for ever (Duet—Soprano and Contralto).
24. The gates, the gates are open (Chorus).

FINIS.

May be performed freely everywhere.

THE TEN VIRGINS

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

(OP. 42)

COMPOSER OF "THE HOLY CITY," "RUTH," "PASSION SERVICE," "JOAN OF ARC," &c.

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"The Cantata is replete with charming music of that school which every one can appreciate, and which found so distinguished a master in Mendelssohn. If composers would have their works popular with choral societies, it is only reasonable to expect that they will bestow a fair share of their attention upon the choruses. The old masters knew this, and there is no doubt that the fact has much to do with the long-continued popularity of their works; and there is equally little doubt, we think, that the principal cause of the failure of so many works produced now-a-days is the uninteresting nature of the choruses. Compare the choruses of the three most popular works ever produced—'The Messiah,' 'Creation,' and 'Elijah'—with a large number of modern works, and our meaning will be clear. If we mistake not, such thoughts as these passed through Mr. Gaul's mind when he set himself to compose those works which have placed him in the front rank of English composers—the 'Holy City,' 'Joan of Arc,' and 'The Ten Virgins'—and that the public endorse his views is proved by the enormous sale which these works have had."—Newcastle Daily Journal, Dec. 17, 1890.

"The subject is an excellent one for a Cantata . . . a stronger work than 'Joan of Arc.' . . . Melodious, vocal, and of moderate difficulty, and, like Mr. Gaul's earlier Cantatas, will be eagerly welcomed by societies in search of new works having these characteristics."—Newcastle Daily Leader, Dec. 16, 1890.

BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE CHOIR.—"The hall was overcrowded by an audience that was disposed to encore every other number of the work. If the verdict of a miscellaneous audience, that could have no possible reason for being favourably prejudiced, is of any account in estimating the merit of a new work, a career that will rival that of the same composer's 'Holy City' may be predicted for 'The Ten Virgins.' That Mr. Gaul should have secured this undoubted popular success with a work far more contrapuntal than any of his former works, is a remarkable tribute to his power of welding science and beauty into one whole."—Musical Times, Dec. 1, 1890.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

The above Cantata has been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral, including three numbers for Sopranos and Contraltos (The Virgins).

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal parts, each 1s. Words only, 5s. per 100.

Staff Edition. Eleventh to Fifteenth Thousand.

JOAN OF ARC

A DRAMATIC CANTATA

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

FAMOUS VIOLINS AND VIOLIN MAKERS.

THIS SERIES OF PUBLICATIONS now comprises three Works, each compiled from original sources, and containing much information hitherto unpublished. The books are handsomely bound in cloth, and illustrated with superb coloured plates by Mr. Alfred Slocombe and Mr. Shirley Slocombe.

THE TUSCAN STRADIVARI. A short account of a Violin made by Stradivari for Cosimo de Medici, Grand Duke of Tuscany, in 1690. Illustrated by three coloured plates and fac-simile reproductions of some interesting records concerning the instrument.

SMALL FOLIO. PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

A few copies of the first notice of this Violin appeared printed on hand-made paper in a quaint paper cover, without illustrations, but containing fac-similes of the interesting receipt given at the time of the purchase of the Violin in 1794 and of the label Stradivari inserted in the instrument.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

THE SALABUE STRADIVARI. A History and Critical Description of the famous Violin, commonly called "Le Messie," made by Stradivari in 1716, and afterwards sold by his son to Count Cozio di Salabue. Illustrated by three coloured plates.

SMALL FOLIO. PRICE SIX SHILLINGS.

THE LIFE AND WORK OF MAGGINI, the Great Brescian Maker, based on information derived from the archives of the town of Brescia, and from other sources, containing three coloured plates of a Maggini Violin of great beauty, photographs of Brescia and of Maggini's house, with a fac-simile of his handwriting, and numerous other illustrations.

MISS

(CONTRALTO)

Northern Review, December 11, 1889.

"The recit. 'Elijah, get thee hence,' was exquisitely rendered by Miss Hooton, who possesses a contralto voice, rich in quality and powerful enough to suit any hall, however large. Miss Hooton's singing is artistic and full of expression, and that she will ere long become one of our best contraltos, if indeed she is not entitled to that distinction already, I have not a shadow of doubt. Miss Hooton's rendering of 'O rest in the Lord' was an exceptionally fine effort, and had the conductor permitted it, the audience would have had it repeated."

Nottingham Daily Express, January 10, 1891.

"Miss Hooton sang 'Hymen, haste' (Semele), Handel, with much richness and power. . . . Both her songs, 'La Charmante Marguerite' (old French) and 'Will he come?' (Sullivan), were enthusiastically received. There is no doubt at all that Miss Hooton will take a very high place amongst contraltos. She has everything in her favour, youth, good looks, a splendid voice, which she has been trained to produce in an excellent manner, while she pronounces very distinctly, and has evidently the right musical feeling."

THE MUSICAL TIMES
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
APRIL 1, 1892.

THE MANUFACTURE OF DEGREES AND DIPLOMAS.

A few years ago we remember reading the report of a Police Court case in which the central figure was a gentleman with several letters after his name. As the combination was unfamiliar, the magistrate inquired what they stood for, and was informed by the owner that they represented an honorary degree which he had conferred upon himself. This may, of course, have been only a case of what the French call la folie des grandeurs, or that form of mania in which the sufferer imagines himself to be some exalted personage; but it is quite possible that the hero of this episode was as sane and sensible as any of our readers, and that in assuming his self-conferred diploma he was only acting on the principle which in all ages has animated the knights of industry. Men and women who live by their wits were long wont to reinforce their claims to recognition by the means of a title, as the race of hotel-keepers can testify. But culture and democracy have changed all that. In former years it was the ambition of many an honest man to win a handle to his name. It is now more common to find people consumed with the passion for a string of honorific initials after their names. Imposture always treads close in the track of virtue, and thus we find fewer sham baronets and spurious lords, and more mock doctors, bogus Fellows, pinchbeck professors, imaginary diplomas, and false hoods. Furthermore, the collectivism of the age is strikingly manifested in the way in which these titles are originated. They are no longer the result of random individual effort, but of co-operation and association. Suspicion is disarmed by this procedure. The gentleman who conferred a degree on himself was too thoroughgoing an individual to succeed in these later days. Had he been wiser in his generation, he would have taken unto himself three or more congenial spirits and founded a University for the Redistribution of Property. Instead of bestowing degrees on himself, he should have embarked on the much more lucrative employment of disposing of them to others—for a consideration. He would have driven a roaring trade for a while, until the novelty of the thing wore off and the charm of adding the letters F.U.R. after one's name ceased to exert its spell on the majority à la Carlyle. Somebody would in the fulness of time have arisen to call in question the value of the suffix, or perhaps would have pointed out the strange coincidence that the initials of the title Fellow of the University of Redistribution spelt fur, which is the Latin for thief. Or perhaps Mr. Labouchere would have expressed a desire to see the balance-sheet of the University, and then one fine day the bubble would have burst and the promoters have levanted, and the Fellows and Associates have been left singing a song of degrees in a minor key.

The above is an entirely fictitious and extravagant allegory, but there is really good excuse for indulging in such flights of fancy when one reflects on the attitude of the English public in regard to the question of musical degrees and diplomas. The average man, as it was recently pointed out in a lecture delivered on the subject by Mr. Akeroyd at a meeting of the National Society of Professional Musicians at Bradford, knows little or nothing about musical titles, and is unfortunately very often quite unable to discriminate between the genuine and the imitation article. Under these circumstances, it is not to be wondered at that enterprising promoters should avail themselves liberally of the opportunities offered them by the ignorance or negligence of the incurious musical public. Music is often described as the youngest of the arts, and musicians are certainly not wanting in one of the chief attributes of youth—credulity. The aspirant to honours—whether as an executant, a teacher, or a composer—is anxious to gain official recognition of his abilities. In other words, he longs for a degree, and, like the baby in the advertisement, he won't be happy till he gets it. But in his desire to fulfil this ambition he is only too apt to forget Mendelssohn's motto, Res severa est verum gaudium—that nothing is worth winning which does not involve serious effort. He overlooks the fact that the value of praise depends on the judgment and character of the praiser, or, to put it in the words recently used by the Bishop of London, that "degrees are worth whatever value can be given to them by the authority which confers them." Proceeding on the naïve assumption that all bodies which confer titles, degrees, or diplomas are on an equality, he approaches the institution which gives him the most generous allowance of initials for the least possible exertion or outlay on his part. At the present moment, we may remark parenthetically, he will suffer from an embarras de richesses in making his choice. But when he has done so and gained the coveted diploma, the extreme ease with which the ordeal is passed may excite his suspicions. Mr. Akeroyd, in the paper to which we have alluded, exhibited a diploma on which there appeared the names of two well-known musicians, neither of whom had been present at the examination of the candidate, and they had no knowledge that their names were being used by the promoters of the scheme. He also declared that seven of the Vice-Presidents of one of these bodies had declared that their names "had been improperly used." In the Musical Standard of the 12th ult. the editor prints letters from Sir Arthur Sullivan, Sir Herbert Oakeley, and Messrs. Cowen and Cummings, all desiring their names to be removed from the notices of a certain self-constituted College of Music. It were much to be desired that other notabilities were as prompt in disassociating themselves from institutions of dubious character. There can be little doubt that the guileless public are much influenced by names, and the mischief wrought by bogus music schools can be in great measure laid at the door of men of social or artistic eminence who so freely grant the use of their names as Patrons, Vice-Presidents, and the like. It is a matter of notoriety that a little judicious flattery will obtain the name of almost any one if no pecuniary responsibility be incurred. In some cases, as we have seen above, the promoters dispense with all negotiations or formalities, and boldly include in the list of their patrons the names of persons who have never been consulted at all. Colleges of this sort, if we are to believe Mr. Akeroyd, are springing up like mushrooms around us, and the dispensing of diplomas, not worth the price of the paper on which they are printed, goes merrily on. All tastes are catered for in the curriculum of the spontaneously generated Musical College. Thus, in the advertisement of one much discussed institution, we find, in the list of the teaching staff, the professor of musical theory in immediate juxtaposition to the professor of the banjo. Indeed, we have no doubt that if you desired it, you could obtain a licentiateship of music from this institution on the strength of proficiency in manipulating the bones.

And yet with the evidences of incompetence, of fraud, and of false pretence writ large in the very prospectuses of these mushroom colleges; with ample means at its disposal for the discriminating of the true from the false hood, the bogus from the genuine degree, the public—or at least a certain portion of it—with incredible gullibility keeps on playing into the hands of imposture. Urgent appeals are addressed to us to lend our help in unmasking these schemes, but we really cannot profess a very lively sympathy with people whose misfortunes are the direct result of such extraordinary negligence. If a man is ill and elects to consult a quack in preference to a doctor of established repute, it is his own look out. And if a man, otherwise rational and well informed, prefers to send his daughter to, say, Juggins's Jubilee University, in preference to the Royal College or the Royal Academy of Music, what is to be done? The sympathy which one is prepared to bestow on the victims of imposture is materially diminished when it becomes apparent that their misfortunes are due to careless credulity. The real remedy for the evil is in the hands of the public. If they would only be at pains to consult Whitaker's Almanac or some other equally accessible book of reference, and trust less to specious advertisements, the evil would right itself and the mushroom institutions would disappear as rapidly as they sprang into being.

Lest, however, we should be accused of apathy in regard to the present highly discreditable condition of the Musical Degrees question, we venture to submit the following scheme for coping with the evil. The ratification of the title of R.A. on painters and sculptors rests ultimately with the Sovereign. With this analogy to guide us an attempt might very well be made to secure the passing of a law which should enact that no institution should be empowered to grant degrees or diplomas giving persons the right of adding letters after their names unless they possess a charter or act under the sanction of some high and authoritative direction or power. As a preliminary step, a public meeting should be called, and the leaders of the musical profession invited to form a committee for the purpose of hearing evidence and deciding on the best mode of taking action in the matter. The great object to be gained is to help those who seem unable to help themselves, and to furnish them with some convenient test for discriminating between the bonâ fide and the bogus article. And we do not see how this end can be more effectually attained than through the united action of the leaders of the profession in the way we have described.

FROM MY STUDY.

I have to thank several correspondents for interesting letters having reference to subjects touched upon in these rambling papers. The Rev. H. A. Kemp Hawkins writes from Chesterfield:—

> I venture to send you a copy of the tune usually sung to the "Easter Hymn." I have taken it from the Second Edition of an old book which is in my possession, entitled "The Compleat Psalmodist," published in 1749 "for the Author," John Arnold—Philo-Musicæ." I think this shows that the words of the "Christmas" Hymn were adapted to the "Easter" music, and that the tune was originally intended for the Easter Hymn. I may add that the words in "The Compleat Psalmodist" are identical with the words in "Hymns Ancient and Modern," with the exception of "were" for "where" in the last line of the last verse.
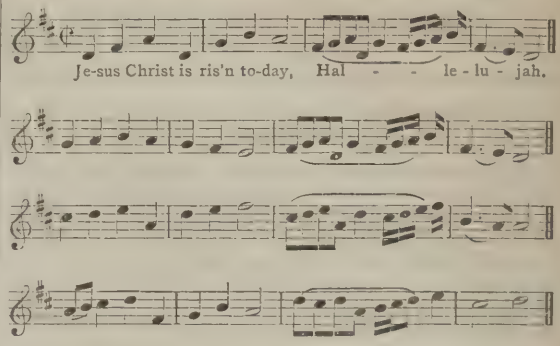
> P.S.—The name of the composer is not given.

This copy of the tune generally ascribed to Worgan has a stave to each part, the melody being on that next above the bass and given to the tenor voice. For general convenience, I reproduce it here in the G clef and in the usual key of D, instead of C as printed:—



With regard to this communication, my crabbed friend "Y." remarks:—

"Your reverend correspondent proves that the tune was set to the Easter Hymn in 1749. So far, good. We are a step nearer the truth, but his evidence leaves open the question whether the tune was set to a Christmas Hymn at a still earlier date. This is not mere cavil. You know my habit. I take nothing for granted. Mr. Kemp Hawkins's letter seems to me much more valuable as strengthening a suspicion that Worgan did not compose this melody. Let us look at the dates. John Worgan was born in 1724, and when the second edition of 'The Compleat Psalmodist' appeared in 1749, he was, of course, twenty-five years old. As 'The Compleat Psalmodist' is not mentioned in Lowndes, I cannot say at the moment when the first edition came out, but allowing five years between the two editions, we have Worgan at twenty when the tune was printed. Don't tell me that this is inconclusive. I know it. There is another point. Look at the remarkable liberties taken with the melody, which you can do by comparing the version copied from 'Apollo's Cabinet' last month and that now taken from the 'Compleat Psalmodist.' Such alterations are common when a tune has become traditional, but not while the composer is still living. Again, the tune, both in the 'Compleat Psalmodist' and 'Apollo's Cabinet,' is anonymous. Is that usual in the life-time of the composer? These considerations give force to my suspicions, but, of course, I wait for proof."

Here I turn to my helpful readers, or such of them as can conveniently consult collections of hymn-tunes somewhat earlier in point of issue than 1749, particularly "The Divine Companion, or David's Harp New Tun'd," Lond. 1722. Should the melody of the Easter Hymn be found there, or in any other book of near the same date, the evidence that Worgan had nothing to do with it will be complete, and, let me add, Y.'s grim self-complacency will be insufferable.

Since we are discussing Worgan, I must not pass over an interesting communication from my friend, Andrew Deakin, of Birmingham, who tells me that his library contains several Vauxhall song-books of the last century, notably one entitled: "The Songs and Ballads sung by Mr. Lowe and Miss Stevenson at Vauxhall, set by Mr. Worgan. Book the VII., 1758. London. Printed for the Author by John Johnson, opposite Bow Church, Cheapside, of whom may be had the Vauxhall Songs for the Years 1752, 1753, 1754, 1755, 1756, and 1757." Mr. Deakin forwards a list of the Worgan songs, not one of which, however, is known to fame at the present time. It may be added that Worgan was, for some years, organist at Vauxhall Gardens.

Mr. Deakin asks for information concerning Mr. John Wynne, composer of some of the Vauxhall songs. All the authorities in my library are silent about this gentleman. Can any reader bring him forth to the light?

My Birmingham correspondent continues:

Another matter I wished to write about is that I have a Cluer's "Tamerlane," with a similar frontispiece to the one to "Julius Cæsar," described by you in the January Musical Times, and that I have a libretto of "Julius Cæsar," with the title "Giulio Cesare in Egitto. Drama da Rappresentasi nel Regio Teatro di Hay-Market, per La Reale Accademia Musica. In Londra: Per Tomaso Wood nella Piccola Bretagna. MDCCXXIV." This book has a dedication, "All' Altezza Reale della Principessa di Galles," by Nicolo Francesco Haym (in Italian). The Argument, in English and Italian, and the dramatis personæ, in Italian and English, with names of performers—Senesino, Robinson, Durastanti, Cuzzoni, Berenstadt, Boschi, and Bigonsi.

I have just come across the following in the list of deaths in the European Magazine, March, 1783: "Mr. Thomas Lowe, singer at Sadler's Wells, formerly belonging to Drury Lane Theatre and Vauxhall Gardens."

Writing from the Observatory, Crowborough, Sussex, a lady correspondent describes a copy of Playford's "Harmonica Sacra" in her possession.

The volume is entitled "Harmonia Sacra," and is edited by H. Playford. The first book bears the date 1714 on the title-page, which is as follows: "Harmonia Sacra; or, Divine Hymns and Dialogues; with a thorough-bass for the Theorbo-Lute, Bass Viol, Harpsichord or Organ. Composed by the best masters of the last and present age. The words by several learned and pious men."

Then follow two verses, of which the author's name is not given—

Where Musick and Devotion joyn,
The way to Canaan pleasant is,
We travel on with Songs Divine,
Ravish'd with Sacred extasies.
. . . . . .
No longer do we pass,
Thro' a dry barren wilderness;
But through a land where Milk and Honey flow,
The Paths to Heav'n above leads thro' a Heav'n below.

The book is printed by Pearson, sold by Young, at the Dolphin and Crown, in St. Paul's Churchyard, "where may be had Mr. Purcell's 'Orpheus Brittanicus' compleat."

The frontispiece represents three female figures, the centre one playing a bass viol, that to the right a harp, and that to the left a lute. Above are two cupids, holding between them a scroll, bearing the words "Harmonia Sacra"; and in the lower part of the picture is a bird's-eye view of a landscape (doubtless intended for the world), above which the musicians are seated among the clouds.

The first book is dedicated to "the Queen's most excellent Majesty," and contains a preface "To the Reader." The second book, which is bound with the first, has a similar frontispiece. The title is also the same as that of the first book, but the two verses given above are omitted and replaced by the following lines, headed "Mr. Waller, of Divine Poesie":—

Angels and Men, assisted by this Art,
May Sing together, though they dwell apart.

This book is "printed by Ed. Jones for Henry Playford, at his Shop near the Temple Church, and at his House over against the Blue-Ball, in Arundel Street in the Strand." It is dated July 1, 1693, but the number of the edition is not given, though it must be either a first or second, as the first book is a third edition.

It would thus appear that the second book had been published twenty-one years earlier than this copy of the first, and not originally bound with it; but it is possible that the title-page of the latter may have been lost or disfigured and replaced by one of later date; for the title, &c., of the first book has been stuck on to a leaf while that of the second book is printed on the leaf itself.

This book is dedicated to Henry Aldrich, D.D., and, instead of an address to the reader, there follow three poems. The first is to Dr. Blow and Mr. Purcell, praising the excellency of their compositions, and is signed H. Sacheverel. The other two poems are both to Henry Purcell, the first signed T. B., the second by "an unknown hand." The volume contains sacred compositions by Purcell, Blow, Clarke, Pelham Humphrey, Weldon, Norris, and others. H. Purcell and Blow's works are very numerous, and include the famous anthems "O give thanks" by the former, and "I beheld, and lo, a great multitude," by the latter.

There is a separate title-page at the end for "Two Divine Hymns" by Jer. Clarke.

My fair correspondent will be interested to know that the first edition of Book I., "Harmonia Sacra," was published in 1688 and the first edition of Book II. in 1693. The date of the second edition, Book I., I cannot ascertain without further search, but there was a third edition, "much enlarged and corrected," in 1714, when also a second edition of Book II. appeared, "very much enlarged and corrected." It appears, therefore, that my correspondent possesses the third edition of Book I. and the first edition of Book II. The two verses quoted as following the title in Book I. I am unable to identify, but the lines ascribed to Waller occur in "Of Divine Poesy," first Canto—one of the "Divine Poems" written at the age of eighty-two. I give them here, with the immediate context:

The church triumphant, and the church below,
In songs of praise their present union show;
Their joys are full; our expectation long;
In life we differ, but we join in song.
Angels and we, assisted by this art,
May sing together, tho' we dwell apart.

"Angels and men," as quoted in "Harmonia Sacra," is certainly more elegant than "Angels and we."

In the course of my reading this month I have lighted upon a pamphlet entitled "An Essay for Promoting of Psalmody. London. Printed for J. Holland, and sold by J. Morphew, near Stationers' Hall. 1710." There is no name on the title-page, but the dedication to Queen Anne, that "truly Royal Patroness of Endeavours for the Service of Church and State," is signed by no less a person than Nahum Tate, who, by the way, wrote it some time after the appearance of the Tate and Brady version of the Psalms. I fancy the pamphlet is now rare. The only copy I know is the one now before me, bound in a volume with others, by different hands, on the same subject. Some reference to its contents may, therefore, interest my readers.

As a poet, Tate may be excused for using high-flown language, even in his preface, where he styles Psalmody "this fairest Daughter of Devotion and Darling of Protestants beyond Sea," and "this exiled Princess not yet restored to her proper Seat and Splendour." To Psalmody as a Princess he addresses, by way of appendix to his arguments, a long invocation of a specially rhapsodical character: "Awake, Appear, O Princess of Divine Praise! Does not the Season smile upon thee? Heark! is it not the Voice of thy Beloved that calls to thee from Above and tells thee the Winter is past, the Rain gone, and the Time of Singing come?" The Princess responds, also from "Solomon's Song": "Blow, thou North Wind, and come, thou South; blow upon my Garden that the Species (sic) may flow out," &c. Fired by this response, Tate exclaims: "What! shall Stage Sirens sing, and Psalmody sleep? Theatres be thronged, and thy Temples empty?" No; the "celestial Charmer" will return, and "then may we maintain a Commerce between Earth and Heaven, and commence our Heaven upon Earth, since" (Waller's lines appear to have been a favourite quotation)—

Angels and we, assisted by this Art,
May sing together, tho' we dwell apart.

The value of the pamphlet consists not in its assertion of the duty and the beauty of public praise, but in its evidence as to the condition of English Psalmody under the last of the Stuarts. This was exceedingly low. Tate quotes a Doctor Bray, who, in order to tempt into church the young men loitering in the churchyard or neighbouring fields, ordered a Psalm to be sung. "They came flocking into the Church," writes the artful Doctor, "where, by this means, we had 'em present at the Prayers and Preaching." Another witness, the Reverend Doctor Woodward, testifies: "When I first came to my Parish, I found to my great grief, the People very ignorant and irreligious; the place of Divine Worship indecently kept; the public Service neither understood nor attended . . . and the Divine Ordinance of Singing Psalms almost laid aside." Dr. Woodward amended this by teaching "three or four Youths the Skill of singing Psalms orderly and according to Rules," which example spread till, "to the joy of all pious Souls, our Shepherds, Ploughmen, and other Labourers at their work, perfume the Air with the melodious Singing of Psalm." It is worthy of note here that Tate never once, throughout his tract, refers to an organ or other musical instrument; the parish clerk being the only source of "light and leading" within the range of his observation. There is other evidence to show that, as far as Psalmody existed at all in parish churches, it did so under the conditions imposed during the rule of the Puritans and still observed by the bulk of Scottish Presbyterians.

Tate mentions as one obstacle in the way of good Psalmody, the choice of unskilful Parish Clerks, because "as the Clerk sings, so generally does the Parish." He adds that there are so many unskilful Parish Clerks by reason that the pay is not sufficient to attract better men. As a remedy for this state of things, he makes a notable suggestion: "I would humbly propose that whatever Metre-version of the Psalms shall be establish'd and made the national Book, that the Profits, which would then be Considerable, should be disposed of to the Benefit of Parish Clerks; because a single Mite once cast in to commence such a sacred Treasury, may occasion Donations and Settlements sufficient to rescue this noble Part of Divine Worship from Contempt."

Our author gives various other reasons for the low state of Psalmody, such as "want of Countenance from our Quality and Gentry," of whom he says: "You may hear them in the Responses and reading—Psalms, but the giving out of a singing-Psalm seems to strike them dumb." Why is this? In answer, Tate has a fling at Sternhold and Hopkins: "Can we suppose our persons of Quality and Gentry (arriv'd to the nicest Taste of Verse and accustomed to the politest Poetry on other Occasions) will ever be brought to sing in Divine Worship what makes sensible People smile to hear a Clerk read?" Tate finds another reason in the fact that not more than half-a-dozen tunes are used in any given church, thereby causing monotony and indifference; yet another is an unskilful and unmusical manner of singing. He mentions, also, the neglect of Psalm-singing in families, and the omission to have it taught in schools.

Tate incidentally refers to the prejudice against new metre versions of the Psalms, and à propos tells a story with which I will close this notice of his pamphlet: "The late Bishop of Ely, upon his first using his Brother Dr. Patrick's new Version in his Family Devotions, observed (as I heard himself relate the passage) that a Servant-Maid of a musical Voice was silent for several Days together. He asked her the Reason, whether she were not well, or had a Cold, adding that he was much delighted to hear her because she sung sweetly and kept the Rest in Tune. I am well enough in Health, said she, and have no Cold, but, if you must needs know the plain Truth of the Matter, as long as you sung Jesus Christ's Psalms, I sung along with ye, but now you sing Psalms of your own Invention, you may sing by yourselves."

The other day came a tapping at my study door. I thought of Poe's Raven, and sternly demanded, "Who is there?" But it was certainly not the evil bird which answered in the sweetest of voices, if with an absence of logical connection, "Please, Mr. X., may I come in?" The owner of the voice followed it into the room, and my friend W.'s pretty niece and housekeeper, Evalina, stood before me. She seemed in trouble, poor child—was, in fact, so full of it that she could not wait for me to ask how she did. "Oh! Mr. X., I fear Uncle is in a bad way. I have just read that the influenza sometimes leaves temporary insanity behind it, and the poor dear has been writing more and worse doggerel than I can ever remember. I find it all over the house, but he goes on scribbling, and often laughs aloud at his own lines, which appears to me symptomatic of very grave delusions. I have brought you one of the worst examples. May I read it?" "Certainly, my dear." "It is called 'The Paper Chasers,' and there are six stanzas; but oh! Mr. X., some of his pieces contain sixty!"—

As I was out a-walking,
All in the month of May,
I met a schoolboy hasting,
And thus to him did say:
"Pray, tell me, gentle schoolboy,
Why 'tis you run so fast?
Such puffing and such panting
In reason cannot last."

"Oh, sir," said he, "I pray you
Do not my steps arrest:
If you're an Ancient Mariner,
I'm not a Wedding Guest.
Look here now, guv'nor, loose me,
For I must hasten on;
It is a chase of paper,
And prizes may be won."

With glittering eye I held him:
"Why hunt such game, my boy?"
"There's that upon the paper
Which is my sweetest joy."
"And what may it be, youngster,
You so desire to get?"
Said he, "Oh, bother! letters
Of the Roman alphabet."

I answered, as I marvell'd,
"On me try not your games!"
"Oh, that be blowed! the letters
We tacks 'em to our names.
Jones Minor's got a Mus. Bac.,
Bloggs is a F.C.O."
"And what are you?" I queried:
He hung his head full low;

Then blushed and said, "I'm nothing;
Leastways, I am Mus. Doc.,
But all the big boys jeer me,
And at my letters mock.
They call me 'Low Toronto'!—
But you should note the glee
With which, on meeting Muggins,
I cry, 'Yah! L.T.C.!'

"Fights!! I just should think so;
A ring each afternoon,
And often in the evening,
When shines the orbèd moon.
Yet still we chase the letters—
O do, Sir, let me be,
For there, in reach most easy,
Are L. and M. and C."

Evalina handed me the wretched paper with a flushed face. "My love," said I, "this looks very serious. As a composition it is only fit for the Hanwell Padded-Room Gazette, but the subject is a worse sign. A poem on the chase of alphabetical letters, forsooth! That way, assuredly, madness lies." "Dear Mr. X.," cried the pretty lass, "what is to be done?" "We shall see," I answered, "but that parcel in your hand! More pièces de conviction?" "No," replied Evalina, "it is a book containing scores and scores of ballads from the Catnach Press. Poor Uncle 'picked it up,' he said, down in town, and since then has grown steadily worse." "That explains much," I interrupted, "he was always impressionable, and I noticed in his 'Paper Chasers' a flavour of Catnach, without the unconscious humour." "I have brought the book to you," resumed my young friend, "because I know you will keep it out of Uncle's way." "That, indeed, I will," was my reassuring answer; "Now run home, like a good girl, and look after poor Uncle. I will call round in the evening and see into his mental condition."

Evalina departed, all smiles, not suspecting that I had hurried her away in order to dip into Catnach myself. No need for alarm, friendly reader. I am not impressionable and never write verse.

"An illustrated song-book, indeed!" I murmured, as leaf after leaf of the album in which Catnach's effusions had been pasted was turned. "O Fletcher of Saltoun, if the people's songs be mightier than the parliament's laws, this is an instructive volume." The collection was made, I should say, by a patriotic Irishman, and the fact, if it be one, may help to explain the first curious thing that struck me—namely, the survival in those ballads of the Napoleonic legend. Napoleon must have strongly moved the imagination of the Irish Celts by his dazzling achievements, and excited their sympathy by his hostility to England. Hence, perhaps, the survival aforesaid. One song is entitled "Napoleon's Farewell to Paris." It has two verses of introduction into which the author, as may frequently be found, brings as many classical names as possible, and slings words about with less regard to sense than sound. Here is the second stanza:—

At eve when Centaur does retire, while the ocean gilds like fire,
And the Universe admires our merchandise and store,
Commanding Flora's fragrance, the fertile field to decorate,
To illuminate that Royal Corsican again on the French shore.

In the third Stanza, Napoleon himself speaks, thus describing himself—

My name's Napoleon Bonaparte, the conqueror of nations,
I've banished German legions, and drove Kings from their throne,
I've trampled dukes and earls and splendid congregations,
Though they have now transported me to St. Helena's shore.

The illustrious speaker goes on to protest that the cause of his downfall was not parting from his consort. He traces it rather to meddling with the house of God, "whence coin and golden images by thousands away I tore." He firmly believes that he was "sold" on the 18th day of June, nevertheless he has the consolations of memory—

I'm an allied oak, with fire and sword I made them smoke
I've conquered Dutch and Danes, and surprised the grand Signor,
I've defeated Austrians and Russians, both Portuguese and Prussians,
Like Joshua, Alexander, or Cæsar of yore.

In another song (headed by a rough cut of the Prince of Wales as a youth) Napoleon is represented as appearing in a dream. He is "clad in green," with the trumpet of fame in his hand, and on his brow valour and vigour. Here the conqueror poses as the champion of liberty—

As a soldier, I bore both the heat and the cold,
I marched with the trumpet and cymbal,
By the dark deeds of treachery I have been sold,
Though monarchs before me did tremble.
On the plains of Marengo I tyranny hurled,
Wherever my banner the eagle unfurled,
'Twas the standard of freedom all over the world,
And a signal of war, cried Napoleon.

The most curious of these ditties is one entitled "Young Napoleon; or, the Bonny Bunch of Roses," sung to the tune of "The Bunch of Rushes, O." Here the narrator, wandering abroad "one morning in the month of June," espied a female,

Seemingly in grief and woe,
And conversing with young Bonaparte
Concerning the bonny bunch of roses, O!

The female turns out to be the Empress Marie Louise, and by the bonny bunch of roses we are to understand the British Isles. Young Bonaparte is, of course, the Duc de Reichstadt. The youth begs his mother to have patience until he is old enough to command an army—

I will raise a terrible army,
And through tremendous dangers go,
And in spite of all the universe,
I will gain the bonny bunch of roses, O!

He proceeds to explain that his father lost the roses through the Russian campaign, and at this point his mother interrupts—

Now, son, ne'er speak so venturesome,
For England is the heart of oak,
England, Ireland, and Scotland,
Their unity has ne'er been broke.
And, son, look at your father,
In St. Helena his body lies low,
And you will follow after,
So beware of the bonny bunch of roses, O!

Upon this, with startling abruptness, the Duke proceeds to take farewell of his mother in the character of a moribund—

So, mother, adieu for ever,
Now I am on my dying bed,
If I had lived I should have been clever,
But now I droop my youthful head.
For while our bones do moulder,
And weeping willows o'er us grow,
The deeds of bold Napoleon,
Concerning the bonny bunch of roses, O!

The condition of the sheets upon which these songs are printed indicates that they are a comparatively recent issue, and it is certainly strange to find the legend of the Napoleons existing deep down among the masses of the people, to whose imagination it must, therefore, strongly appeal.

I shall return to Catnach, provided the book can be kept from W.

Since writing as above with reference to the "Easter Hymn" and Worgan, I have received an important letter from Mr. Colin Mackenzie, of Dolphinton, N.B., who pretty clearly makes it plain that Worgan had nothing to do with the tune ascribed to him:—

On reading your delightful article in The Musical Times of the 1st inst., I was much interested in your remarks on the tune usually set to "Easter Hymn," and struck with the similarity of the melody there given and the one in our Scottish Hymnal (Edition revised to May, 1889).

The author or source there given is "Lyra Davidica, 1708." On observing this divergence of opinion between you, "Y.," and the Scottish Hymnal editor, I applied to the recently published work of James Love, Falkirk, on "Scottish Church Music: its Composers and Sources," and transcribe what he says on "Easter Hymn":—

"'Easter Hymn,' No. 54 (First Tune), S. H., is in the above work [he is here speaking of the 'Lyra Davidica'], harmonised in two parts (treble and bass), and set to the hymn 'Jesus Christ is risen to-day.' It is erroneously assigned in many collections to Dr. Worgan, who was not born in 1708. It is found in Comforth Gilson's Collection, published at Edinburgh in 1759. This is probably one of its earliest appearances in a Scottish collection. . . ."

Love says the "Lyra Davidica" was published in London in 1708.

If it be true that authors of hymns would be wise to learn something about music, it is certainly equally true that church composers would be wise to give some attention to the history of the hymns they are so frequently called upon to set. The literature

* "A Dictionary of Hymnology." Setting forth the Origin and History of Christian Hymns of all Ages and Nations. Edited by the Rev. John Julian. (London: John Murray.)

on this subject, if not absolutely meagre, has hitherto been so disjointed and scattered that only a specialist could afford the time to gather it together for study. Of course all who are interested in hymns (and who is not?) know well the volume "Singers and Songs of the Church," by Josiah Miller, published by Longmans about twenty-five years ago. But valuable as this is, not only for its interesting contents, but also as suggesting the lines on which a more exhaustive work might be constructed, since it was written, much additional information has been gathered together by the numerous committees or individuals who have had the responsibility of issuing hymnals. It was natural, therefore, in the ordinary course of events, that someone should come forward and try to bring within the limits of a book of reference the enormous mass of facts which surround our national hymnology. It is impossible to give too much credit to the Rev. John Julian for his courage in facing such a task, or too much praise for the admirable manner in which he has fulfilled it. The result of his labours is a volume of 1,600 pages, closely printed, abounding with facts of the greatest interest. People talk of the romance of hymn tunes and their composers, but the romance of hymns and their authors is not a whit the less thrilling and fascinating. The extent of the area of this field of literature may perhaps be grasped when one reads that probably 400,000 hymns have been written in, or translated into, languages of not less than 200 in number. The Germans have contributed the largest number, then come, in numerical order, the English, Latin, and Greek hymns. Also, it must not be forgotten that hymns are distinctly cosmopolitan: no sooner has an author written a beautiful hymn in his own native tongue than some sympathetic reader belonging to another nation is caught by its spirit and strives forthwith to produce a translation for the benefit of his fellow-countrymen. This constant interchange of religious sentiment is in itself deeply romantic and touching. But the romance of hymnology presents to us another phase not less remarkable; it is this—the successful hymn-writer is not always to be found on the roll of famous authors or poets; some of our most cherished and beautiful hymns have been left to us by comparatively unknown persons, men and women whose only qualifications have been a warm heart, a deep sense of religion, and a keen appreciation of that simple rhythmic motion which constitutes the primary essence of stanzas which are destined to live in the hearts of a people. All practical musicians have had some unpleasant experience of the difficulty of setting to music words, which, full of rich thought, are often expressed in such irregular rhythm that our art has refused to lend itself to their interpretation. Herein lies the secret of the failure of many writers endowed with real and undoubted poetic gifts when they have posed as authors of hymns. A true hymn is not necessarily a poem; a veritable poem is generally unuseable as a hymn. Even such an exquisite lyric as "Lead, kindly Light," is far from satisfactory when viewed as a hymn; and perhaps it is not unfair or untrue to say that no composer has yet succeeded in finding a genuine musical rhythm in which to clothe it. Perhaps this distinction between poems and hymns is better illustrated by the works of Keble than any other author. The "Christian Year"—a storehouse of charming imagery, the outgrowth of a complete mastery of Christian symbolism, and burning with religious fervour—has provided comparatively few stanzas suitable for hymns; and many sets of words appropriate to the Church seasons, which are found in the "Christian Year" as poems, are so ill adapted for hymns that their place has been necessarily supplied for our hymn books by hands less gifted with poetic skill. But a most important fact hangs upon this—namely, that the people (as represented by editors and those who know popular wants) actually alter the words of a set of stanzas, if by so doing a lyric may be moulded into the shape required for general use. We shall probably never hear our congregations at Christmas sing—

Hark, how all the welkin rings,
Glory to the King of kings.

simply because very few children have the least notion what a "welkin" is, and it is quite possible that many grown-up people would be glad to turn out the word in Skeat's Dictionary. And yet "Hark, the herald angels sing" is not quite satisfactory; heralds precede an approach; the heavenly host sang after the Nativity. In the same hymn, the original lines—

Pleased as Man with men to appear,
Jesus, our Immanuel here, are certainly not good; "with men t'appear," and the treatment of "Immanuel" as a word of only three syllables, are decided blemishes. Can any one doubt that the accepted version is better?—

Pleased as Man with man to dwell,
Jesus our Emmanuel.

Take another instance. In the beautiful hymn "Lord, in this Thy mercy's day," Izaak Williams wrote—

Supplication on us pour,
Let us now knock at the door, &c.

Surely the accepted version is far better—

Lord on us Thy Spirit pour,
Kneeling lowly at the door, &c.

although it must be owned that the original simile is here partially lost. When once a change is deemed advisable it is curious to note the number of emendations which are issued from time to time. In the well-known hymn "Hail to the Lord's Anointed," J. Montgomery wrote the following closing line—

His Name, what is it? Love.

No one can possibly defend this line as portion of a hymn; but here are the changes to which this line has been subjected in various books—

That Name to us is Love.
His holiest Name is Love.
His great, best Name of Love.
Jesus, sweet Name of Love.
The one great Name of Love.
His changeless Name of Love.

Perhaps one of the most remarkable cases of a hymn being "editorially constructed," if one might be allowed the expression, is found in "Blest are the pure in heart." The four stanzas usually found in our Hymnals consist of two by Keble (selected from a poem of seventeen stanzas) and two by an editor. The first and third stanzas are the originals, and the other two (which are certainly very meritorious) are said to have been submitted to Keble for his approval. Another hymn, which has undergone the most extraordinary changes is C. Wesley's

Hail the day that sees Him rise,
Ravish'd from our wistful eyes.

The original was first published in 1739, after which it appeared in a great many very different shapes until 1820, when it was published by Cotteril in five stanzas, altered considerably by him, but very nearly what we now use; but the hymn still wanted its crowning beauty, the addition of "Hallelujah" to each line. This was done in 1852 by the Rev. G. C. White. The beautiful hymn, "The sun is sinking fast," is a translation, by Caswall, from the Latin "Sol præceps rapitur, proxima nox adest"; but the original Latin words have been irrevocably lost; great efforts have been made to find them, but in vain.

The study of hymns gives a highly important insight into the theological condition of thought in special periods, and also into the poetic sentiment from time to time. With the former it is not our province to meddle, but as a specimen of morbid realism perhaps no hymn ever surpassed that published in 1746 by Charles Wesley in his "Funeral Hymns." It has been eliminated from most of our modern collections but still retains its hold in certain quarters. The first stanza will suffice for quotation:—

Ah! lovely appearance of Death,
What sight upon earth is so fair?
Not all the gay pageants that breathe
Can with a dead body compare.
With solemn delight I survey
The corpse when the spirit is fled;
In love with the beautiful clay,
And longing to lie in its stead.

The tune to this, appropriately termed "Funeral," two copies of which are before us, is as dismal as the author of the words could have desired. As an example of clumsy word-painting perhaps the following stands unrivalled; it is from Madan's Collection (Fifth Edition, 1767), and is entitled "Jonah's Prayer." Here are the first two stanzas:—

Aloud I cried, aloud I prayed,
When in the Fish's Belly laid,
And Hell's deep gloom I saw:
The foaming billows dashed around,
But, oh, more awful still I found
The terrors of Thy law.

The sea-weeds wrapt about my head,
The hoary deep Thy wrath displayed,
And still increased my fear:
Wave followed wave with dreadful noise,
And seemed to drown my feeble voice,
But yet my God could hear.

A whole volume might be written on the various attempts at throwing the Psalms into metre. A good example of the change, one might almost say evolution, of poetic conception and treatment of the same ideas is to be found in the innumerable versions of Psalm xxiii. (The Lord is my Shepherd). Most of us can recall the quaint stanzas of Sternhold and Hopkins—

The Lord is only my support,
And He that doth me feed:
How can I then lack anything
Whereof I stand in need?
He doth me fold in coats most safe,
The tender grass fast by;
And after drives me to the streams
That run most pleasantly.

Passing by numerous versions, all of them interesting, we can point to Addison's noble and dignified rendering, a landmark in our literature—

The Lord my pasture shall prepare,
And feed me with a Shepherd's care;
His presence shall my wants supply,
And guard me with a watchful eye;
My noonday walks He shall attend,
And all my midnight hours defend.

It would be thought that after this no one would essay another version of this Psalm; but there steps in here a modern hymnologist, but lately laid to his rest (Sir H. Baker), whose exquisite rendering has become a household treasure—

The King of Love my shepherd is,
Whose goodness faileth never;
I nothing lack if I am His
And He is mine for ever.

Where streams of living water flow
My ransomed soul He leadeth,
And, where the verdant pastures grow,
With food celestial feedeth.

Enough has been said to show the mass of interesting facts which are brought together in this "Dictionary of Hymnology," but in addition to information as to the history and origin of every hymn, there are to be found admirable articles on Latin, Dutch, Greek, Italian, and English Hymnody, English Psalters, and other kindred subjects, full of the results of patient research. To the musician many thoughts are suggested by its pages—for example, the alteration of hymns to suit public taste or wants, bears a strong analogy to the gradual changes which many of our old English Psalm Tunes have undergone since their first appearance. From time to time purists spring up who, scandalised with the liberties editors have taken with the words, have proposed to go back in every case to the originals, purely and simply; but it is soon found that in many, probably in the majority of cases, the changes are improvements. Of course some editors have manipulated the texts with an unjustifiable and wanton hand, and if space permitted we could give some interesting and amusing examples of such ruthless "improvements"; but sooner or later the fact must be recognised that church-goers claim their right to have a voice in the construction of their hymns, just as much as the masses assumed a right to construct their political ballads. Musical purists also turn up from time to time who call aloud for the old English tunes to be restored to their original shape. But here, too, it is soon found that many of our most favourite tunes have been vastly improved by popular consent. Look at the awkward rhythm of the old editions and say candidly if you do not think them unbearable musically, useless practically! We heartily recommend this Dictionary to those who rightly value the many-sided importance of hymns as a comfort to the weary, a code of theology to the simple-minded, a source of communion with God to the devout worshipper, and, to all, a friendly hand and guide through the complicated and dark mazes of life. BROKEN MUSIC.

A few weeks since an enquiry respecting the meaning of "broken music" appeared in Notes and Queries. Shakespeare frequently refers to "broken music"; for example, in Henry V. we find: "Come, your answer in broken music; for thy voice is music, and thy English broken: therefore, queen of all, Katharine, break thy mind to me in broken English." In "As you like it": "But is there anyone else longs to see this broken music in his sides"; and again, in "Troilus and Cressida": "Fair Prince, here is good broken music." In all these instances it is manifest Shakespeare was punning on a well-known and generally accepted musical term. Broken simply meant in parts, or parts of a whole. It was used by various authors in describing the administration of doles in the shape of "broken meat." The late Mr. William Chappell wrote: "Broken music means the music of stringed instruments, in contradistinction to those played by wind. The term originated probably from harps, lutes, and such other stringed instruments as were played without a bow, not having the capability to sustain a long note to its full duration of sound." Subsequently Mr. Chappell changed his opinion, and concluded that "broken music" meant the combination of stringed and wind instruments. Sir George Macfarren adopted this view, and wrote: "It was the custom in this country in earlier times to assort the viols together, hautboys together, shawms together, and a class of one instrument was called a consort; thus there might be a consort of viols, or a consort of hautboys; and at that time it was rare, but not entirely unknown, to have a mixture of one consort with another consort: and there is a passage of Lord Bacon's which refers to the mixture of one consort with another, and then it had the name of broken music." Sir George Macfarren seems, however, to have mis-read Lord Bacon, for the passage referred to, from his "Essay of Masques and Triumphs," runs thus: "I understand it that the song be in the quire, placed aloft, and accompanied with some broken musicke." Surely this is not difficult of comprehension: the "song in the quire" was the vocal music—the singing; and the "broken music" was the accompaniment in parts by various instruments, so described to distinguish it from an accompaniment on a keyboard instrument, such as the organ or spinet. In "Troilus and Cressida" there is a passage immediately preceding the quotation given above, which explains "broken music." We read, "What music is this?" and the reply is, "I do but partly know, sir; it is music in parts." It seems, therefore, that in Shakespeare's time instrumental part-music was popularly known as "broken music"; but that there was a more strict use of the term by musicians is evident from a remarkable manuscript volume in the handwriting of the celebrated Matthew Locke. This interesting book is a tall folio bound in calf with the arms of King Charles II. on the covers, and contains compositions by Locke, given by him to the King. The title in the composer's autograph is as follows: "Compositions for Broken and Whole Consorts, of two, three, four, five and six parts, made by Matthew Locke, Composer in Ordinary to his Majestye." A "consort" consisted of six viols, usually kept in one case, and when the whole of the viols were played together it was called a "whole consort," when less than the six it was called a "broken consort." This is exemplified by the various pieces in Locke's volume. The duets are written for two bass viols, the three-part compositions for two treble viols and a bass, and the six-part pieces for the whole "consort."

W. H. C.

Rubinstein, in his recently-published brochure, regards the steady increase in the numbers of female musicians as one of the signs of the decline of his art. He denies to them the principal requisites, both as interpreters (excepting as vocalists) and as composers. "It is a puzzle to me," he says, "that music—of all the creations of the mind of man the noblest, most beautiful, most refined, and most spiritual—is so unattainable by woman, who is a compound of all these qualities." Here, indeed, is an adroit blending of depreciation and eulogy. But the contention that women are unable to achieve distinction as composers will be very keenly challenged. At the present moment women are as numerously represented in the department of song-writing as in that of fiction. The Mendelssohn scholarship has twice been won of late years by women—Miss Maude V. White and Miss Marie Wurm—Miss Agnes Zimmermann is known as a composer of songs and pianoforte music, the compositions of Alice Mary Smith (Mrs. Meadows White) have been welcomed by choral societies, and the instrumental compositions of Miss Ethel Smythe have been heard in the course of the last two seasons at the Crystal Palace and Henschel Concerts. In France women composers are worthily represented by Madame Augusta Holmès and Mdlle. Chaminade. The latter has won recognition chiefly as a writer of songs and pianoforte music, but has also essayed the higher walks of orchestral composition. Madame Holmès, who, though of Irish parentage, was born in Paris, has a predilection for working on a large canvas. She has composed several dramatic symphonies which have been produced at the Pasdeloup Concerts and those of the Conservatoire, and has now just completed a musical drama in four acts, entitled "La Montagne Noire," which will possibly see the light at the Opéra. Madame Holmès, we may add, has just been interviewed by the Indépendance Belge on the occasion of her visit to Brussels, where selections from some of her principal works have been brought to a successful hearing. She describes herself as having "a man's soul in a woman's body," and attributes her fondness for chivalric subjects to the education given her by her father, who was a "rough old soldier." Her chief musical instructor was César Franck, and she had the good fortune of making the acquaintance of Wagner, whom she regards as "the greatest and most fertile of melodists." Madame Holmès is an ardent Wagnerian, not only in principle but in practice, for she has always written her own librettos.

The programme of the next Leeds Festival is now practically complete. Here it is:—Wednesday morning—"Elijah" (Mendelssohn). Wednesday evening—Cantata (written for the Festival) "The Egyptian Maid" (F. H. Cowen); Symphony in F, No. 8 (Beethoven); Overture, "Le Carnaval Romain" (Berlioz). Thursday morning — Requiem Mass (Mozart); Psalm, "When Israel out of Egypt came" (Mendelssohn); Symphony—written for the Festival—(Frederic Cliffe). Thursday evening—Selection from "Die Meistersinger" (Wagner); Ballad for Orchestra, "La belle Dame sans merci" (A. C. Mackenzie); Selection, "Tempest" (Sullivan); Overture. Friday morning—Mass in B minor (Bach). Friday evening—Symphony in B flat, No. 1, "Spring" (Schumann), or Schubert's Symphony in C; Short Cantata, "Arethusa," first performance (Alan Gray). Saturday morning—Psalm (in 12 parts), "De Profundis" (Hubert Parry); Cantata, "Song of Destiny" (Brahms); Dramatic Cantata, "Spectre's Bride," to be again considered (Dvorák). Saturday evening—Selection (Handel); Symphony-Cantata, "Hymn of Praise," "Lobgesang" (Mendelssohn). The most noticeable feature in the scheme is the paucity of new works. There are but three—Mr. Cowen's Cantata, Mr. Cliffe's Symphony, and Mr. Alan Gray's short piece, "The Arethusa"—in all less than three hours' music. We do not grumble. In former years Leeds attempted too much. "Elijah" returns to its old place at the head of the programme, but "The Messiah," which it was at one time proposed to reinstate, is still "out in the cold." The other selections call for no remark. The Festival Chorus has been gathered from six West Riding towns, Leeds contributing 109, Bradford 53, Huddersfield 53, Halifax 53, Dewsbury 33, Wakefield 12. Total, 313. All this is for the better.

We are glad to find a clergyman standing up, in the columns of the Morning Post, for the village church orchestras of half-a-century ago; or, rather, for the principle their existence involved. He writes: "Those of your readers who can look back to fifty years ago will remember how in almost every country village there was a local orchestra, which has since been banished by the general introduction of the organ and harmonium. It is the fashion to regard the musical performances of those days as uncouth and grotesque, and it is true that in many places the discords were predominant over the harmonies, and that the effect produced was calculated rather to diminish than to increase the devotion of the worshippers. Yet there was a heartiness in it all which we sometimes miss nowadays; and it is certain that in our country villages to-day the most staunch and regular in their church attendance among the older inhabitants are, many of them, those who in their younger days belonged to the church orchestra. Since those days there has been a very marked advance in musical knowledge and culture all over the Kingdom, and not only are there many more who would be glad to give their help in the Church Services, but instructors are more easily procurable, music is cheaper, and the performances of even a village orchestra would be much more artistic than in those bygone days."

Amongst the new instruments recently advertised by Messrs. Besson and Co. there is one to which the attention of musicians should be particularly directed. This is called the "Pedal Clarionet," and is a B flat clarinet sounding two octaves below the normal pitch. Writers for the orchestra have long felt the want of an instrument of rounder tone than the contra-fagotto for the bass of the wood-wind. The bass clarinet is a great gain in this respect, and it certainly seems as if the new instrument would complete the family of single-reed instruments most effectively. But how enormously difficult it is to get any novelty of this kind taken up! Orchestral Concerts mainly concern themselves with the works of the old masters, who have not written for the new instrument; while if a modern composer were to write for it he would only render his work difficult of acceptance, unless he were a man of the very front rank. Wherefore, gentlemen composers of the very front rank, we look to you to give inventors of new instruments a chance. Do not persistently write for the same combinations of instruments as Beethoven happened to have at his command, but bethink you whether your next Symphony might not be effective with tubas instead of trombones, with six varieties of clarinets, with bass flutes, or twelve horns, or at least something new in tone-colour.

The London committee in connection with the forthcoming International Musical and Dramatic Exhibition (Vienna) are at last doing something. One of these gentlemen writes to a friend: "We are at the eleventh hour, but still in time. The cause of delay has been want of funds; only lately we have learnt that Vienna can only contribute a comparatively small sum towards the expenses. Baron Ferdinand de Rothschild has come to the rescue by initiating an English subscription which enables us to go on. We have not yet the £2,000 we want, but expect that sum at least will be secured. Subscriptions are payable to Coutts's, 59, Strand, to the account of the English Fund of the Vienna International Musical and Dramatic Exhibition. The Queen has headed the list with £50, as has been announced in public advertisements. Intending exhibitors who have not received invitations may apply to Mr. A. J. Hipkins, 33, Great Pulteney Street, as one of the Honorary Secretaries of the British Loan Section. I ought to add that we are concerned with a loan collection only. The original proposal to arrange for choral, orchestral, and dramatic representations, requiring much more money than we can possibly hope to raise, has been definitely abandoned."

That an accurately balanced appreciation of the present is impossible without a knowledge of the past is a proposition to which doubtless most persons would willingly assent. That this knowledge is not always easy to acquire is equally obvious. In our own art valuable help is being afforded almost every day, not only by the performance of music long since forgotten and very unjustly ignored, but by lectures in which the musical life of olden time is vividly brought before us. The Gresham Lectures, noticed in another column, are of course an instance in point; as another, may be mentioned Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's admirable Lecture on the beginnings of the Modern Orchestra, read before a large and attentive audience on the 3rd ult., at the London Institution, Finsbury Circus. Dr. Mackenzie's clear delivery and the spice of dry humour which flavoured the whole Lecture were much appreciated, and the photographic reproductions of a number of quaint old woodcuts, shown by means of a magic-lantern, created much interest. This Lecture was the first of a series given last summer at the Royal Institution, reports of which will be found in The Musical Times for June and July last.

A large and influential gathering of prominent members of the military and musical professions took place on the 25th ult. in the Banqueting House, Whitehall, on the occasion of a Lecture on Military Band Organisation by Colonel Shaw-Hillier, who pleaded eloquently for certain reforms and improvements. Among other things, he suggested that the status of Army bandmasters should be raised by offering them commissions, and that they should be more in touch with the musical profession; that military bands should be heard in public much more frequently, and that they should also be "inspected." Colonel Shaw-Hillier's views were received with every sign of sympathy by the distinguished company addressed, who were afterwards regaled with a performance, by the Kneller Hall Band, of military Marches ranging from the seventeenth century to the present day, the earlier ones being played on the instruments for which they were written: cornetti, serpents, flutes douces, &c. General Sir Daniel Lysons, G.C.B., presided at the Lecture, which was given under the auspices of the Royal United Service Institution.

In a long and interesting letter to the Manchester Guardian, àpropos of Miss Wakefield's Lectures on the National Music of these islands, Dr. Hiles recently expressed his sympathy with that lady's "wish that earnest efforts may be made to increase the general admiration of our glorious stock of national songs," and instanced as a hopeful sign "the feeling among some of our most progressive composers that in our folk-music we have not only reliable historic evidence of the early artistic fertility of our countrymen, but a noble heritage upon which we must draw as from an almost inexhaustible melodic store, and from which we may derive guidance and inspiration for the future." Such words do good service; British music-lovers generally would do well to take them to heart.

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

Mr. Claude R. Low desires to initiate a "short correspondence" in our columns on the art of transposing, he being anxious, to quote his own words, "to hear of anyone gifted as myself, or meet them and test if necessary." We would start such a correspondence at once were it at all probable that evidence would be forthcoming as to the existence of Mr. Low's equal. At present we can only allow our correspondent to set forth his own gifts. He says: "I have met with considerable praise from good musicians on this point (transposing), and not wishing to put myself unduly forward, or boast, I do say I have never met anyone yet whom I could not far surpass. I am strictly an amateur, young, and self-taught—never having had but twelve lessons in my life (which, by-the-bye, did me no good). I do not play classical music, but go in entirely for accompanying. I think it would be truth to say I could play, and without music too, any hymn or secular song that I knew in any key—and few songs are unknown to me. For instance, I was accompanying at a Concert the other evening, and 'The Lost Chord' was given as a cornet solo. Everyone knows the original key of this, F, and without music I transposed it to G to suit the pitch of the cornet. Many other instances I could give you." We will take the rest for granted.

A correspondent calls attention to the following advertisement:—"Wanted, at once, gentleman as Organist, and to help Vicar as Sacristan and Secretary. To live in vicarage, and receive £15 per annum. Gregorian music; small organ; fairly good choir. Country church. Catholic required. Fairly good player and good accompanist. Address, Vicar, Bishop Frome, Worcester." We should like to know the Vicar of Bishop Frome, because it must be that when a Christian minister offers £15 per annum, with board and lodging, for an Organist, Sacristan, and Secretary, a fairly good player and a good accompanist, he himself must be a self-denier—one of those who are "passing rich on forty pounds a year." We wonder how much the reverend vicar offers his kitchen-maid. But it would be still more interesting to meet with the man—no, the "gentleman"—who would apply for the post. He, good sooth, must be Goldsmith's pattern of content—

> Happy the man who, void of care and strife,
> In silken or in leathern purse retains
> A good old shilling.

Sport, Music, and Drama (U.S.A.) publishes a list of women who go a-fishing and women who shoot. Miss Lillian Russell is in the first class: "Miss Lillian Russell holds a record for big muskalonge catching in the waters of the Thousand Islands. She went out camping last summer on her vacation, and spent most of the time in taking big fish and gathering odd wild flowers, leaves, plants, and vines. During her outing she boated the largest muskalonge of the summer of 1891, and is said to have hooked, played, and landed the monster without the least assistance from her boatman, although the fair diva had never before cast a line. The boatman was never more surprised in his life, and he hasn't yet gotten over the inclination to talk excitedly about the incident. Some persons were mean enough to say Miss Russell caught the big fish with 'the silver hook' to advertise herself, but this is not true. Fully a dozen anglers in surrounding boats saw the play. Miss Russell is now a devoted rodster."

Our typical provincial critic appears to be staying at Eastbourne for the benefit of his health, which we hope, in the interest of a world that needs enlivening, will soon be re-established. Passing the time away by noticing a Concert in a local paper, he spoke of Nikita's singing in "Haddock's immortal song 'The Soul's Awakening'" (who is Haddock?) and praised her "extraordinary compass and modulations." In this piece the violoncello and organ obbligato "were important elements, so much so, indeed, as to render it almost impossible to dispel the idea of an audience at all imaginative that they were not actually in the very shadow and within the sacred influences of some cathedral." We learn also that, in one of her songs, Nikita's "cachinations" were "exceedingly clever"; also that another vocalist sang an "amusing creation" by Bevan; also that some duettists "richly merited the plethora of applause again and again evoked." We beg Eastbourne to take good care of this priceless stranger within her gates.

The Bristol Musical Festival Society has just issued a record of its twenty years' work—an interesting document in many ways, particularly as showing the spread of musical education, and the admirable and long list of works of the highest class that have been given at the eighteen festivals and thirty-four intermediate Concerts held. The report thus concludes: "Self-supporting singing classes, in addition to the choir, under experienced and well-qualified teachers, were established in 1880 in every district in the city of Bristol wherever a sufficient number of pupils offered themselves. In order to place this course of instruction within the reach of all classes the fee was fixed at threepence per lesson. The results have been in every respect highly successful. Out of 3,126 pupils, 1,011 successfully passed examination, and obtained certificates for efficiency in singing at sight, in time and tune, and the fees received have covered the expenses incurred.'

Messrs. Parker and Smith, of Plymouth, are about to hold another competition in the sight-reading of pianoforte music, the prize being a pianoforte, value £50. The competition will take place on Tuesday, the 26th inst., with Mr. Franklin Taylor as umpire. On the last occasion the procedure was as follows: "At the time of competition, the candidates all assembled and inspected the seals of the parcels and the letters of guarantee. The parcels were then opened, and from them the umpires selected three for performance. The umpires having taken up their places behind a screen, where they were unable to see the candidates, the latter were shown into the room one at a time, and were allowed each a few moments to glance through the composition before attempting its performance. The other candidates waited their turns in a distant apartment, quite out of ear-shot."

The Committee of the Middlesbro' Musical Union have lately initiated a friendly competition among the members, which it is hoped will add interest to the Society's educational work. The questions bear on the music of the last Concert: 1. Which composition do you regard as having the highest musical value, "Rowing homewards" or "There is music on the river," and why? 2. Danby's Glee "Awake, Æolian Lyre," is said to exemplify the English School of Composition. What features in the Glee would you adduce in support of this? 3. Who was John Danby? 4. Need a "Glee" always be cheerful? Explain. 5. Point out the use of a certain contrapuntal device in Mendelssohn's "Early Spring." 6. Number the bars in "Eventide" and state in what key you consider each bar to be.—The idea is excellent as stimulating enquiry and research.

The musical features of the ceremonies dedicating the buildings of the World's Columbian Exposition, on October 12, will be as follows: March for orchestra (John K. Paine); Chorus, "The Heavens are telling," from the "Creation" (Haydn); March and Chorus, from "The Ruins of Athens" (Beethoven); Hallelujah Chorus, from "The Messiah" (Handel); Dedicatory Ode (words by Miss Harriet Munroe, music by George W. Chadwick). The March and the music to the Ode are to be written especially for the occasion.

The astounding statement recently made by a contemporary that "Wagner is not popular in Germany, except at Bayreuth," has been beaten by a Vienna paper, which affirms that, on a late occasion of "Siegfried" being performed there, Dr. Hans Richter, who conducted, was the only person in the whole theatre who did not yawn! Will Sir Augustus Harris take this to heart?

After Evensong at St. Luke's Church, New Kentish Town, on Sunday, the 13th ult., Mendelssohn's incidental music to Racine's "Athalie" was performed, the connecting verses being recited by Mr. Charles Fry, who, wearing cassock and surplice, spoke from the entrance to the choir. This is a new "forward movement," against which, always assuming its proper direction, we can see no objection.

In New York, lately, a "pretty, golden-haired, unaffected young girl," plink-plunked the melody of the "Tannhäuser" March on a banjo and won a double encore. And yet the Bostonians affect to look down from the heights of culture on the Empire City!

Apropos of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Philharmonic Society, of New York, which takes place during the present month, Messrs. Novello and Co. will shortly publish, in association with the Directors of the Society, a memorial record compiled by Henry Edward Krehbiel, the well-known New York critic.

In deference to a wish very generally expressed it has been decided to give a grand performance at the Crystal Palace of Handel's "Judas Maccabæus," on Handel Festival scale, instead of "Samson," the work previously announced for Saturday, June 25.

That graceless printer's boy has been "at it again." During dinner hour at the Finchley Telegraph office he changed "Cujus animam" into "Cugas ammam," and put down Handel as the composer of two songs from "Elijah."

We read in a transatlantic contemporary: "If there was a lingering doubt in anyone's mind now that Emma Eames is not a full fledged prima donna it should have been dissipated by the robbery of her jewels, to the tune of $2,000."

The performance of "Fra Diavolo," lately given by the students of the Guildhall School, will be repeated at the Lyric Theatre in the afternoon of May 10.

An American musical paper has just conveyed the idea that it does not agree with certain people by calling them "stupid, purblind idiots."

It appears that Italian and French opera is going to hold its ground in New York. The last season is said to have ended with a balance, on the right side, of 51,000 dollars.

It is pleasant to hear that Mr. John P. Jackson, the well-known New York critic, has recovered from a severe attack of pneumonia.

Again the printer's boy! This time it is "What (who) are these that are arranged (arrayed)?" and "And behold a thorn (throne) was set in heaven!"

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Few modern compositions have been subjected to such searching criticism as Gounod's "Redemption." After its enthusiastic reception at Birmingham in the autumn of 1882, it was speedily adopted by every choral association desirous of keeping pace with the times, so that from the outset ample opportunity was afforded for judging the work from divers aspects. Like most art products novel in form and in treatment, certain features were at first misunderstood, but the crucial test of frequent repetition has been borne so well that the popularity of the work is now firmly established. Convincing proof of this is given every Ash Wednesday, when its appropriateness to the Lenten season is endorsed by the numerous audience attending the performance by the Royal Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. Barnby. The attendance at the Royal Albert Hall, on the 2nd ult., was no exception to the rule. As usual there was the guarantee of an excellent interpretation, both as regards solo and choral elements. Long since the members of Mr. Barnby's choir, by attention to details of expression, evinced a special liking for the trilogy. On this occasion the dramatic passages were delivered with a precision and strength that accorded with the suggestions made by Gounod at the Birmingham rehearsals nearly ten years ago, whilst the execution of the more even choruses was equally meritorious. The triumphant strains of the "Ascension" chorus have never created a greater effect. Madame Nordica was in excellent voice, and therefore had no difficulty in renewing her wonted success in the beautiful air "From Thy love as a Father." Madame Belle Cole again sang sympathetically "While my watch I am keeping"; Mr. Watkin Mills gave with adequate dignity the phrases assigned to the Saviour, and in the music of the tenor Narrator Mr. Ben Davies displayed genuine taste. Miss Margaret Hoare was the assistant soprano, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint steadily rendered the recitatives of the bass Narrator. The picturesqueness of the orchestration was clearly but unobtrusively brought out under the bâton of Mr. Barnby.

The latest great sacred work of Antonín Dvorák was performed for the first time in London at the Royal Albert Hall on the 23rd ult., and metropolitan amateurs had then an opportunity of approving or reversing the judgment expressed at the Birmingham Festival of 1891. It must be added—not as a mere matter of fact, but as tending to strengthen the force of the decision pronounced—that circumstances were in some respects more favourable to a just opinion on the second occasion than on the first. The glamour of a great Festival, though of value in the encouragement of musical life, is not the best medium through which to look critically upon a new and strange composition. At Birmingham, moreover, owing to conditions which were sufficiently discussed at the time, the performance was not faultless as an exposition, and by its defects tended to set up a state of anxiety scarcely compatible with the existence of a judicial calm. Hence, in some measure, no doubt, the dubious attitude assumed by many connoisseurs towards the new work, and the formation of an opinion that music which could not successfully be given under the conditions of a Birmingham Festival could not well be given at all. The London performance, free from drawbacks of any kind, had a different result. None who heard it, we venture to say, left the Hall with misgivings either as to the musical value of the "Requiem" or as to the possibility of an adequate performance with the resources necessary in the case of any first-class work.

It is a plain duty to recognise the very important service rendered in this regard by Mr. Barnby and the executants he so carefully trained and so well led to victory. While believing not only that the "Requiem" is practicable, and that in a short time it will be familiar, we do not deny that it presents great difficulties. To ignore these would be to withhold fromMr. Barnby and his people the full credit which is their due. No doubt they had many serious difficulties to overcome, and in proportion to the labour and skill involved should be the praise given. Credit must be awarded to all concerned—to the Conductor, for great patience, enthusiasm, and skill; to the solo vocalists, Mesdames Nordica and Wilson, Messrs. Iver McKay and Watkin Mills, for complete mastery over a task made serious by music from which the conditions that ordinarily guide a singer are often absent; to the orchestra, for admirable playing under circumstances which placed almost every individual artist beneath a heavy weight of responsibility; and to the chorus, who came out of the struggle with drums beating and colours flying. It may be said that Conductor, soloists, and orchestra were professionals who are expected to master difficulties. True, though expectation is not always satisfied. But the chorus are amateurs taken from the great multitude of English people, who can give only the spare hours of busy lives to the divine art. This should be remembered, for it immensely increases the just claim of the Royal Choral Society to the full reward of a notable achievement. In fine, this performance of the Bohemian "Requiem" deserves to be set down as memorable, and as affording a splendid proof of what can be done when the persons concerned are determined to do it.

The attitude of the audience towards the performance was perfectly correct, every effort of special merit, whether by principals or chorus, being promptly recognised and applauded, while in the case of two numbers a repeat was asked for—of course vainly. As regards opinion upon the "Requiem" itself, we can only say that those who are most experienced in judging the indications afforded in such cases saw quite clearly that a deep impression had been made. The keen attention sustained, the profound silence and stillness observed, told a plain tale; saying that the force of Dvorák's art was felt and his mastery recognised. It follows that now the "Requiem" must begin to move. The time of probation has passed and another noble chef d'œuvre is admitted to the list of works which should be the common property of English music-lovers.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The inauguration of this Society's eightieth season by a Mozart Centenary Concert was a "happy thought." To be sure it should have come three months earlier, to satisfy the "up to date" cravings of the time, but otherwise its fitness needs no demonstration. The difficulty must have been to draw up a representative programme, the number of masterpieces available being so great; but the selection determined on left little room for adverse criticism. It comprised the G minor Symphony, the Concerto in C minor, the Overture to "Idomeneo," an Entr'acte from "King Thamos," and two vocal pieces. A bust of the master was in the place usually occupied by Beethoven, and the Ode written for the Centenary number of The Musical Times, by Mr. Joseph Bennett, was recited by Mr. Charles Fry with all possible effect. The pianist was Mr. de Greef, whose finished playing in the Concerto was much appreciated. The vocal pieces were rendered with much intelligence by Madame Valda, and Mr. Cowen conducted with his usual care.

A large audience attended this Society's second Concert, given in St. James's Hall on the 24th ult. The programme was, however, not beyond the average in point of attraction; almost the only commanding feature being Beethoven's Symphony in A (No. 7), which, however, might be regarded as a whole Concert in itself and, as such, enough to satisfy reasonable requirements. Amateurs, however, are not content with one dish, though it be of the choicest. With the splendid and immortal No. 7 were given Mr. F. Cliffe's Overture, or, as he prefers to call it, orchestral picture, "Cloud and Sunshine"; Schumann's Violoncello Concerto, played by Mr. de Munck; Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat (Mr. Sapellnikoff); Mendelssohn's "Trumpet" Overture, and two vocal pieces (Mr. Oudin). The compliment of a repetition performance was the just due of Mr. Cliffe's fanciful and pleasing music—a combination of strength and beauty such as, in his one Symphony, succeeded in instantly arresting attention and fixing upon the composer very flattering regards. It is clear that the work does not suffer by re-hearing, for the audience again gave to it unstinted applause. Schumann's Concerto rarely emerges from obscurity, where, truth to tell, it had better remain altogether. Apart from a short and quiet Schumannesque slow movement, the piece is dull and dry—manufactured, not inspired music. But, for that matter, who could expect Schumann to succeed in the manufacture of virtuoso music, save for his own instrument, the pianoforte? It is clear that the violoncello did not inspire him. Mr. de Munck played carefully and well, but the hero of the evening was Mr. Sapellnikoff, who found material for his virtuosity in the works of the chief of all virtuosi, and prospered accordingly. One need not approve the Concerto in E flat in order to appreciate the wonderful display of "advanced" pianism for which it afforded an opportunity. In point of strength, sure and agile technique, and, we must add, picturesque gymnastics, Mr. Sapellnikoff held his audience very firmly, and was rewarded by a demonstration of enthusiasm which bespoke honest admiration. The orchestra took its share of applause by a fine performance of the Symphony (Mr. Cowen's excellent conducting should be recognised), and Mr. Oudin did the best possible with a gloomy scena, "Der Einsame," by Grieg, and a voluptuous air, "Vision fugitive," from Massenet's "Hérodiade."

THE BACH CHOIR.

On Tuesday evening, the 22nd ult., in St. James's Hall, this Association performed Bach's great Mass in B minor, "Die hohe Messe," for the tenth time. The mere mention of the fact affords sufficient justification for the formation of the Society in 1876 and for its continued existence. It has done much excellent work, not only in reviving many neglected works by the great Leipzig composer, but in presenting modern compositions of the highest rank, which otherwise might not have been heard in London for years. The Bach Choir, however, will always be more or less identified with the B minor Mass, and in saying that the latest performance was one of the most generally satisfactory, we are giving no slight praise. In some respects the method of presentation has greatly improved since the first revival. It is no longer considered desirable to curtail or omit movements, and efforts have been made to restore the original orchestral effects, though with what success it is of course impossible to say. Thus, on the present occasion, the principal trumpet part, which ranges to D on the third space, was played by Mr. Morrow on the long instrument re-manufactured a few years ago in Germany, and the oboi d'amore parts were rendered on genuine instruments of this pattern by Messrs. Lebon and H. Smith. In mentioning individual members of the orchestra it would be unjust to omit reference to the artistic services rendered by Mr. Burnett, Mr. W. L. Barrett, and Mr. Borsdorf in the obbligato for violin, flute, and horn respectively. Making allowance for occasional unsteadiness, the very trying choruses were remarkably well rendered, and Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Houghton, and Mr. Watkin Mills made a thoroughly reliable quartet of principal vocalists. Professor Villiers Stanford conducted with the utmost care, and it should be added that before the performance Handel's Dead March from "Saul" was played as a tribute to the memory of the recently deceased composer, Mr. Arthur Goring Thomas.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

At the Concert given on February 27 Herr Hugo Becker was the instrumental soloist and introduced a Concertstück for violoncello and orchestra by Bazzini, a dull, though well made, piece of music. Herr Becker's fine tone was heard to great advantage in an Andante by Tartini and a Tarentelle by Popper, as an encore to which he gave an unaccompanied movement by Bach, with much effect. A fine performance of Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony was the most enjoyable feature in the programme, which also included Beethoven's "Leonora" Overture (No. 2) and the Overture to Cornelius's "Barber of Bagdad." Mr. Oudin, the vocalist, was not very happy in his choice of solos. The Templar's soliloquy from "Ivanhoe" is at the moment slightly hackneyed, while the elaborate scena, "Ludovico il Moro," by Mr. Herbert Bunning, proved a sad example of the results of vaulting ambition in music. It is only fair to the composer to say that the work had been imperfectly rehearsed and that the singer himself did not seem quite happy in his part.

Mr Hamish MacCunn's new Cantata "Queen Hynde of Caledon" was brought to a first hearing in England at the Concert of the 5th ult., with Miss Fillunger, Mr. Piercy, and Mr. Andrew Black as the representatives of Queen

Hynde, Uisnar, and Eric respectively. It cannot be said that Mr. MacCunn has succeeded in galvanizing into vitality the not very remarkable effusion of the Ettrick Shepherd. His music is clever and picturesque in places, but it does not reach the level of his earlier efforts—notably, the beautiful "Land of the Mountain and the Flood" Overture. The duet between the Queen and the Minstrel is effective and cleverly orchestrated, but Uisnar's improvisation is anything but convincing, while the realism of certain passages borders on the grotesque. Mr. MacCunn conducted his own work, of which a highly creditable performance was secured. The programme also included songs from the three vocalists already named, Mendelssohn's "Hebrides," and the Introduction to Act III. of "Lohengrin."

A very large audience was attracted to the Crystal Palace on the 12th ult., when Dr. Joachim introduced Max Bruch's Third Concerto, with much success. For his subsequent solos Dr. Joachim played three unaccompanied movements by Bach with incomparable beauty of style. The great event of the afternoon was the now annual performance of Schubert's C major Symphony, the enthusiasm aroused by which steadily increases at every repetition. Mr. Manns directed very fine performances both of the Symphony and Beethoven's "Coriolan" Overture, and was awarded a great ovation at the close of the Concert, which happened to fall on his birthday. Madame Hope Glenn was the vocalist, contributing an aria by Rossi and Brahms's "Wie bist du, meine Königin?" in very acceptable style.

On the 19th ult. Mr. Manns introduced a new Concerto from the pen of Mr. E. Silas, a gifted musician long resident in our midst, which, with the composer in charge of the solo part, met with a most cordial reception. The Concerto is in the orthodox three movements; the Finale, which is at once the most showy, but the least important section, being cast in the form of a Spanish Bolero. The opening Allegro is vigorous in character and marked by much constructive skill, the themes being well coined and cleverly treated. The slow movement opens effectively with a strain of an earnest and devotional type, the subsequent development of which is rather sentimental and disappointing. As for the Finale, it belongs more to the category of good ballet music than anything else. Mr. Silas played the solo part with great incisiveness and spirit and was heartily applauded at the conclusion. The Symphony was Beethoven's No. 2, of which an excellent interpretation was given, and a pleasing impression was made by some Norwegian melodies by Grieg, cleverly orchestrated by Hans Sitt. Mendelssohn's "Trumpet" Overture completed the scheme, but inasmuch as cornets were used, it might have been well to dispense with the above title in the programme. Madame Valda was the vocalist.

HIGHBURY PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

Mr. Betjemann's announcement that the "Rose of Sharon" would be given on the 14th ult. drew a large audience to the Highbury Athenæum. There is little cause for wonder in this gratifying sign of popularity. Those to whom the beauties of Dr. Mackenzie's Oratorio are best known have long ago made up their minds as to its claims on their esteem and affection: that the circle of its admirers would steadily widen until sooner or later it became synonymous with the musical public generally was, therefore, inevitable. "The Rose" has attained popularity more quickly than is usual in the case of works so unconventional in form and style—a proof that we are growing as a nation in quickness of musical perception. The performance on the occasion under notice was so full of good points, and so excellent as a whole, that we mention rather in praise than in exculpation of Mr. Iver McKay and Mr. Robert Grice that they undertook their parts at very short notice, the former owing to the illness of Mr. Piercy, the latter in place of Mr. Max Heinrich, who had not returned from America in time. Mesdames Nordica and Belle Cole undertook the parts of the Sulamite and A Woman, their efforts being received with hearty but always discriminating applause. The interest with which Dr. Mackenzie's work was followed was also a feature worthy of attention. It was patent that, to many, the performance was "as good as a play"—another argument for those who urge that, in latter-day oratorio, dramatic interest and variety are essential. The choral and instrumental forces under the command of Mr. Betjemann worked with right good will towards the excellent results attained, avoiding that excess of zeal which, perhaps more than anything, is calculated to make a Conductor nervous, and watchfully carrying out the wishes of their intelligent and energetic chief. We congratulate him.

FINSBURY CHORAL ASSOCIATION.

Holloway Hall was crowded to the doors on the 3rd ult., when this flourishing Society performed Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's "Dream of Jubal" and Dr. Gladstone's "Constance of Calais," both composers conducting their own works. Mr. Joseph Bennett's beautiful poem, enhanced by the finished elocutionary art of Mr. Charles Fry, was frequently applauded, and Dr. Mackenzie's music was received with even more than usual enthusiasm. North Londoners evidently know a good thing when they hear it—perhaps we ought to say "good things," for there are many in "The Dream of Jubal." To say nothing of the delicate orchestral commentary on the spoken text—in which the tact of the composer is admirably shown—there is the Funeral March and Chorus, which for mingled pathos and dignity will bear comparison with the greatest things of art; there is the magnificent "Gloria," in which the composer's well-known mastery over the difficult art of climax-building is so strikingly shown. Either of these would suffice to distinguish the "Dream" among contemporary productions. The soloists in both works were Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. Gordon Fletcher, and Mr. David Hughes. Dr. Gladstone's Cantata has suffered comparative neglect since its production some years ago at Highbury, and was therefore welcome. Its spirited orchestration and melodious charm were fully appreciated, and the work will now, no doubt, be heard more frequently.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

The first performance we have to notice this month is that of Saturday, February 27, when Mr. Schönberger was the pianist. Beethoven's Sonata in C (Op. 2, No. 3) is not perhaps the most interesting of the earlier Sonatas, but Mr. Schönberger brought out all its good points, playing throughout with welcome neatness, intelligence, and freedom from exaggeration. He was recalled three times, but wisely refused an encore. The concerted works were Beethoven's Quartet in E flat (Op. 74) and Schumann's Sonata in A minor, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 105), the leader being Mr. Straus. Miss Marian McKenzie's vocal selections were interesting. They comprised a new and deeply expressive song with violoncello obbligato, by Mr. Piatti, entitled "Far, far away," being a setting of words by the Poet Laureate, and a quaint sixteenth-century ditty, "At Parting," we believe from the pen of Jacob Birtley.

If the audience at the re-appearance of Dr. Joachim on the following Monday was not so large as usual, the greeting accorded to the great violinist was not less enthusiastic, and he proceeded to justify it by playing with almost all his pristine brilliancy and vigour. It is not too much to say that a finer performance of Beethoven's "Rasoumowsky" Quartet in F (Op. 59, No. 1) has never been heard in St. James's Hall. Max Bruch's expressive Romance in A minor and major (Op. 42) was also very finely played. Miss Agnes Zimmermann rendered Chopin's posthumous Nocturne in E minor and the Ballade in A flat with perfect refinement, affording a valuable lesson to young players; and Madame Isabel Fassett revived an air, "Ritornerai fra poco," by the once celebrated Hasse, in which, however, she was heard to less advantage than in Brahms's "Sapphische Ode" and Mr. Henschel's "The Sunny Beam," the last-named being a charming little song savouring of the old English style. The Concert ended with Haydn's vigorous Quartet in D minor (Op. 76, No. 2).

There was a great crowd at the Concert of Saturday, the 5th ult., but the performance does not call for lengthy notice. The concerted works were Mozart's ever-welcome Quintet in G minor and Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor (Op. 25), which for some reason is heard far more frequently than the finer companion work in A (Op. 26). Miss Ilona Eibenschütz, the pianist of the afternoon, gave a chaste if not striking interpretation of Chopin's Andante Spianato in G and the Polonaise in E flat (Op. 22), adding, by way of encore, Rubinstein's Romance in E flat. Dr. Joachim was also encored after his rendering of Leclair's favourite Sarabande and Tambourin. Mr. Hirwen Jones was acceptable in Songs by Schubert, Rubinstein, and Buononcini.

The Concert of Monday, the 7th ult., may also be briefly dismissed. The concerted works were Beethoven's concise but very characteristic Quartet in F minor (Op. 95) and Mendelssohn's Sonata in D, for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 58), the last-named work gaining an especially fine interpretation at the hands of Miss Eibenschütz and Signor Piatti. The pianist, however, seemed flurried and nervous in Beethoven's last Sonata in C minor (Op. 111), and certainly did not play the work so well as on former occasions. Nevertheless, the audience exacted an encore, to which she responded by giving one of Brahms's minor pieces. Mrs. Helen Trust was very pleasing in songs by Méhul and Bertoni and a charming ditty, "The Moon," by James Hook, the last-named being asked for a second time. The vocalist, however, substituted the old French song "La charmante Marguerite." Dr. Joachim played Bach's unaccompanied Violin Sonata in E (omitting the final Bourrée) as he alone can play it.

As Dr. Joachim was engaged at the Crystal Palace on the following Saturday, Mr. Arbos was leader in his place and proved himself in every way an efficient substitute in Beethoven's Quartet in C (Op. 59, No. 3) and the same composer's great Trio in B flat (Op. 97). His solo was a pleasing and characteristic Romance in G, by Svendsen, originally written for violin and orchestra and since transcribed for several combinations of instruments. Mr. De Greef, the pianist of the afternoon, played three pieces by Schumann with perhaps over-refinement. The last of the three was the Finale of the "Faschingsschwank aus Wien," for the selection of which the Belgian pianist cannot be commended. The work is justly a favourite and should have been given in its entirety, to the exclusion of the other pieces. Miss Girtin Barnard was acceptable in songs by Brahms and the late Alfred Cellier.

On Monday, the 14th ult., by way of a change, the programme commenced with a novelty. The works of Heinrich von Herzogenberg have not made much way in this country, in spite of the fact that they are for the most part genial and attractive at the first hearing. Speaking of the Quartet in G (Op. 42, No. 3), which was introduced on this occasion, the programme annotator justly says, "Cheerfulness reigns throughout, and the expression of every movement is as frank and engaging as its structure is clear. These qualities may not be fashionable, but they should be acceptable." With this we may agree; but a spirit of pessimism and unrest is abroad and it makes itself felt in musical art as in the more material concerns of life. Returning to the Quartet, the first movement is as frank and free as an opening Allegro of Haydn, and the air with variations which follows is noteworthy for picturesque and unlaboured effects. The Minuet is wrought out at greater length than usual and is, on the whole, the most interesting section of the work, but the Finale is perhaps a little too light and trivial for a work in classical form. Judging from his performance of the Sonata in B flat minor, Mr. de Greef cannot be included in the very narrow list of satisfactory Chopin players. The first three movements were soundly and intelligently rendered, but the weirdness of the Finale was scarcely suggested. Dr. Joachim played the Romance from his own Hungarian Concerto and the Concert ended with Beethoven's Trio in D (Op. 70, No. 1). Miss Marian McKenzie repeated the songs by Mr. Piatti and Jacob Birtley which she introduced at the Saturday performance noted above.

The large audience on Saturday, the 19th ult., was doubtless drawn together by Beethoven's Serenade Trio in D (Op. 8), one of the most popular of the master's early works. The other pieces were less familiar to the general public—namely, Brahms's fine, though for the most part sombre, Quartet in A minor (Op. 51, No. 2); Schumann's Sonata in G minor (Op. 22), excellently played by Mr. Leonard Borwick; and Mozart's Sonata in G for pianoforte and violin, one of a set of six composed, or at any rate produced, while the composer was resident at Mannheim, in 1778. The Sonata only contains two movements and is simplicity itself in outline, though not on that account unworthy of the composer. In place of Miss Gherlsen, who was announced as the vocalist but who was unable to sing, Mr. Philip Newbury appeared and gave satisfaction in airs by Handel and Rubinstein.

The Concert of the following Monday is the last we can notice this month. Beethoven's last Quartets are supposed to be "caviare to the general," but, at any rate, there was a full house on this occasion, and the work in F (Op. 135), almost the last utterance of the composer, was not only received with enthusiasm, but the slow movement would gladly have been heard a second time, though Dr. Joachim wisely gave the signal to continue the performance. Later in the programme the great violinist gave his unsurpassable rendering of the famous "Trillo del Diavolo" of Tartini, who, by the way, was born just two hundred years ago—namely, on April 12, 1692. Mr. Leonard Borwick was scarcely heard to the fullest advantage in Chopin's Ballade in F (Op.38), but his brilliant rendering of Mendelssohn's posthumous Prelude in B flat (Op. 104, No. 1) evoked an irresistible demand for a repetition. Mr. Plunket Greene rendered Lieder by Schubert and Schumann and two Old English Songs in a manner that left no loophole for adverse criticism. Schumann's genial Pianoforte Trio in F (Op. 80) completed the programme.

THURSDAY SUBSCRIPTION CONCERTS.

Within the limited time available Schumann was creditably represented on the 3rd ult., at the fourth and last of Messrs. William Nicholl, Septimus Webbe, and Hans Adolf Brousil's Concerts at Princes' Hall. The "Stücke im Volkston," for pianoforte and violoncello, and the Toccata, for pianoforte solo, were the instrumental pieces, between which came the "Spanisches Liederspiel" for four voices (Op. 74). The interpreters of the latter contrasted sketches were Mrs. Dyke, Mrs. Isabel Fassett, Mr. Nicholl, and Mr. B. H. Grove, who succeeded in infusing the requisite character into the delicate as well as the more sturdy numbers of the series. Those which made the deepest impression were the melodious Quartet "Es ist verrathen," the tenor solo "Geständniss," and the concluding four-part "Ich bin geliebt." Messrs. Webbe and Brousil intelligently rendered the opening piece, and the first-named was quite competent to cope with the Toccata. In the second part Mr. Brousil skilfully played an arrangement of Dr. Mackenzie's beautiful "Benedictus" and a "Moto Perpetuo" by Fitzenhagen, whilst the pianist deftly developed the attractive features of Sterndale Bennett's Moderato in E (Op. 11) and Allegro Grazioso (Op. 18). Ambroise Thomas and Gounod respectively supplied the songs for Mr. Nicholl towards the termination of the entertainment. The plan of setting aside the opening section of the Concert for a single composer has been so cordially approved that it has been resolved to continue the policy next season with Beethoven, Rubinstein, Schubert, and Mendelssohn.

WESTMINSTER ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.

The Concerts given by this enterprising Association are generally interesting, and that of the 16th ult. proved no exception to the rule. To encourage native talent not as yet fully recognized, the Society offered a prize for a new orchestral work, and the adjudicators, Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, Professor J. F. Bridge, and Dr. Hubert Parry, awarded it to Mr. Walter Wesché for a Suite in F, which was duly performed on the above-named occasion. The composer, who has hitherto obtained recognition only through the medium of pianoforte pieces and other minor efforts, has evidently considerable ability, although in the present instance his writing is more noteworthy for refinement than pretentiousness. The Suite is in three short movements, the first of which, entitled a Prelude, has a pastoral flavour. The next, in D minor, has the character of a rustic dance; but the third is commonplace and unworthy of association with the preceding sections of the work. Mr. Wesché scores with taste, and his Suite evidently pleased, for he received a hearty call to the platform. Mr. Stewart Macpherson's capital orchestra was likewise heard in Haydn's Symphony in B flat, best known in this country as No. 9 of the Salomon set; the late Sir George Macfarren's somewhat rococo Overture to "Romeo and Juliet," and Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's beautiful "Benedictus" and the Courante from the music to "Ravenswood." The last two pieces were conducted by the composer, who was recalled and applauded with enthusiasm. Madame Anna Lang, a young lady violinist, proved herself fairly able to cope with the difficulties of Mendelssohn's Concerto, her reading of the work being excellent, though at times her execution was not all that could be desired. The vocal pieces contributed by Madame Emily Spada and Mr. Philip Newbury were well rendered and gave the requisite variety to the programme.

MR. EDGAR HADDOCK'S CONCERTS.

On Monday afternoon, February 29, the able Leeds violinist, in conjunction with Madame De Pachmann, completed their arduous and self-imposed task of playing the whole of Beethoven's ten Sonatas for pianoforte and violin, the works given on this occasion being those in C minor (Op. 30, No. 2) and G major (No. 3), the "Kreutzer" Sonata (Op. 47), and the final Sonata in G (Op. 96). While giving full credit to both artists for their zealous and, for the most part, admirable interpretation of the Bonn master's Sonatas, it cannot be denied that the performances proved very trying to the listener, owing to the want of relief. A vocal piece between each instrumental work would have afforded the requisite variety and greatly heightened the effect.

On Monday, the 7th ult., Mr. Haddock gave a so-called "Musical Afternoon," in which he again enjoyed the valuable co-operation of Madame De Pachmann; but on this occasion the programme was miscellaneous and far more easy of appreciation. The two artists were associated in Schumann's Sonata in A minor (Op. 105) and Grieg's in G (Op. 13), both works being excellently rendered. Madame De Pachmann delighted the intelligent portion of her audience by the refined and highly finished interpretation she gave of Schumann's "Etudes Symphoniques," and she also appeared to advantage as a composer in a charming Romance in E for violin, dedicated to Mr. Haddock. Raff's Cavatina was played by Mr. Haddock on a Stradivarius fiddle belonging to a relative and styled by someone the "Emperor." It was also rashly described as the finest violin in the world, but we failed to detect anything in the quality of tone which could justify so high-sounding a title. Some vocal pieces were pleasantly sung by Miss Effie Thomas.

MR. ALGERNON ASHTON'S CONCERT.

Mr. Ashton gave a Concert consisting entirely of his own compositions, at Princes' Hall, on the evening of Wednesday, the 16th ult. The programme was very well arranged for its purpose, the opening and closing works being, as regards their nature and date of production, well chosen to exhibit the composer's early and latest style. They were a Trio in A for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, and a Quintet in E minor for pianoforte and strings. From these works it is not difficult to perceive that Mr. Ashton is emphatically a writer for the pianoforte, not because he gives the lion's share to that instrument—to do him justice, he obviously aims at the strictest impartiality—but because he writes for the pianoforte with so much more skill, freedom, and sympathy than we find in his passages for the strings. It is probably for this reason that the late Quintet strikes one as inferior to the earlier Trio. Some Fantasiestücke for violin and pianoforte, though simpler, are more pleasing works, and may be recommended. But Mr. Ashton is heard at his best in his Irish Dances for pianoforte duet, which are thoroughly charming compositions that would probably enjoy considerable popularity if they were a little easier to play. His songs, seven of which were sung by Miss Fillunger, are also excellent specimens of his art—the words admirably chosen, the sentiment carefully expressed, and the melodies on the whole alike appropriate and pleasing. The two entitled "Frühling" and "Letztes Gebet" may be singled out for especial mention, the former having been warmly encored. In the concerted pieces the strings were played by Messrs. Jasper and Wallace Sutcliffe, Alfred Hobday, and W. H. Squire. In the Irish Dances Mr. E. H. Thorne joined the composer. There was a large and appreciative audience.

DR. PARRY'S MUSIC TO "THE FROGS."

The music composed by Dr. Parry for the performance of "The Frogs" of Aristophanes at Oxford exhibits the composer in an aspect with which the public at large have not been hitherto familiar. The University Dramatic Society resolved not to attempt the task of reproducing the play of Aristophanes. They were content with the easier task of bringing out a burlesque of the Athenian poet's work, with a vast amount of very modern allusions and comic business thrown in. The result was a capital farce which completely carried the audience away. This fact must be carefully remembered in considering the music, as it explains much that would be otherwise inexplicable. The work is divided into seventeen numbers, of which five—the Overture, a Funeral March, a Barcarolle, an Entr'acte, and the Introduction to Act III.—are instrumental, and the remainder for chorus. Probably, from the musician's point of view, the really interesting thing in the whole is the bright and genial Overture. When this is over and the curtain once up, the music is adapted, and adapted with remarkable skill, to the view of Aristophanes emphasized by those who were responsible for the stage management. Finding that he had to write music for a farce, Dr. Parry would seem to have entered heartily into the spirit of the enterprise and written his music after the fashion of the conductors who string together familiar airs for pantomime music. But though the auditor was astonished to hear the strains of such tunes as the "Boulanger" March and the "See-Saw" Waltz, it is hardly necessary to add that the melodies known to Dr. Parry include far more than the ordinary theatre musician's répertoire, and as he lays hands on any composer's ideas that happen to suit his purpose and gives them a genial application to the situation, the result is that a musician is constantly appealed to by some quaint introduction of a familiar theme. The second subject of Romberg's "Toy" Symphony serves for the Chorus of Frogs, while the "Hell" motive from Stanford's "Eden" fitly introduces Dionysos to the lower world. Later on in the work a graceful compliment is paid to Sir Arthur Sullivan by the introduction of a phrase from "Ivanhoe," when the chorus mention "the man who, of all in this age, has written the most beautiful melodies." The famous competition between Æschylus and Euripides in the latter part of the play furnished the composer with a splendid opening, of which he has made the best use. Æschylus he has identified musically with Beethoven, while Meyerbeer does duty as the representative of Euripides. The particular themes employed are "Nobil Signor," the opening of Beethoven's C minor Symphony, and the celebrated melody at the close of the Choral Symphony, and the general result can only be described as irresistibly funny.

Of the performance there is little to be said, so far as the music is concerned. The chorus obviously knew more of music than they knew of Greek, and sang much better than they danced. It was stated on the last night that Mr. F. C. Woods, of Exeter College, had done almost all the training of the chorus, and their performance did him great credit, especially as the postponement of Term materially shortened the time available for practice. The whole performance was wonderfully animated, nothing like a hitch was to be detected anywhere, and "waits" were conspicuous by their absence. If, when the charm of the moment was over, it occurred to some pedantic minds to question whether it was worth while to keep a University Dramatic Society to burlesque the works of ancient authors, and to employ an eminent composer on musical punning, the sternest critic could not deny that he had witnessed a charmingly amusing piece, and must have admitted that he owed a debt of gratitude to those who had contrived in this serious age to provide him with nearly three hours' continuous entertainment.

OLD ENGLISH MUSIC.

Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch, encouraged by the interest shown in his Concert of Chamber Music by English composers of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, given in December last, has instituted a series of four Concerts of the same type. The first of these took place at No. 20, Fitzroy Street, W., on February 27, and, it is gratifying to add, was very well attended. To connoisseurs Mr. Dolmetsch is, of course, well known as an earnest worker in the cause of music of the early English school, and it is not necessary to enlarge upon the admirable manner in which he and his coadjutors acquit themselves. But, in the interest of a wider circle, it may be as well to mention that the répertoire of these Concerts is drawn principally from the Suites, Fantazies, In Nomines, &c., which were the delight of our forefathers at a period when, as a nation, we were more truly musical than now; and that they are performed upon the instruments for which they were written—viz., the viols, harpsichord, and lute. It will be apparent that here is a rare opportunity for cultivating a knowledge of an unjustly neglected branch of national art. Indeed, the absolute ignorance on this subject which so generally prevails would be a cause of amazement were it not remembered that these works, though so truly native, still remain in manuscript and in libraries where they are more or less inaccessible to any but such enthusiasts as Mr. Dolmetsch. But if we are really a "musical nation" why do we leave the best works of our old masters unprinted? Surely it is time this reproach was removed. In what esteem these compositions were held two centuries ago may be gathered from the words of a contemporary author, "That to set them (the Suites, &c.) forth according to their true praise, there are no words sufficient in language; yet what I can best speak of them shall be only to say that they have been to myself (and many others) as divine raptures, powerfully captivating all our unruly faculties and affections (for the time), and disposing us to solidity, gravity, and a good temper, making us capable of heavenly and divine influences." Miss Florence Monk sang with much refinement of style three songs by Henry Lawes—two from "Comus," to the accompaniment of viol d'amore, viol da gamba, and harpsichord, and a charming version of Herrick's lines, "About the sweet bag of a bee," the lute accompaniment to which was skilfully played by Mr. Dolmetsch. A second Concert was given on the 19th ult. by the same artists, assisted by Mr. F. A. Fuller Maitland, who played on the harpsichord with perfect taste and skill Bull's "St. Thomas Wake," from "Parthenia," and (in response to an encore) the same composer's "King's Hunting Jigg." The remaining Concerts take place on the 23rd inst. and May 14.

MR. G. A. CLINTON'S CONCERTS.

Out of evil good sometimes springs, and a case in point is the establishment of the above-named enterprise at the Steinway Hall, as it is due entirely to the split between Mr. Clinton, the eminent clarinettist, and the artists associated with him on the one part, and the Wind Instrument Chamber Music Society on the other. There is no occasion to deal further with a matter that has been fully explained; enough that musical London is richer by another series of Concerts, and a capital start was made on Tuesday evening, the 8th ult. The first piece in the programme was Hummel's Septet, a work at one time enormously popular, but now rarely heard. It is, however, quite worthy of occasional revival, and it was particularly well rendered on the present occasion. Spohr's Nonet, which closed the scheme, is also only performed at infrequent intervals; and a third interesting piece was an Aubade for five wind and five stringed instruments, by Edouard Lalo. This is a charming and daintily scored little work in two movements, the second of which was encored. By way of variety, Mr. Sauret and Mr. Cusins introduced a pleasing old Sonata in G, by Porpora, for pianoforte and violin, or, more accurately speaking, for violin with pianoforte accompaniment. Mrs. Hutchinson, for whom indulgence was claimed unnecessarily, rendered some vocal selections with her customary taste.

MR. HARTVIGSON'S RECITAL.

Admirers of Liszt's music are apparently not so few and far between as some would have us believe, for the Princes' Hall was well filled on the afternoon of the 16th ult., when Mr. Anton Hartvigson gave a Pianoforte Recital composed entirely of the Weimar virtuoso's music, and the audience listened attentively and with evident appreciation to a lengthy programme. The Recital commenced with the Concerto Pathétique in E minor for two pianofortes, an extraordinary and rhapsodical work, though containing some very beautiful ideas well worthy of more consistent development than the composer accords them. In this and in the transcription of the Symphonic Poem "Mazeppa" the Recital-giver had the able assistance of his brother, Mr. Fritz Hartvigson. The rest of the programme consisted of solo pieces, including the discursive Ballade in D flat, the brilliant Polonaise in E, and various minor pieces, all more or less in the bravura style. The pianist rendered full justice to his arduous task, playing throughout the afternoon with combined intelligence and technical accuracy.

LENTEN SERVICES.

There is ground for satisfaction in the fact that the authorities regulating the musical arrangements in our principal churches are not, as a rule, slavish copyists. A number of works suited to the prescribed penitential period are at command, and year by year the variety offered increases. St. Anne's, Soho, however, while under the charge of Canon Wade, won such an honourable reputation for extending metropolitan knowledge of Bach's "Passion Music according to St. John," that the present rector, the Rev. J. H. Cardwell, is justified in remaining faithful to this touching illustration of the Divine Tragedy. At the first performance this year (4th ult.) the solo parts were sung with discretion, and a small orchestra was led by Mr. Ellis Roberts. Messrs. H. W. Davies and E. Naylor were at the organ, and Mr. E. H. Thorne conducted. The choruses were rendered with commendable respect for light and shade, and in the interspersed chorales the congregation joined with much greater heartiness than was formerly the case. This speaks well for the growing appreciation of the mighty Bach.

The Lenten Musical Services prepared by Canon Barker, at Marylebone Church, have consisted of the "St. John Passion" of Bach and Sir John Stainer's "The Crucifixion." The history of the latter is peculiarly associated with Marylebone Parish Church, and its alternation each Thursday with the Leipzig Cantor's setting of the fourth Evangelist's narrative has brought large and reverential assemblages. Neither work has suffered by such close companionship, because the century and a half that separates them has wrought vast changes in ideas and methods. This is one of those few instances, indeed, in which the ancient and the modern go exceedingly well together. They do not retard but help each other, more particularly when they are introduced in a manner that invests both with the utmost dignity. The efficient choir, numbering nearly ninety, have bestowed upon their labours an amount of care alike creditable to judgment and conscientiousness. Their trainer is Mr. William Hodge, who of course conducts, whilst Mr. Herbert Hodge officiates at the organ with admirable tact. Messrs. Francis Lloyd and Thomas Sweeney have sung the tenor and bass solos respectively.

THE WAGNER SOCIETY.

Mr. William Ashton Ellis gave, on February 23, at Trinity College, London, the first of two Lectures on Richard Wagner's "Art-work of the future." After briefly sketching the progress of European events from 1832 to 1849, Mr. Ashton showed how Wagner's writings in "Art and Revolution," and in the work under consideration, both of which were produced during the period named, had been influenced by the spirit of the time and the philosophies of Hegel, Feuerbach, and Schopenhauer. Wagner, the lecturer said, never felt contented with his own ideas unless he could find them echoed in the mind of some great man. In "Art and Revolution" Wagner might be said to have collected his materials for "The Art-work of the future." In the latter, he went into details and spoke, not, as had been stated, of "The Music of the future," but of the time when conditions inimical to the progress of art should be removed. If Wagner had been an Englishman or an American he would probably have set forth his scheme as Mr. Bellamy had done in "Looking Back"; but, being a German, and the German mind inclining to the philosophical form, Wagner naturally adopted the latter method. It was, however, interesting to notice the great similarity which existed between the theories advanced in "Looking Back" and the art-work of the future; both works were based on the idea of an association of men in which individualism should have free play.

In the course of the discussion which followed, Mr. Ashton said that Wagner had directed that his autobiography should not be published until thirty years after his death, and that therefore his son, Mr. Siegfried Wagner, who was the possessor of the MS., would not publish it for another twenty years.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The Concerts of the pupils of the Royal College during the past month have all consisted of chamber music and songs, the only orchestral Concert being fixed for the 24th, too late for notice in our present number. They have also all been given in the afternoon, a fact which has no doubt helped to cause a somewhat smaller attendance. The Concert on the 3rd ult. brought two part-songs by Mr. Chas. Wood, an ex-scholar of the College, "Full fathom five" and "O Hemlock Tree," the first of which is very cleverly written and very charming, the second being less original. These were sung by the choral class, conducted by Professor Walter Parratt. Miss Maud Branwell distinguished herself by an excellent performance of Chopin's Concert-Allegro in A (Op. 46). Beethoven's early Pianoforte and Violin Sonata in D (Op. 12, No. 1), nicely played by Miss Gwendoline Toms and Miss Frances O. Chew, began the Concert, which finished with Haydn's Quartet in D (Op. 76, No. 5).

At the third Concert (7th ult.) each pupil gave a specimen of his or her capacity in that second branch of study which, by the rules of the College, each must select. These, however, are performances for study only and it would not be fair to make them subjects of criticism. We refer to one piece only, Grieg's Ballade for pianoforte (Op. 24), played (and very well played) by Mr. Richard Walthew, because, being a student in composition, he has no opportunity of appearing at the regular Concerts.

The third Concert (the 17th ult.) began with a Haydn Quartet (Op. 77, No. 2), and concluded with Brahms's Pianoforte Quintet in F minor, played by Misses Amy Grimson (pianoforte), Jessie Grimson, Lilian Wright, Leonard Fowles, and Maud Fletcher. The young performers have not yet quite grown up to the comprehension of this masterpiece, but it was creditably given, especially as regards the Scherzo. Mr. Ernest Hopkinson's playing of Bruch's Romance for violin was promising, but Miss Charlotte Russell sang MacCunn's fine song "At the mid hour of night" without any evident appreciation of its passion, quite missing the author's climax.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

A very interesting, though, some consider, not altogether successful, experiment was made at the Students' Chamber Concert, given on February 29, at St. James's Hall. Bach's Magnificat was given—to quote the programme—"as nearly as possible under the conditions and with the resources intended by the composer." We fancy that a substitution of "available to" for "intended" would have disarmed criticism, and probably have been more in accordance with facts. Assuming the composer's intentions, however, to have been realised under those "conditions," we are so little disposed to cavil at the experiment that we wish Mr. Corder had gone farther still and given us the work exactly as Bach performed it. Such reproductions are of the greatest possible educational value, and no concessions to outside opinion should be allowed to influence those in authority. Fearing to go too far and produce a weak effect, Mr. Corder caused each of the vocal parts to be sung by five voices instead of three, and each of the string parts by four instruments instead of one. Now, as soon as considerations of effect are allowed to weigh it is obvious that different views will prevail; and not even an Academy professor can please everybody. Considering the difficulties of the work, those concerned in grappling with them must be held at least to have deserved success. We regret that considerations of space prevent our insertion of their names. Several vocal and instrumental pieces followed the Magnificat, serving to reveal much promising talent and the fruit of careful and well-directed study. The programme contained valuable and instructive analytical remarks on each movement of the Magnificat, presumably from the pen of Mr. Corder.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Since the death of the lamented Principal, Mr. H. Weist Hill, the excellent educational work carried on at this establishment has not been permitted to languish, and the operatic class, which has been placed under the direction of Mr. Hermann Klein, has evinced special signs of vitality. Mr. Hill had chosen Auber's "Fra Diavolo" as the next opera in which the young people should demonstrate their embryonic talents for lyric drama, and whatever may be said with regard to his selection it was the duty of those he left behind to loyally carry out his desires; and accordingly a series of performances of this lively, and at one time very popular work, was given at the School during the week ending the 19th ult., the last of which was attended by the Lord Mayor, the Lady Mayoress, and other civic magnates, together with a considerable number of musicians interested in this particular form of art. The work was given with a degree of smoothness which reflected great credit on Mr. Klein, who must have assiduously drilled his forces in order to attain such satisfactory results. The principals were Mr. Wilfred Acfield as the courtly brigand, Miss Jessie Bradford as Zerlina, Mr. J. A. Ellerton and Miss Annie Fisher as Lord and Lady Allcash, Mr. Patrick O'Connor as Lorenzo, Messrs. H. Land and C. Hinchcliff as the vagabonds Beppo and Giacomo, and Mr. Fred. Vigay as the innkeeper Matteo, all of whom evinced sufficient ability to justify words of commendation which should encourage them to persevere with their operatic studies.

GRESHAM COLLEGE.

Professor Bridge delivered his Hilary series of Lectures at the above College on February 29 and the 1st, 3rd, and 4th ult. The first two were entitled "A talk about the wood-wind of the orchestra," and contained much practical information concerning the tone colour, compass, and capabilities of these instruments and the manner in which they had been used by the great composers.

The interest and value of the Professor's remarks were much enhanced by illustrations given on the various instruments as they were referred to, and by the performance of admirably selected excerpts for the instruments in divers combinations, skilfully played by Messrs. Wood, Horton, Draper, and Cordwell (students of the Royal College of Music), and Messrs. C. and H. Spottiswoode, under the direction of Mr. J. E. Borland.

The subject of the third Lecture was the form of the Overture. This form, the Professor said, although having much in common with that of the Symphony, differed from it in several important details. Both forms had the same origin; but while the symphonic form in its development entered on a separate existence, that of the Overture became increasingly dependent on another existence—the operatic Overture on the opera itself, and the Concert Overture on some subject heroic or scenic, the musical description of which it was its mission to portray. Technically, the Overture chiefly differed from the first movement of a Symphony in there being no repetition of the first part and the free Fantasia portion being less extended. The Professor then briefly traced the gradual development of this form from the nine bars "to be played three times," affixed by Monteverde to his opera of "Orfeo," to the Overtures and Preludes of Wagner.

Amongst the examples played by the Misses Grimson—Royal College students—at this Lecture was the Overture to "Bonduca"—i.e., "Boadicea," written by Purcell in 1695 and remarkable as anticipating Gluck by about fifty years in connecting the Overture with the characters of the piece it preceded.

At the concluding Lecture the Professor gave a most interesting sketch of the life and works of John Jenkins, the "little man with a great soul," who was born at Maidstone in 1592, and by whom for nearly half-a-century "the private music in England was in great measure supplied." He also helped to introduce the violin in place of the viol and published, in 1660, "twelve Sonatas for his violin and a bass, with a thorough bass for the organ or theorbo," the first of the kind produced by an Englishman. These enjoyed great popularity and were reprinted four years after in Amsterdam. Examples of Jenkins's music were contained in the libraries of the British Museum, Christ Church, Oxford, and Gresham College. In the first-named there was a MS. book containing twenty-one "Fancies," the notes in which were made heart shape, and the pages profusely illustrated by small pen and ink sketches. A work edited by Playford, entitled "Select Ayres and Dialogues," contained two excellent examples of Jenkins's vocal music, full of bright melody and expressive modulation. It was too often thought that the Church was the only protector and encourager of music, and many people imagined that the anthems of Orlando Gibbons were fair specimens of all the music of his period. But this was not so. In the music of Jenkins there was a melodic grace and pleasant, well-defined modulations which were not to be found in much of the church music of his time. His writings, moreover, were more harmonic than contrapuntal, and in the "Dialogues" mentioned above he was both dramatic and humorous. The Hon. Roger North, the author of "Memoirs of Music," and who knew him intimately, said "It is supposed that when he first began to compose he followed in the track of the most celebrated masters and consequently his style was as theirs, solemn and grave. I have seen an 'In Nomine' of his of six parts, most elaborate, but his Lute and Lyra-viol wrought so much upon his fancy, that he diverted to a more lively air, and was not only an innovator, but became a reformer of musick; his fanceys were full of ayery parts . . . and all that he did until his declyning age was lively, decided and (if I may be credited) capricioso." Elsewhere this writer said: "He was one of the Court musicians, and once was brought to play upon the Lyra-viol afore King Charles I., as one that performed somewhat extraordinary; and after he had done, the King said 'he did wonders upon an inconsiderable instrument.' After the Court was disbanded, he left the towne and passed his time at gentlemen's houses in the country where musick was of the family, and he was even courted and never slighted, but at home wherever he went. And in most of his friends' houses their was a chamber called by his name, for beside his musicall excellencies he was an accomplished ingenious person . . . and wherever he went was always welcome and courted to stay. Even in his extreme old age, when as to Musick he was almost effete and withall obnoxious to great infirmitys, he was taken care of as a friend, and after having spent some of the last years of his life with Sir Philip Wodehouse, he dy'ed at Kimberley, in Norfolk, and not poor but capable to leave, as he did, handsome remembrances to some of his friends."

During the delivery of this Lecture a most interesting selection of Jenkins's vocal music was sung by Mr. Dan Price and choristers from Westminster Abbey, and several instrumental excerpts were cleverly played on viols and a viol da gamba by Mr. Dolmetsch and his pupils. As on previous occasions, the Lectures were attended by crowded audiences.

THE ROSSINI CENTENARY.

The centenary of the birth of Gioachino Rossini, which occurred on February 29 last, was celebrated, either by theatrical or Concert performances, at most of the leading musical centres of the Continent. At Pesaro, the native place of the Maëstro, a special commemorative Concert was given by the pupils and professors of the Musical College bearing the composer's name; while the house in which he first saw the light, and which has recently been acquired by the municipality of Pesaro, was opened with appropriate ceremonies as a "Rossini Museum," containing already a number of interesting souvenirs of the master. As regards other parts of the composer's native country, special performances took place, notably at Milan, Naples, Turin, and Florence. At the latter town a number of Musical Societies went in procession to the church of Santa Croce, where the remains of Rossini have found their final resting-place after their removal from the French capital, and decorated his tomb with wreaths and other floral offerings. An interesting and entertaining volume of the master's letters has just been published by order of the Italian government to grace the special anniversary, while literary contributions innumerable concerning his life and works have appeared in the press-organs both in Italy and elsewhere. Particularly attractive in the latter category is the special supplement to the Gazetta Musicale di Milano, of February 29, which, in addition to much opportune matter, biographical and otherwise, concerning the master, contains a number of well-executed portraits and other pictorial representations, as well as some most interesting fac-simile reproductions.

At Paris, with the musical life of which capital the Italian master had been so closely and for so many years associated, the centenary was worthily and appropriately celebrated by a special representation at the Opéra of "Guillaume Tell," Rossini's chef-d'œuvre, which had been expressly written for the institution in question, and which has, moreover, exercised a considerable influence upon the style and the development of the French grand opera generally. The house was, as a matter of course, crowded, and the performance worthy of the first lyrical stage of France; the principal vocal interpreters being MM. Duc (Arnold) and Berardi (Guillaume); Mesdames Bosman (Mathilde), Deschamps (Hedwige), and Bréval (Jemmy), while the minor parts were all filled by competent artists. The incidental ballet was likewise made a special feature of, the two leading danseuses, Mdlles. Mauri and Subra, assisting in the spectacle. Another highly interesting celebration of the centenary took place at the residence of Madame Alboni, the famous prima donna of former days; and the personal friend of Rossini, in some of whose operas the gifted artist had found the parts best suited for the display of her peculiar powers. A number of friends, chiefly belonging to the artistic world of the capital, assembled at the salon of the lady, to listen to an admirable concert performance, including the rendering, on the part of Madame Alboni herself, of the well-known rondo in "Cenerentola," which, as ear-witnesses declare, was marked by all the charm of her more youthful days. A very special feature of this semi-private celebration was also the Recital, with admirable effect, on the part of M. Baillet, the eminent member of the Comédie Française, of an Ode written for the occasion by M. Georges Boyer, and from which we may quote the two concluding verses, viz. :—

Ce n'est pas assez d'honorer la mémoire
De celui qui, certain de l'immortalité,
Fut jaloux de mêler aux palmes de sa gloire
Ta fleurette embaumée, ô sainte charité !

Rossini, ta bonté ranime ceux qui pleurent,
Maître, si l'on t'admire, on te bénit aussi.
Comme tes chants divins, tes bienfaits nous demeurent,
Tu fus très grand, salut ! Tu fus très bon, merci !

OBITUARY.

A painful shock went through the musical world on Monday, the 21st ult., when it was ascertained that a gentleman who had thrown himself in front of an advancing train at the West Hampstead Station on the previous evening was no other than the esteemed composer, Mr. Arthur Goring Thomas. It appears that the weak health which Mr. Thomas had suffered more or less during the forty years of his life, in addition to more than one unfortunate accident, had resulted in a tendency towards suicidal mania, and to his immediate friends the final catastrophe was by no means so unexpected as it was to those who knew him only as a gifted musician. Like many others who have gained name and fame in the art,

Mr. Thomas was destined for other pursuits, but was drawn towards music by natural inclination, and his first period of serious study was at Paris, under M. Emil Dwand. Here his style as a composer was formed, and though he worked afterwards for three years at the Royal Academy of Music, under such representative musicians as Sir Arthur Sullivan and Mr. Ebenezer Prout, the lighter graces of the modern French school were to the last reflected in his compositions. This tendency was displayed in his Cantata "The Sun Worshippers," produced at the Norwich Festival in 1881, and still more in his Opera "Esmeralda," which saw the light two years later, under the auspices of the Carl Rosa Company. This was the most successful effort of the deceased composer, and the work has gained favour both in Germany and America. But in the opinion of good judges there is much finer music in "Nadeshda," produced two years later, although, unfortunately, this opera is based upon a less interesting libretto. In 1887 an agreeable Ballet Suite from the pen of Mr. Thomas was produced at Cambridge, and he was the author of a large number of elegant and charming songs. At the time of his death he was under commission to write a grand opera for Mr. D'Oyly Carte and a short choral work for the next Leeds Festival. These will never see the light, but Mr. Thomas has left sufficient to entitle him to a place among the band of earnest musicians who have done so much of late to restore the prestige of England as a musical nation, and to cause deep and widespread regret for the tragic and premature termination of his career.

We regret to record the death, on the 14th ult., of Mr. Frank H. Bodda, at the age of sixty-nine. Mr. Bodda was very highly esteemed, both as a teacher of singing and for his amiable qualities. He married, rather late in life, Miss Louisa Pyne, the eminent operatic soprano, and with her established and successfully carried on a singing academy at his residence, 85, Cambridge Gardens, North Kensington.

The death is announced, at Liverpool, of the Rev. James Kelly, whose long disputes and litigation over the question of organists and choir expenses with the Corporation are fresh in the memory. The deceased was verging upon ninety years of life, and had been Incumbent of St. George's Church, Liverpool, for about half-a-century.

On the 11th ult., at Somerville, Tiverton, Devon, Caroline, widow of Alexander Robert Reinagle, formerly of Oxford, aged seventy-four.

The death, in his seventy-sixth year, is announced of the Chevalier Raphael Costa, only surviving brother of the late Sir Michael Costa. He was secretary to the Italian Consulate in London, was an excellent pianist and singer, and spoke six or seven modern languages fluently.

Mr. Frederick Kingsbury died from paralysis on February 29, in his seventy-seventh year. He was best known as a teacher, but had composed several vocal and instrumental works, and conducted Promenade Concerts at the Agricultural Hall in 1868.

The following deaths, not yet recorded by us, have occurred during the past three months abroad, viz.:—

On January 4, at Cassel, Marianne Spohr, widow of the celebrated composer, an excellent pianist, aged eighty-seven.

On January 5, at Paris, Nicolos Eugène Gand, celebrated violin maker, aged sixty-seven.

On January 8, at Florence, Baldasarre Gamucci, composer of Church music, aged sixty-nine.

On January 10, at Vienna, Lelia Risley, the young American contralto, who made her début last year at Covent Garden Theatre; a pupil of Madame Marchesi.

On January 14, at Berlin, Julius Stahlknecht, excellent violoncellist, for many years member of the Royal Orchestra, aged seventy-five.

On January 14, at Dresden, Ferdinand Friedrich, composer and esteemed pianoforte teacher.

On January 18, at Brussels, François Riga, Belgian composer, aged fifty-two.

On January 18, at Geneva, Hugo de Senger, composer, Musical Director of the Société de Chant Sacré and Professor at the Conservatoire, aged fifty-six.

On January 25, at Copenhagen, Julius Salomon, popular operatic tenor, aged fifty-four.

On January 26, at Cassel, Carl Scheel, founder of the firm of pianoforte manufacturers.

On February 18, at Leipzig, J. F. Pester, violoncellist, for many years member of the Gewandhaus orchestra, aged fifty-six.

On February 19, at Moulins, Charles Duvois, Organist at the Cathedral of that town, composer and author of an able "Méthode pour accompagner le Plain-chant," aged seventy.

On February 20, at Vienna, Rosa Czillag, once celebrated operatic singer, Hungarian by birth, aged fifty-eight.

On February 21, at Munich, Friedrich Niest, an esteemed professor of the pianoforte, teacher of Madame Sophie Menter, at an advanced age.

On February 22, at Milan, Cipriano Pontoglio, composer of operas and church music, aged sixty-one.

On February 25, at Cologne, Georg Joseph Japha, excellent violinist and professor at the Conservatorium, aged fifty-seven.

On February 27, at Hanover, Louis Oertel, music publisher, excellent performer on the clarinet, aged sixty-seven.

On February 28, at Heilbrunn, Carl Friedrich Schmidt, chief of the well-known firm of antiquarian musicsellers, aged sixty-five.

On February 29, at Vienna, Moritz Laufer, highly esteemed teacher of singing, aged sixty-seven.

On the 4th ult., at Davos, Johannes Schubert, talented pianoforte virtuoso.

On the 11th ult., at Paris, M. Lauwers, operatic baritone of the former Théâtre Lyrique and the Opéra Comique, and much esteemed also as a teacher.

On the 17th ult., at New York, Max Strakosch, the well-know impresario.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

At the Concert of the Choral and Orchestral Association given in the Town Hall on February 27, a sacred Cantata, entitled "The Paraclete," by Mr. G. Halford, the Conductor, was performed. It is a musicianly composition and was very well executed, the soloists being Miss Laura Taylor, Mr. Hamlyn Crimp, and Mr. C. W. Thomas. There was a complete orchestra, and Mr. Perkins presided at the organ. At the same Concert Dr. Rowland Winn played Beethoven's Third Pianoforte Concerto (Op. 37) in C minor. This was the first time the work had been given in Birmingham.

The last of the Concerts for the present season of the Festival Choral Society took place in the Town Hall on the 10th ult. The programme consisted of Dvorák's "Requiem" and Sullivan's short Oratorio "The Prodigal Son." There was a large audience, in spite of the terrible weather, and the work of the Bohemian master excited the liveliest interest. A second hearing of the "Requiem" strengthens the opinion that the composer executed his task almost purely from the liturgical standpoint, and with a profound faith in the truth and power of the text. That seems the aspect from which to judge the composition, as it also appears to explain the wailing motive which, like a cry of fear, pervades the whole. But those not in sympathy with such a view could appreciate the variety and richness of the scoring and the wealth of harmonic and melodic details lavished upon the work. The fugue "Quam olim Abrahæ" went with extraordinary vigour, and the difficulties of the "Pie Jesu" were entirely surmounted, the performance in this respect being superior to that of the Festival in October last. The orchestra was complete and admirably efficient, and the vocal quartet of soloists—Miss Fanny Moody, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Watkin Mills—left no loophole for criticism. Mr. Stockley conducted, and Mr. Perkins officiated at the organ.

The Midland Musical Society gave a performance of Haydn's "Creation" in the Town Hall on the 12th ult. The principals were Miss Ada Ludlow, Mr. J. T. Birch, and Mr. W. Pearson, who, with the band and chorus, contributed to a very creditable performance. Mr. H. M. Stevenson conducted.

A new Society formed at Handsworth gave its first Concert on the 14th ult., in the Victoria Hall, Aston, when Romberg's "Lay of the Bell" and a miscellaneous selection formed the programme. Mr. Russell Crompton conducted, and Romberg's pleasing, but now somewhat neglected, work went very well. Mrs. Crompton, Miss Lizzie Preston, Miss Wiseman, Mr. J. M. Swingler, and Mr. T. Horrex were the soloists.

Cowen's "Sleeping Beauty" formed part of the programme of the concluding Concert of Mr. Halford's Association, on the 26th ult.

The last of Messrs. Harrison's Concerts took place in the Town Hall on the 7th ult., Sir Charles Hallé's orchestra then paying its annual visit to this city. The interest of the Concert centred in the Symphony in D (No. 2) of Brahms, performed here for the first time. It was given in magnificent style and created a great impression. "Le Carnaval Romain," of Berlioz, was another novelty, and was finely played.

Miss Fanny Davies gave her sixth annual Concert in the Masonic Hall on the 15th ult. She was assisted by Dr. Joachim and Signor Piatti, a combination that drew an enormous audience, filling the hall at reserved prices.

The choir of Carr's Lane Chapel, directed by Mr. W. Humphries, gave a Concert for a charitable purpose on the 17th ult. Stainer's Cantata "The Daughter of Jairus" was very effectively rendered by the choir.

Mr. Charles Lunn gave his seventeenth Pupil Concert in the Town Hall on the 19th ult., with very successful results. A large number of pupils assisted, and variety was afforded by the singing of part-songs by Mr. Randell's choir. Mr. William Sewell officiated as accompanist.

A well-known Birmingham Organist, Mr. T. H. Davis, was ordained a Deacon of the Church of England at St. George's, Edgbaston, on Sunday, the 13th ult. He has been appointed Curate of St. Mary's, Warwick. Within the last dozen years no fewer than four local organists have taken Holy Orders.

The Meister Glee Singers, assisted by the Fraser Quintet, gave a Concert in the Town Hall on the 21st ult.

Mr. J. W. Turner concluded his season of opera at the Grand Theatre on February 27. It lasted for eight weeks—a record here—and was highly successful. Balfe's "Siege of Rochelle" was revived, and the last performance consisted of Bellini's "La Sonnambula."

A Sacred Concert was given in the Town Hall, Dudley, on Sunday, February 28. Mr. Hingley, M.P., presided, and gave an address on Sunday Observance, remarking that he looked upon these Concerts as being really continuations of the religious services of the churches and chapels. A fortnight later Mr. J. Hill gave the first of a series of Organ Recitals, to be continued monthly, in Oldbury Parish Church.

MUSIC IN BRADFORD.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Several very attractive musical events have taken place of late at Bradford. The old Choral Society gave its second Concert of the season on February 26, with results upon which the resuscitated organisation may fairly congratulate itself. The works performed were Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and "The Hymn of Praise." Miss Maggie Davies, Miss Sarah Berry, Mr. Houghton, and Mr. W. Thornton were the principals. Mr. H. Robertshaw was the Conductor, Mr. Widdop was the Organist, and Mr. W. Rees led the band.

The Bradford Festival Choral Society gave Dr. Joseph Bridge's dramatic Cantata "Rudel," at St. George's Hall, on the 18th ult., together with a miscellaneous selection which included "The Revenge." Dr. Bridge was to have conducted the performance of his own work, but was too ill to appear, and Mr. R. H. Wilson, the Society's Conductor, occupied his place. Mr. Iver McKay took the place of Mr. Houghton as tenor soloist, and Madame Moore sang the music of Felise, while Mr. John Coates essayed the part of Sir Guy.

The Thornton Musical Union, with the assistance of many Bradford vocalists, and of Miss Clara Marshall, Miss Edith Lee, Mr. Charles Blagbro, and Mr. Newton Laycock, gave a Concert on February 27, the programme of which included the "Hymn of Praise." The Conductor was Mr. Fred. Cockroft, and Mr. Franse Bairstow was the accompanist.

The Calverley Choral Society performed the "Creation" on the same date, under the conductorship of Mr. James Hall, the principals being Miss A. Hudson, Mr. J. Mellor, and Mr. A. Barnes. The accompaniments were played by Mr. Fawcett's String Band.

The "Song of Miriam" was produced by the Idle Choral Society on the 8th ult., the Conductor being Mr. F. W. Eastlake. Excellent service was rendered by Miss Clara Marshall, Miss Shepherd, Mr. Charles Blagbro, and Mr. Dan Billington.

Mr. Edward Misdale gave his third Chamber Concert on February 29, being assisted in the carrying out of a very fine programme by Herr Hans Wessely (violinist), Miss Dora Barnard, and Mr. Charles Fredericks. Another similar event was the Pianoforte Recital on the 9th ult., given by Mr. Isidor Cohn, who sustained the burden of the programme without assistance, without a note of music, and with brilliant effect.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Great artistic success attended the two intermediate Concerts of the Bristol Musical Festival Society, which took place on February 26 and 27. The principal vocalists were Madame Nordica, Miss Antoinette Trebelli, Mr. Barton McGuckin, and Mr. Santley; the highly-trained members of the Festival Choir formed the chorus, and Sir Charles Hallé and his band came, as on previous occasions. It was a wise step on the part of the committee to give a "Wagner night," and to make up the scheme with the third Act of "Tannhäuser," the third Act of "Lohengrin," and the "Parsifal" Prelude. Although the Bristol Festival Society has been in existence twenty years it has never done any choral work, or a large section of any choral composition of Wagner. The selections were well performed, their rich tone-colouring, melody, and polyphonic power giving great delight. The soloists discharged their tasks with every satisfaction, but Mr. McGuckin was more at home in "Lohengrin," which he apparently has well mastered, than in "Tannhäuser." The choir sang with their accustomed refinement, beauty of tone, intelligence, clearness of enunciation, and tasteful expression, but in a few instances the voices flattened somewhat. The band played splendidly.

Saturday, February 27, was devoted to the performance of Cherubini's Requiem in C minor, Dr. C. H. H. Parry's charming "St. Cecilia's Day," and other compositions. In the Requiem the tone of the voices, the good phrasing, and the marking of light and shade were alike admirable. For the most part the band played well, but was now and then too heavy. Lady Hallé gave a splendid interpretation of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto; Madame Nordica sang "Plus grand dans son obscurité," from "La Reine de Saba"; and Mr. Santley contributed the Aria, "Vedro mentr'io sospira," from Mozart's "Figaro." Dr. Hubert Parry's "St. Cecilia's Day," placed at the end of the programme, was the finest choral achievement. It was given with remarkable spirit and artistic excellence; the attack and release of voices were sharp, every nuance was carefully observed, and the pitch was perfectly maintained throughout. Madame Nordica and Mr. Santley were the soloists. After the Concert some congratulatory remarks passed in the committee-room between the Chairman of the Festival Society and Sir Charles Hallé, the latter paying a tribute to Mr. D. W. Rootham for the way he had trained the choir.

On February 29, under the auspices of the Cheltenham Festival Choral Society, Mr. Charles Fry gave a Recital of the "Merchant of Venice," at the Corn Exchange, Cheltenham, when Sir Arthur Sullivan's charming music for the Masque in the second Act, and incidental music by Berthold Tours and H. M. Higgs, was played by a full orchestra, under the able direction of Mr. J. A. Matthews. A section of the Festival Choral Society also sang Pinsuti's Part-song "Tell me where is fancy bred" and Leslie's "How sweet the moonlight." The tenor solo in Sullivan's music was well sung by Mr. Attree. A large audience followed the Recital with interest and attention, and Mr. Fry was heartily applauded at various intervals and at the conclusion. The Recital was so successful that another play will probably be given next season.

It is exceedingly gratifying to be able to state that the first Recital of Sacred Music in Bristol Cathedral, on the 10th ult., was a great success. The building was filled, both choir and nave, showing that the new departure which Dean Pigou has made is a right one. The songmen and choristers of the Cathedral were strengthened by members of the Orpheus Glee and Bristol Choral Societies; while Miss Rosalind Ellicott (daughter of the Bishop of the Diocese) and Miss Florence Cromey assisted as soloists. Mr. Riseley presided at the organ. The vocal works done were Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" and selections from the "Hymn of Praise," Sir S. Bennett's "God is a Spirit," Stainer's "Love Divine," and Barnby's "Jesu, my Lord," which were sung with refinement and devotional spirit. The organ solos were Mendelssohn's "Pilgrims' March," an Andante in F sharp minor of Dr. S. S. Wesley, and Mendelssohn's Organ Sonata (No. 3). It is proposed to continue the Recitals at intervals. At Easter Stainer's "Crucifixion" is to be given with still larger vocal forces and an orchestra.

Mr. E. R. Norris Mathews gave an interesting and well-prepared Lecture on Mozart, in the Museum Theatre, on the 14th ult. The Misses F. Cromey, Pauline Day, Rosa Smith, Norgrove, and Mr. P. Lewis assisted in the musical illustrations.

Mr. Cedric Bucknall read an instructive paper on "Music of the Eighteenth Century," on the 15th ult. He briefly traced the rise and progress of tonal art, and spoke in detail of the great geniuses of the eighteenth century, and of their works, examples from some of which he played.

Mr. H. C. Parsons, an exceptionally talented local pianist, gave a Concert, on the 17th ult., at the Victoria Rooms. He played (with the orchestra, directed by Mr. Riseley) Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto (No. 5) in E flat and Schumann's Concerto in A minor. Mr. Parsons was heard to greater advantage in some respects in several well-chosen solos, there being occasionally a want of proper balance between the pianoforte and orchestra in the Concertos. Miss Bethell sang several songs charmingly.

The Lecture on "Shakespeare and Music," which Dr. J. F. Bridge, Gresham Professor of Music, gave at Clifton, on the 23rd ult., was attended by a large audience. The lecturer made quotations from many of the plays of the Bard of Avon that had reference to music, and said they showed that Shakespeare's knowledge of music was wide and deep. The musical illustrations were given by Mr. Cedric Bucknall (pianoforte), Miss Lafittau, Mr. Percy Baldwin, and a small but highly efficient choir.

At Miss Eyre's classical Chamber Concert on the 21st ult., Grieg's String Quartet in G minor (Op. 27) was performed for the first time in England.

The Midsomer Norton Choral Society gave its fifth annual Concert on the 1st ult., under the direction of Mr. J. Kidner. Mr. F. H. Cowen's charming old English Idyll "St. John's Eve" was chosen for representation, and was given in a manner deserving of warm praise. Miss Blanche Beauchamp, Miss A. E. Allchurch, Mr. C. J. Gregory, and Mr. Percy Baldwin, the soloists, discharged their tasks with much skill, and their efforts contributed largely to the success of the performance. The singing of the choir was particularly good, intelligence and expression being characteristic features. Miscellaneous pieces made up the second part of the programme.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The new Committee of the Dublin Musical Society have issued a prospectus for the coming season, announcing performances of "Elijah," "The Golden Legend," Gounod's "Gallia," and a Rossini Centenary Concert. The prospectus states that the Committee is assured of adequate financial support, and feels justified in carrying on the work of the Society on its usual liberal scale.

The Dublin University Choral Society gave its 189th Concert on Saturday afternoon, the 12th ult., in the Examination Hall of Trinity College. Sir Robert Stewart's Cantata or Masque, "A winter night's wake," was performed in excellent style, with full band and chorus of 100 voices. The principal vocalists were Miss Lucy Ashton Hackett (soprano), Mr. John Weldon (tenor), Mrs. Walter Bapty, Miss Amy Craig, and some gentlemen amateurs, members of the Society. The choruses, "Merrily dance to the pipe and tabor" and "Wassail," were sung with much spirit by the choir. Sir Robert Stewart conducted.

On the same evening the Dublin Choral Union gave its second Concert for the season at the Antient Concert Rooms, Brunswick Street. Barnby's "Rebekah" furnished the first part of the programme, and the second part was of a miscellaneous character. The performance of the choir was, on the whole, praiseworthy for so young a Society, and the solo parts were capably filled by Miss Lucy Ashton Hackett, Mr. Campbell, and Mr. Perkins. Dr. Annie Patterson conducted.

Notice of the production of "The Warlock," a Comedy-Opera by Messrs. Alfred Smythe and Edgar Little, was unavoidably omitted from last issue. It was played for six nights, commencing February 1, at the Queen's Royal Theatre, to large and appreciative audiences, and is perhaps the chief recent event of musical interest in Dublin. Mr. Smythe's libretto abounds in pretty lyrics, and Mr. Little's music is admirably adapted to his subject. Miss Du Bedat took the principal soprano part, Rosalie; Miss Prescott, the contralto part of Margery; Mr. Lowther Campbell was Captain Forde; Mr. J. V. Mullen, Sir Ralph Lascelles: and Mr. Smythe, the Warlock. Mr. Edgar Little conducted. This opera is again to be performed at the Gaiety Theatre early in the present month, and again for Miss Du Bedat's benefit later in the month.

MUSIC IN THE EAST OF ENGLAND.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The second Concert given under the auspices of the Great Yarmouth Musical Society, which took place on the 17th ult., in the Town Hall, was a marked improvement on its previous effort. Both band and chorus were augmented, and under the bâton of Mr. H. Stonex a capital performance of Rossini's "Stabat Mater" was enjoyed by a large and appreciative audience. Miss Julia Jones, Miss Susetta Fenn, Mr. Harper Kearton, and Mr. Kempton undertook the principal vocal numbers so satisfactorily that several encores were awarded. In the opening chorus a slight hesitation in taking up a lead was noticeable, but in the later numbers confidence was re-established. The band, led by Mr. C. W. Moss, gave a good account of the accompaniments. The "Stabat Mater" was followed by a selection of arias, duets, and choruses from oratorios suitable to the Lenten season.

The Diss Choral Society gave an interesting Concert on the evening of the 10th ult., in the Corn Hall, which was largely patronised. Costa's "Eli" was the work chosen, the principal vocalists being Miss Kate Fusselle, Master Albert Lee, Mr. Holberry Hagyard, Mr. F. A. Tipple, and Mr. Thomas Kempton. Considering the numerical force engaged, a fairly satisfactory result was obtained. The second part consisted of a miscellaneous selection.

The second of the three interim Concerts given by the Festival Committee between the triennial gatherings took place in St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, on the 22nd ult. The main object in view in connection with these undertakings is to benefit the chorus by giving them an opportunity to meet with some regularity for practice, and it is satisfactory to report that the public seconded the efforts of the Committee by attending the Concert in larger numbers than usual. Possibly this was accounted for by the happy selection of the work to be performed, for no composition of these later days is comparable with Gounod's "Redemption." The artists engaged were Madame Emily Squire, Miss E. Kerrison, and Mrs. Reyner, Mr. L. Fryer, Mr. D. Price, and Mr. H. Thorndike. The "March to Calvary," the "Darkness," and the "Earthquake" were remarkably well played by the orchestra (especially strengthened for the occasion), the chromatic passages in the latter being well in tune. The chorus showed unmistakable signs of improvement, and the voices are fresher and more vigorous than has been the case for several years past. In the chorals this was especially noticeable, while the concluding chorus to the second part, "Unfold, ye portals everlasting," and also that at the close of the work, "The Word is Flesh become," were admirable specimens of choral singing. Dr. Bunnett presided at the organ, and the band was led by Mr. F. W. R. Noverre. Great credit is due to Dr. Horace Hill, the Conductor, for the very careful training the chorus has undergone, and also for the judicious discretion displayed in selecting the members of the band, for it may be truly said that, excepting Festival week, no such performance of any similar work has taken place in Norwich for years past.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The place of honour in this month's report is worthily held by the Choral Union's performance of "Elijah" on the 7th ult. This body of singers has steadily improved under Mr. Collinson's patient care, but even its best friends were surprised at the good quality of tone and the attention to nuance displayed in the various choral numbers—"Thanks be to God," "Be not afraid," and "Lord, our Creator," may be singled out for special praise. Mr. Andrew Black was in his best form, and the result was a powerful reading of the part with which he is so familiar. Mr. Newbury did acceptable service in the tenor solos, and Madame Spada and Miss Meredyth Elliott were also well received. Mr. Collinson conducted with great care and conspicuous success. The hall was crowded.

Messrs. Wood's only orchestral Concert this season, on the 12th ult., gave us again the pleasure of hearing Sir Charles Hallé's orchestra, and a large audience availed themselves of the opportunity. The popular Conductor received a perfect ovation, which showed the hold he has on the Edinburgh public.

Professor Niecks delivered his inaugural address in the University on February 29. The subject was "Musical Education and Culture," and the Lecture deserves more space than it is possible to devote to it here. Four illustrated Lectures on "Early Instrumental Forms" were delivered to mixed audiences last month; and next year, classes, to which lady students will be admitted, will listen to Lectures on Æsthetics, Form, Harmony, Rhythm, and The History of Music.

Two courses of Lectures on Musical History and Musical Forms were delivered, during the second term, in Dundee University College, by Mr. Franklin Peterson.

Mr. Lingard's Ladies' Choir gave its second Concert in the Literary Institute on the 22nd ult. The most important work was "The Rural Seasons," by Stark, and the second part of the programme was chiefly composed of songs, duets, &c., by members of the Choir.

The Perth Orchestral Society gave a very successful Concert on February 25. A portion of Beethoven's First Symphony, with other works of less ambitious character, were very creditably performed, under the conductorship of Mr. J. W. Bryson, and showed a marked advance on former performances. The vocalist was Madame Annie Grey.

Miss Steele's Select Choir gave a Concert of popular music on February 27. Each piece was given with the well-known care of the Choir.

The last Concert of the season of the Perth Musical Society, on the 19th ult., proved in many respects the best it has yet given. Gade's "Crusaders" formed the first portion of the programme; and if the choruses were not all perfectly sung, they at least did not leave much to be desired. All that Mr. Graves, the Conductor, could do was ably done, but the time at his disposal was rather limited for the practice of so difficult a work. The soloists were Miss Charlotte Walker, Mr. J. F. O'Mara, and Mr. Ffrangcon Davies. The accompaniments were admirably performed by Mr. W. H. Cole's Glasgow Orchestra. A miscellaneous ballad programme by the principals followed, when Mr. Davies fairly carried off the honours by his splendid rendering of the Templar's love song from "Ivanhoe."

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The second annual Concert by the students of the Glasgow Athenæum School of Music, which numbers nearly a thousand students, took place on February 25. A very marked advance was shown by the pupils in almost every piece of the interesting programme. It included selections from Henry Smart's popular Cantata "King René's Daughter," admirably sung by the Ladies' Choir, under the bâton of Mr. Allan Macbeth, the able Principal of the School.

On the 7th ult. the Kyrle Choir gave its annual Concert, when Grimm's attractive Cantata "The Soul's Aspiration" was performed in very creditable style by the chorus as now augmented, and on the following evening Gaul's Cantata "Ruth" was in the safe charge of the Park Parish Church Choir, in conjunction with Dr. Hulton Middleton's body of juvenile vocalists. The solos in the Birmingham composer's popular work were rendered with musicianlike intelligence, and during the evening Dr. Middleton brought out the fine qualities of the Willis organ with unfailing skill.

Lady Hallé was the leading attraction at the third and last Concert of the season, given on the 11th ult. by her gifted husband. Notwithstanding the counter-attraction of the Lord Provost's ball the audience was much larger than on any previous occasion and the enthusiasm evoked was something remarkable. On the evening last-named Handel's "Ode to St. Cecilia's Day" formed part of the programme submitted at the Concert of the Camphill United Presbyterian Church. The performance, under the conductorship of Mr. W. A. Schofield, was excellent, a criticism which also applies to the rendering of Stainer's "Crucifixion," given the same night by the small but well balanced choir of Caledonian Road U.P. Church, of which Mr. Robert Turnbull is Choirmaster. Handel's "Messiah" was performed, on the 14th ult., in the Dennistoun U.P. Church, by a select chorus of forty voices. Mr. A. W. Young was the Conductor and his choristers gave a very fine account of their familiar work. The solos were also adequately cared for by Mrs. Taggart, Miss J. M. Blackadder, Mr. Summers, and Mr. Riddell. On the following night a very good performance of "The Messiah" was given by the Kelvinside Parish Church Choir, under the charge of Mr. J. Chapman Murray; and on the same evening the seventh Concert of the Glasgow Quartet series took place in another quarter of the city. The Glasgow Choral Union guarantee fund now exceeds £4,000, and arrangements are accordingly being made against next season's operations. Mr. August Manns is expected to return as Conductor of the Orchestral Concerts, and it is in contemplation to produce, inter alia, Handel's "Belshazzar." The Union's last Concert for the season took place on the 24th ult., when Dr. Joachim, Miss Fanny Davies, Signor Piatti, and Mrs. Helen Trust were heard in a programme containing many good things—amongst others Schubert's Trio in B flat (Op. 99), Brahms's Capriccio in B minor, Schumann's Canon in A flat, Mr. Piatti's Sonata "Idyllica," and Mozart's Trio in E major.

On February 27 Mr. J. C. Dibdin lectured to the Glasgow Society of Musicians, in the St. Andrew's (Kent) Hall, on "'Twixt Tweedle-dum and Tweedle-dee," the subject of his Lecture being the history of the introduction of Italian Opera into England under the auspices of Handel, Buononcini, and others, and the well-known combination called the Royal Academy. The Lecturer followed the subject down through the life of Handel, and gave an account of the fights between the rival factions who supported the different singers, and of the modus operandi of dramatic and operatic performances during last century. The various points in the Lecture were made clear by excellent lime-light views.

MUSIC IN LEEDS, HUDDERSFIELD, &c.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The last Leeds Subscription Concert was given in the Coliseum on the 16th ult., when a first-rate but somewhat lengthy programme of chamber music was gone through in a manner eminently worthy of the distinguished interpreters, Dr. Joachim, Mr. Alfred Gibson, Mr. Piatti, and Miss Fanny Davies. The Concert opened with Schumann's Trio in D minor (Op. 63) and closed with Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor (Op. 25). Mr. Piatti created the furore of the evening by his performance of his own clever "Airs Baskyrs," and was literally compelled to give an encore. Mrs. Helen Trust was the vocalist, and was successful in spite of a severe cold.

On the 10th ult. the Halifax Choral Society brought the season to a close with a good all-round performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah." The chorus, under Mr. W. H. Garland's careful guidance, again proved themselves to be possessed of the great choral qualities of strength, finish, and intelligence. Mr. Andrew Black undertook the title-rôle, and was highly successful in every respect, combining legitimate vocalism with truthful dramatic expression. The rest of the solo parts were in the hands of Miss Eveleen Carlton, Mrs. Sarah Cragg, and Mr. J. J. Simpson, with aid from Miss Lucy Turner, Mrs. W. Brookes, and Messrs. F. W. Fleming and S. Field in the double quartet. The Halifax Subscription Concerts came to an end on the 14th ult. Mr. Harold Bauer and Miss Winifred Bauer—two talented violinists—together with their sister, Miss Ethel Bauer (pianoforte), gave an excellent rendering of a high-class miscellaneous programme, and Mrs. Fanny Moody and Mr. Charles Manners contributed vocal selections.

For the eleventh Huddersfield Subscription Concert, given on the 1st ult., the London Military Band was engaged, and played an admirable selection of "arrangements" with much success. The Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society lent variety to the programme by their finished performance of Gounod's Psalm "By Babylon's Wave" and some part-songs. At the twelfth and last Concert, on the 15th ult., the talented "Bauer" trio appeared, and were highly successful in an attractive programme of chamber music. Mrs. Fanny Moody and Mr. Charles Manners sang some well-known songs acceptably, and Mr. Ibeson accompanied.

On the 15th ult. the Dewsbury Choral Society gave a fine performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," when the honours of the evening were easily carried off by Mr. G. H. Hirst's admirably trained choralists. Mr. W. H. Dawson, in the leading solo part, was heard to some little disadvantage owing to a bad cold. The gentleman originally announced to sing the tenor music was similarly afflicted, and wisely sent Mr. Edward Branscombe to take his place. Miss Maggie Davies and Miss Marie Hooton were both successful in the soprano and contralto parts respectively, and Mrs. J. Wales Hirst, Mrs. J. Chadwick, and Messrs. J. Hutchinson, W. Blackburn, and W. Roberts lent valuable aid in the double quartet.

The Barnsley St. Cecilia Society, a young and promising institution, gave Berlioz's popular "Damnation de Faust" on the 17th ult., in the Hall of the Harvey Institute. The performance must be pronounced a decided achievement, the honour of which is mainly due to Mr. R. S. Burton, the Society's Conductor. Miss Zippora Monteith, Mr. Henry Piercy, Mr. W. H. Brereton (Mephistopheles), and Mr. William Riley were evidently in sympathy with the effective solo music, and the chief airs and concerted numbers were rendered with all due effect. The orchestra—such an important factor in Berlioz's score—was thoroughly efficient, and gave a good account of the many picturesque instrumental numbers.

A clever and humorous comic Operetta, entitled "Amaranthus; or, the Enchanter and the Clown," was given in the Town Hall in connection with the Vatican Bazaar. The libretto is by Mr. R. P. Oglesby and the music by Mr. Arthur E. Grimshaw; and so much talent is revealed that more ambitious things from the same pens may confidently be anticipated. Mr. Oglesby has happily caught the Gilbertian vein, as witness the lines--

> Trip we happy nymphs and swains,
> O'er the soft and verdant lea;
> Brought by cheap excursion trains,
> Truly tripping trippers we.

and Mr. Grimshaw's music is always tuneful and appropriate.

Dr. Spark's Organ Recitals continue to give pleasure to the many music-lovers who attend them.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The latest season of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society has been brought to a close in a manner befitting its earlier and most honourable traditions. The five weeks or so, within the space of which have been included the three final Concerts, have witnessed a large amount of good choral work. In this regard there comes first Braun's "Sir Olaf," already referred to, and at the penultimate Concert very fine readings were given of the third Acts of Wagner's "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin." This was on the 1st ult., and the season came to an end three weeks later with the production of Dvorák's Birmingham "Requiem." The performance of Dvorák's Mass was in every respect worthy of this fine work, and in regard to the choral portions an advance upon the initial recital at Birmingham. The resident chorus of the Philharmonic Society has in fact never been heard to greater advantage than on the 22nd ult., and the intelligence and artistic feeling brought to bear upon this part of the work reflected special credit upon Mr. Branscombe, the chorusmaster. With Sir Charles Hallé and his band the unveiling of all the picturesque colours of the Czech writer's score was evidently a labour of love, and the principals, two of whom brought with them the traditions of the original performance—Mesdames Anna Williams and Hope Glenn, and Messrs. Iver McKay and A. Black—formed a truly goodly company.

If Liverpool cannot lay claim to pre-eminence on the score of the choral work generally done among its half-million inhabitants, there is a good deal to be said in favour of the position of orchestral music in this city and district. During the period covered in the present notice there have been Concerts by the Orchestral Society, the Societa Armonica, and other similar organisations; while in the more refined walks of instrumental music excellent performances have been given by the Schiever Quartet, and an experimental evening's music of the wind chamber order has received such a measure of support as should ensure its repetition. Those who took part in the latter Concert were the principal soloists of the Hallé Orchestra, with Mr. H. S. Welsing at the pianoforte.

The Lenten Oratorio given this year at St. Peter's Pro-Cathedral has been Sullivan's "Prodigal Son," Mr. F. H. Burstall conducting and Mr. Collins being at the organ. While on ecclesiastical topics, it is to be recorded that Mr. W. C. Ashlin, who for nearly forty years was Organist at St. Nicholas's Church, was recently presented with a valuable acknowledgment of his services upon the occasion of his resignation.

The production of Meyerbeer's "Prophet" in English by the Carl Rosa Company proved a worthy climax to the most successful season of Opera that has probably been ever recorded in the provinces. So great was the impression created by the revival of the story of the Anabaptists and John of Leyden that occurring as it did towards the close of the Opera season nothing was left to the management, if public demands were to be satisfied, but to give extra performances. As the Rosa Company were only a forty minutes' journey distant from Liverpool—viz., at Manchester—for some little time after the end of their engagement at the former city, the scenery, &c., of the Opera was retained at the Court Theatre, and the whole troupe brought over for a series of Matinées.

At Warrington Hubert Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens" and Bennett's "May Queen" were given early last month, under Mr. F. H. Crossley; and at Southport and Earlestown respectively Haydn's "Creation" and Cowen's "Rose Maiden" have been performed, under Mr. Clarke and Mr. Corlett. Dr. J. C. Bridge, of Chester, is still an invalid and had to abandon the conducting of his "Rudel" at Bradford, on the 18th ult.

At the Young Men's Christian Association a performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was given, on the 24th ult., under Mr. Hardcastle. On the 22nd ult. selections from Bach's "Matthew" Passion were rendered at St. Margaret's Church, under Mr. Branscombe. At Birkenhead, Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus" was announced for the 27th ult., by the local Choral Society, under Mr. Peters. The first Concert at the Music School took place on the 4th ult., the work of the new institution itself being chiefly represented by the playing of the ensemble classes.

The question of sham degrees and cheap diplomas formed the subject of an address delivered by Mr. J. W. Potter at the regular monthly meeting of the N.S.P.M., held on the 12th ult., and a resolution condemnatory of the use of such things was the result. In the evening an excellent Recital was given by Charles and Alfred Ross, two clever young students of the Berlin Conservatorium, whose father is one of the prominent professors of Liverpool.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Our musical season is almost over, and the quietness of summer will soon reign again. All the regular courses of Concerts have ceased and, except the excellent Organ Recitals of Mr. Pyne, we shall now be left to the occasional visits of those wandering musicians who may be bold enough to venture among us.

After the annual visit of Herr Joachim, when the third Concerto of Max Bruch charmed by the clear scoring of some bold themes and by the increasing skill of the author in that most difficult task of congruously incorporating the slow passages of the soloist with the larger plan of the orchestral outline, Sir Charles Hallé gave his subscribers the one choral novelty of the year, Dvorák's "Requiem," the rendering of which was, in every respect, admirable. Only in one place, and for one brief moment, did the choir fail to do justice to the training of Mr. Wilson and need the ready help of the Organist, Mr. Fogg; and all who know the work will appreciate the meaning of such praise. The principals, the Misses Anna Williams and Hilda Wilson and Messrs. Iver McKay and Andrew Black, were irreproachable; and no pains were spared in the performance of the work. That it excited interest goes without saying, but it did more—the mingled dignity and pathos of certain portions and the dramatic power of others created an impression that was evidently deep and will certainly be lasting. Closing his thirty-fourth campaign with a liberality and brilliancy to which he has of late years accustomed us, Sir Charles associated Lady Hallé with Herr Joachim in the performance of Bach's D minor Concerto and Spohr's B minor Concertante. More finished violin playing it is impossible to imagine. Nor was the orchestra content to leave us without renewed evidence of its capability; for the interpretation of Dvorák's Fourth Symphony and Beethoven's "Fidelio" Overture at the twentieth meeting was not less spirited and complete than the playing of Haydn's simpler D minor (No. 49) Symphony and Weber's Prelude to "Euryanthe" at the eighteenth, and caused us to wonder why opportunities of hearing such works so given should fail to attract in the metropolis.

At Mr. Barrett's closing entertainments Mr. Frederick Dawson has proved most attractive, and has won a very high place among the ranks of pianists of greatest pretension; and the liberal provision of vocalists of celebrity has kept alive and undiminished the interest of the crowds which frequent the St. James's Hall.

Not only did Dr. Watson essay a performance of the "Prodigal Son" at the closing meeting of the Vocal Society, but, aided by the various suburban societies which he directs and by a tolerably efficient band, he produced, at the Free Trade Hall, the revised version of his Opera-Cantata "Fair Rosine." As in all Dr. Watson's works, considerable facility in melodic writing was shown, and a pleasing simplicity of construction. It is probable that far greater dramatic power would have been proved had the principals—excepting Madame Farrar-Hyde—been better acquainted with their parts and the different sections of the choir more accustomed to sing together. But throughout the whole evening the friendly feeling of the audience was evident.

At the Gentlemen's Concert Hall, in addition to one orchestral programme—in which Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony largely overshadowed all else—several afternoon Recitals have been given. Special mention must be made of Miss Wakefield's interesting and well-illustrated Lecture on "Scotch Song."

The Carl Rosa Opera Company is reaping an abundant harvest at the Theatre Royal, and is displaying more energy than of late. Crowded audiences have assembled to the many performances of Mascagni's "Rustic Chivalry" and of Verdi's very spectacular "Aïda," whereas the imprudence of relying any longer upon the old stock pieces has been thoroughly proved.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM.

The Philharmonic Choir closed its season on February 27 with a very good Concert. The band of the Royal Artillery, under Cavaliere Zavertal, played several orchestral selections, notably Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite, the Overture to "Mignon," and a charmingly quaint Minuet (MS.) by Mr. Marshall-Ward, the Conductor of the choir, which was loudly applauded. Miss Alice Esty was the vocalist, this being her first appearance in Nottingham. Her songs were "Dove Sono" (Mozart), the waltz song from "Romeo e Giulietta" (Gounod), and Eckert's brilliant "Swiss Song." The choir, under Mr. Marshall-Ward's able direction, did ample justice to Gounod's "Come unto Him," Zimmermann's charming "Fairy Song," and Smart's "My true love."

The Sacred Harmonic Society's programme, on the 17th ult., included Handel's Organ Concerto (No. 4), Gounod's "Messe Solennelle," and Gade's "Psyche." Madame Nordica, Miss Montgomery, Miss Harding, and Messrs. Branscombe and Andrew Black were the principals. The performance of the Organ Concerto by Mr. Essex and the orchestra deservedly won considerable applause. Gounod's Mass received an impressive rendering on the whole. It would be difficult to get a better performance of Gade's lovely Cantata "Psyche." Principals, chorus, and band alike distinguished themselves. Madame Nordica sang the interesting music of Psyche with great expression and power, and Mr. Andrew Black gave a fine rendering of the music of Eros.

The first presentation of a Cantata, "The Return of the Fairies" (by Mr. Arthur Richards, a rising Nottingham composer), on the 21st ult., was an event of some interest. The Cantata is at once melodious and musicianly, and its performance, under the auspices of the Bowman-Hart Musical Guild, was very satisfactory.

Mr. Allen's fifth Popular Classical Concert, on the 24th ult., included Beethoven's Septet, the performance of which was entrusted to an exceptionally able body of musicians, Messrs. Willy Hess, Speelmann, Vieuxtemps, Hoffman, Egerton Mann, and Lalande. It is rarely that the provincial public can hear any performance of Beethoven's Septet, and still more rarely such a one as was given by these artists. Tone and expression were alike superb. Mr. Hess also played Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G minor in a masterly way. Schubert's A minor Quartet and Dvorák's Terzetto for strings made up a noteworthy programme. These Concerts have been deservedly very highly appreciated, and we trust may be continued with increasing success.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Opportunities have been afforded during the term of hearing Miss Nikita, Dr. Joachim, Mrs. Helen Trust, Madame Haas, Mr. Plunket Greene, Sir Charles and Lady Hallé, and Mr. Ludwig. Miss Nikita, Mrs. Trust, and Madame Haas had not been heard in Oxford before, and all were so successful that a hearty welcome may be safely predicted for them should they return.

The series of Public Classical Concerts which has now terminated cannot be regarded as perfectly successful in an artistic sense. The want which it was hoped they would supply was the absence of orchestral music in Oxford. But as a matter of fact Chamber Concerts, which it was quite unnecessary to multiply, have formed half of the performances. Nor has the band been entirely satisfactory at the Orchestral Concerts. It has been too small and comprised too many novices to give really efficient renderings of symphonic works. At the Concert on February 10 this want of quantity and quality was very marked. A first season is always somewhat tentative, and it is to be hoped that the liberal public support accorded to the undertaking will induce the promoters to improve their orchestra next year.

There is not much more to add. Mr. Farmer signalised his 150th Concert at Balliol College, on the 13th ult., with a revival of Purcell's Te Deum and Jubilate, and a novelty in the shape of a Motet by Mr. Walker, a member of Balliol College. There have been countless Concerts of a miscellaneous character, and we have been pertinaciously lectured, a fate from which University cities can hardly hope to escape.

MUSIC IN BERLIN.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The gifted but eccentric Conductor of the Philharmonic Concerts, Dr. Hans von Bülow, has again seen fit to address his audience from the platform, this time, however, in more conciliatory terms than on the occasion a few weeks ago when he uttered the memorable rebuke, "Oh! unmusical public!" As usual, the ninth Concert of the series, which took place on Monday, the 14th ult., was preceded by a public rehearsal on the Sunday, in which Herr Stavenhagen and Fräulein Finkenstein, the well-known mezzo-soprano, took part. After a more than usually enthusiastic audience had warmly applauded the singer's fine rendering of the air "Il est doux, il est bon," from Massenet's "Hérodiade," Von Bülow turned round and, addressing the "Geehrtes Publikum," informed them that the Sunday audiences pleased him much more than the Monday ones, and this, he added, by way of afterthought, was the opinion of Herr Stavenhagen and also of Fräulein Finkenstein. There is no doubt that the Doctor has some ground for his preference, as those who attend the rehearsals are for the most part intelligent music-lovers, while the Monday Concerts partake more of the nature of a "function" to which various elements are attracted. At the next Concert, the last of the series, Von Bülow takes his leave of the Berlin public, to devote himself for the future to Hamburg. There is no doubt that his departure will have great effect upon the policy and probably upon the immediate fortunes of the Philharmonic Concerts, which it is sincerely to be hoped will still retain their present prestige. In any case, a warm welcome will be given to Herr Moszkowsky, who comes from Breslau to undertake the difficult task of succeeding Hans von Bülow.

Mdlle. Etelka Gerster gave her second and last Concert in the Sing-Academie on the 6th ult., in conjunction with the pianist, Sally Liebling. The singer met with the same success as before, the programme including Rossini's "Una voce poco fa," the aria "Pour quoi" from "Lakmé," Bizet's "Vielle Chanson," and several German Lieder.

A very successful début was made here on February 26, by a youthful pianist, Miss Muriel Elliot, a fifteen-year old pupil of Herr Stavenhagen. Miss Elliot played, with the Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Herr Stavenhagen, Beethoven's C minor Concerto and Liszt's Concerto in A, besides several solos by Chopin and Liszt, in all of which, in addition to an advanced technique, she evinced a degree of musical intelligence which separates her from the ever-increasing number of such youthful performers.

The first performance of Mascagni's "Freund Fritz" was given on Saturday, the 19th ult., in the Opera house. The production had been awaited with quite unusual impatience, and the house was crammed with an audience who did not at first seem to find their expectations realised. It is not improbable that many of them had looked forward to a repetition of the excitements of "Cavalleria Rusticana," and were hardly prepared for the purely idyllic nature of the later work. However, the audience warmed as the evening proceeded, and the Prelude to the third act was loudly re-demanded. As the Rabbi David, the veteran Bety made a special success; but Herr Sylva was scarcely at home in the lyrical music allotted to Fritz Kobus, his forte lying more in the direction of heroic parts. Frau Pierson was the Suzel, and Fräulein Rothauser the Joseph. The Opera was beautifully mounted, and the skilful conducting of Herr Weingärtner was in a great measure answerable for the successful issue of the evening.

The personnel of the Opernhaus will sustain a severe loss at the close of this season in the person of its leading contralto, Frau Gisela Staudigl. This excellent artist goes to Frankfurt, while her place here will be taken by Fräulein Marie Goetze.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

Dvorák's fame and popularity in this country seems to be on a continual crescendo. Each new work of his is performed here as soon as it can be obtained, and there are also frequent repetitions of his earlier works. The "Requiem Mass" received its first performance in America on February 25, by the Church Choral Society, of New York, under the direction of Mr. Richard Henry Warren, the accomplished Choir Director of St. Bartholomew's Church, New York City. The work was performed in St. George's Church with full orchestra, chorus, and solo parts, and created a profound impression. Mr. Warren deserves high congratulations not only for his courage in attempting such a difficult work, but also for his success in producing it. The soloists were Miss Clementine de Vere, Miss Winant, Mr. Ricketson (an excellent tenor), and Herr Emil Fischer. This same work is also announced for performance at the Biennial Cincinnati Music Festival in May, under the direction of Theodore Thomas.

Dvorák's Fourth Symphony received its first American production on February 27, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in that city. It was at once successful. New Yorkers had an opportunity of hearing it on the 17th ult., when it was played by the Philharmonic Society. Both Nikisch, who leads the Boston orchestra, and Seidl, who directs the Philharmonic, are in full sympathy with the modern romantic, or, better, expressive school, so that this composition appealed especially to them, and in both cities the performance was magnificent.

Dvorák will soon be an American, for he is scheduled to arrive here in September next to take the directorship of Mrs. Thurber's National Conservatory of Music. Too much praise cannot be given to this enthusiastic lady, who has spent time, labour, and money in the effort to establish a music school of the highest class and truly national in its objects and methods. The school has already developed some very promising pupils, and Mrs. Thurber's intention is to make it complete in every detail. To this end nothing is spared.

The sensational success of Miss Marguerite Reid in the rôle of Ophelia, at the Metropolitan Opera House, is the talk of the day. Her opportunity came unexpectedly, but she seized it. She is young, beautiful, and accomplished, and has evidently a bright future in store for her.

The Opera season closed on Saturday, the 12th ult., with great success. The company now goes to Boston and other cities, and will return late to New York for a supplemental season of two weeks. The success of the latter half of the season especially has been enormous, and it is now rumoured that the same managers, Abbey and Grau, will direct the opera next winter. The stars of the season have been unmistakably Madame Emma Eames, M. Lassalle, and the De Reszkè Brothers.

Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust" was sung with splendid effect by the Apollo Club of Chicago, on February 15, with Signor Campanini, Mr. William Ludwig, and Miss Kleine in the solo parts. Mr. Thomas was the Conductor, and the Chicago Orchestra played the instrumental parts.

A very interesting experiment is to be tried next month. On the 150th anniversary of the first production of "The Messiah," Mr. Walter Damrosch intends to produce that work by the New York Oratorio Society, with the original Handelian orchestration, all the performances hitherto of this work have been either Mozart's score or a mixture of that and Handel's. In Boston and also in some other places both Costa's and Franz's scores have been used. It will be interesting to watch the reports of the experiment. The New York cities are not, as a whole, enthusiastic over Handel. On the day following "Acis and Galatea" will be performed in costume, and a miscellaneous programme will be supplemented to fill out the evening.

The Schubert Society of Newark, N.J., gave its second Subscription Concert on the 9th ult., under the direction of Mr. L. A. Russell. Included in the programme were the "Rigoletto" Quartet, sung as a full chorus; "The Lord is a Man of war," by all the male voices; "One limpid stream" ("Joshua"), by all the female voices; Massenet's "Narcissus"; and Part-songs by Faning and Cowen.

The final Examination for fifteen original Open Scholarships at the Royal College of Music took place on February 25, 26, and 27. The total number of candidates applying throughout the kingdom was 526. Of these, sixty were disqualified on various grounds of irregularity, &c., and the remainder were examined by the preliminary local Examiners at eighty-one centres (mostly municipal buildings) on February 3, and reduced to 151; and these were brought up for final examination at the College itself, and divided themselves as follows:—Composition, 9; Singing, 34; Pianoforte, 60; Organ, 10; Violin, 19; Violoncello, 3; Double Bass, 1; Wind Instruments, 13; Harp, 2. The following are the names of the successful Candidates:—Singing—Herbert Hilton, Norman McLeod Jones, Jessie H. Scott. Pianoforte—Edith E. B. Foster, E. Howard Jones, Evelyn G. King. Organ—John F. Shaw, Jun. Violin—Katherine R. Howell, Thomas Jeavans. Violoncello—Emma Smith. Double Bass—John G. S. Jones. Wind Instruments: Oboe—None. Clarinet—John William Peck. Bassoon—Edward Dubrucq. Trumpet—None. French Horn—Walter W. Wilkinson. Harp—Mabel Martin. Composition—None of the Candidates were found to reach a sufficiently high standard.

Miss Lottie Williams and Miss Bertha Sladdins gave an evening Concert on the 24th ult., at the Vestry Hall, Hampstead. Miss Williams, a talented young lady, pupil of Mr. James Shaw, gave an efficient interpretation of Beethoven's "Moonlight" Sonata, and also displayed considerable ability in her subsequent rendering of pieces by Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Henselt. Miss Sladdins's contributions to the programme consisted in songs by Haydn and Solomon. The Concert-givers were ably supported by Miss Lucie Johnstone, Messrs. Reynolds Wood, Henry Pope, Alfred Slocombe, and Herr Greiffenhagen. The performances also included an Adagio and Allegro from a Pianoforte Trio by Woldemar Bargiel, played (as the programme informed us) for the first time in this country, in the interpretation of which Miss Williams was associated with Mr. Slocombe and Herr Greiffenhagen. Mr. Alfred Mapple was the Conductor.

The Competition for the Santley Prize took place at the Royal Academy of Music on the 19th ult. The examiners were Messrs. Henry R. Bird, Waddington Cooke, and Signor A. Romili (chairman). There were eleven candidates, and the prize was awarded to Llewela Davies. The examiners highly commended Catherine Rodbard. The Competition for the Llewelyn Thomas Gold Medal took place on the 24th ult. The examiners were Mrs. Hutchinson, Mr. Charles Chilley, and Mr. Barton McGuckin (chairman). There were fifteen candidates, and the medal was awarded to Elizabeth Mackenzie; the examiners highly commended Minnie Robinson. The Competition for the Evill Prize also took place on the 24th ult. The examiners were Mrs. Hutchinson, Mr. Charles Chilley, and Mr. Barton McGuckin (chairman). There were three candidates, and the prize was awarded to Philip Brozel.

On the 4th ult. the 277th consecutive monthly Concert was given by the members of the St. George's Glee Union at the Pimlico Rooms, Warwick Street. A capital selection of songs and glees was well rendered. Handel's "Acis and Galatea" occupied the second part, the characters of Galatea, Acis, Damon, and Polyphemus being represented by Miss Stella Maris, Mr. Wilbur Gunn, Mr. Holberry Hagyard, and Mr. Frederick Bevan, who gave excellent renderings of their respective parts. The choir, under the command of its indefatigable Conductor, Mr. Joseph Monday, showed great ability in the chorus parts of the work, especially so in the difficult chorus "Wretched Lovers." Mr. F. R. Kinkee accompanied on the pianoforte, and received a well-earned ovation at the close of the Serenata.

Miss Winifred Parker, an accomplished soprano vocalist, gave an agreeable miscellaneous Concert at the Princes' Hall on Tuesday evening, the 22nd ult., the most important feature of the programme being Mr. Gerard Cobb's Quintet in C for pianoforte and strings (Op. 22). This is not only a scholarly, but a pleasing work, the themes being for the most part melodious and the construction of each movement perfectly symmetrical. The slow movement in F minor and major is particularly expressive, and the Finale very bright and genial. Mr. Cobb's work was for the most part excellently played by Mr. Frank Idle, Mr. Philip Cathie, Mr. Percy Elliott. Mr. A. E. Dyson, and Miss Mildred Bloxham. The remainder of the Concert does not call for notice.

Mrs. Leith Macgregor gave her first evening Concert at Steinway Hall, on the 14th ult., assisted by Miss Charlotte Walker and Mr. Joseph Hollman. She was heard alone in pieces by Bach, Chopin, Schubert, Brahms, and Liszt, and with Mr. Hollman in L. Emil Bach's melodious and difficult Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello in A minor. Though not deficient in power, Mrs. Macgregor excels rather in delicate and fanciful passages. Miss Walker, described as "the new dramatic soprano," created a very favourable impression. She has a fine voice of rich quality and extensive compass and sings with great feeling. Mr. Hollman delighted every one by his refined and masterful renderings of pieces by Schumann and Davidoff. Mr. Spencer Lorraine accompanied with tact.

Welshmen (including the Lord Mayor) mustered in force at St. Paul's Cathedral on February 29, the eve of St. David's Day, for the special service given entirely in the language of the Principality. With an important exception in the musical department everything was done to give the gathering a distinctive tone. The setting of the Canticles was that of Owain Alaw, known to Englishmen as John Owen, and a chorus, "Gwyn ei fyd a ystyria wrth y tlawd" ("Blessed is he that considereth the poor"), by the same musician, and several hymns were sung; but it was hardly complimentary to aspiring Welsh composers that as solo for Mr. D. Lewys the tenor air from "St. Paul," "Be thou faithful unto death" ("Bydd ffyddlawn hyd angan"), should have been determined upon.

Miss Jeanne Douste, a talented young pianist who has obtained favourable recognition from time to time, commenced a series of three Concerts of Rubinstein's music at the Steinway Hall on Monday afternoon, the 21st ult. Her programme on this occasion consisted of early works, including the Sonata in E minor for pianoforte and violin (Op. 19), three of the Salonstücke (Op. 66) for the same combination of instruments, and some minor pieces for pianoforte solo. These pleasing examples of the Russian composer's genius were well interpreted, Miss Douste having the co-operation of M. Tivadar Nachèz in the duets. Madame Valda contributed a very trying aria from Rubinstein's Opera "The Demon."

A very interesting Concert was given on the 19th ult. at the newly-opened Lecture Hall of the North-East London Institute. The programme included Mendelssohn's Trio in C minor, admirably played by Messrs. Bonawitz, Ortmann, and Van der Straeten; Weber's "Invitation to the Waltz" (Mr. Bonawitz), and Beethoven's Septet, of which a very good performance was given by Messrs. Ortmann, Mistowski, Van der Straeten, J. W. Mathew, Scott, Spottiswoode, and Blandford. The vocalist was Miss Helen Saunders, who gave with much taste songs by Lassen, Schubert, and Gounod. The hall, which seats over 400, was well filled by an appreciative and enthusiastic audience.

An excellent performance of Part II. of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was given at the People's Palace on Sunday, the 13th ult., by the People's Palace Choral Society and Orchestra. The admission was free and a crowded audience filled the large and spacious Queen's Hall to its utmost extent. Mr. Orton Bradley (Musical Director to the People's Palace) conducted, Mr. W. R. Cave was leader, and Mr. B. Jackson (Organist of the Palace) was at the organ. The soloists were Miss Annie Lea, Miss Annie Layton, Mr. Howden Tingey, and Mr. T. Firth. At the usual Organ Recital given in the evening by Mr. Jackson, Rheinberger's new Organ Sonata in D major (No. 15) was included in the programme.

Mr. Charles Fry gave his Recital of "Hamlet," with Mr. Berthold Tours's new music, at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, on February 27. The music was very creditably played by the Leopold Amateur Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Hillier. The Recital was listened to with deep interest. Mr. Fry also gave a Recital of "As you like it" on the 16th ult., at the Birkbeck Institution, before a large audience. The music was rendered, as before, by an orchestra (led by Mr. Gatehouse) and choir, under the direction of Mr. Henry Baker. Mr. Gadsby's "Forest of Arden" has been specially re-arranged for Mr. Fry by the composer for a small orchestra of strings and pianoforte.

The fifth Clapham Philharmonic Concert of this season's series was given on the 10th ult., when Dvorák's "Stabat Mater" and Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch" were performed. The principal artists were Miss Lottie Whitmell, Miss Lily Seddon, Miss Lucy Etheridge, Mr. Laurence Fryer, and Mr. William Ives. Mr. Sidney Hann and Master Szczepanowski accompanied on the pianoforte and Mr. J. P. Attwater on the organ, the Conductor being Mr. Walter Mackway, the director of the Concerts. In spite of the prevalent wintry weather a large audience assisted at the performance, which must be pronounced a remarkably good one.

Mr. J. C. Ames, on February 29, gave a Pianoforte Recital at the Hampstead Conservatoire, with the object of practically demonstrating the advantages claimed for the new keyboard invented by Paul Janko. The abolition of inconvenient stretching of the hand, the facilitation of fingering, and the ease with which transposition can be accomplished were among the points dwelt upon, and the skill of the performer was illustrated in pieces by Bach, Schumann, Rubinstein, Liszt (with Mr. Geaussent to render assistance on a second pianoforte), Chopin, and other composers. To obviate monotony, Herr Max Reichel contributed some violin soli.

The first of a series of evening Concerts was given by Mr. Edgar Pettman on the 1st ult., at St. Mary's Hall, Abbey Road. The programme was of a high class, comprising excerpts from Handel, Mozart, Chopin, Gounod, and Hatton. Four attractive Part-songs by Mr. Pettman and a Duet for two pianofortes by Miss Dora Bright should also be mentioned. The vocalists were Mrs. Bartholomew, Miss Gertrude Nunn, Miss Jessie Hanks, Mr. Ben Grove, and the choir of St. Mary's. Miss James and Mr. E. G. Croager played the pianoforte, and Mr. C. H. Allen Gill the violoncello.

A charming Concert was given on the 9th ult., at 22, Old Bond Street, by Mrs. Carlisle Carr, who sang several new songs, one, "Among the roses," by Gerard Cobb, being particularly admired. Amongst the other artists should be mentioned Miss Marie Alexander, pupil of Mrs. Carr, who sang Gounod's "Ave Maria" with much taste and feeling; Master M. Alexander, a promising young violinist; Miss Phelps, whose fine harp playing was quite a feature of the entertainment; and Messrs. Green and Smith, the latter scoring with Gerald Lane's "Golden Summer."

The value of such an institution as the Choir Benevolent Fund is manifested in the fortieth Annual Report just issued. Considering all things, the members have reason to be satisfied with the state of affairs and to hope that continued prosperity may attend their well-managed organisation. The Festivals at Gloucester and Cheltenham show in their financial results a decided improvement on the country Festivals of 1889. The Deans of Lichfield, Peterborough, St. Asaph, Westminster, and Worcester, in giving offertories to the Fund, set an example which should be extensively copied elsewhere.

The Brondesbury Cecilian Choral Society gave its second Evening Concert on February 25, when a large and appreciative audience assembled to hear Haydn's "Creation." The soloists were Miss Florence Verey, Mr. James Gawthrop (of H.M. Chapel Royal), and Mr. Dan. Price. The work was accompanied by Mr. Sydney Cross (pianoforte) and Dr. J. A. Smith (American organ) and conducted by Mr. Frederic Leeds, who secured a very good performance. At the third Concert of this its first season the Society promises Gade's "Erl-King's Daughter" and a miscellaneous selection.

On the 21st ult., at the Parochial Hall, the St. Paul's (Walworth) Choral Society gave its last Concert of the season, the work chosen being the "May Queen." The choruses were effectively rendered under the able conductorship of the Rev. Corrie Jackson, Chaplain of the Foundling. The soloists were Miss Randell (who was several times encored), Miss Marion Severn, Mr. J. H. Williams, and Mr. Chubb. Mrs. Dubois was a sympathetic accompanist.

Miss Marianne Eissler concluded her agreeable series of Quartet Concerts at the Steinway Hall on Tuesday, the 15th ult. Miss Clara Eissler took part with her in Spohr's Sonata in A flat for harp and violin, and Miss Emmy Eissler in Goldmark's Suite in E for pianoforte and violin, the latter being a specially good performance. Mendelssohn's Quartet in D (Op. 44, No. 1) and Haydn's in B flat (Op. 64, No. 5) were also in the programme, and Mr. Franklin Clive contributed a song.

The first of a series of six Lectures by Mr. Edward W. Naylor, on Robert Browning's poem "Charles Avison," was given at Toynbee Hall, Commercial Street, on the evening of the 8th ult. Unfortunately, owing to the severe indisposition of the lecturer, the remaining five discourses have had to be postponed until after Easter. The syllabus for these announces that several pieces, both instrumental (pianoforte and violin) and choral, of great antiquity, will be performed.

On the 18th ult. Lee Williams's "Bethany" was sung at St. Peter's Church, Dulwich Common, under the direction of Mr. C. H. Allen. The solos were taken by Masters Couldery and Roberts, and Messrs. Rickard, Taylor, Heath, and Smyth, members of the choir. Mr. A. F. Grainger presided at the organ and Mr. T. E. Gatehouse led the orchestra. The work created a deep impression. Mackenzie's Benedictus was played at the close of the service, which will be repeated on Friday evenings during Lent.

A Concert was given in aid of the Schools of St. Mary's, Horseferry Road, on February 25, at Westminster Town Hall, when the following artists took part: Mdlle. Alice Roselli and Madame Enriquez; Messrs. A. Bovett, George Tate, Charles Capper, Campbell Clark, and Stanley Smith; Madame Anna Lang (violin) and Miss Mary Chatterton (harp). Miss Bessie Waugh and Mr. Frank Barât accompanied.

Stainer's "Crucifixion" was given at Christ Church, Brondesbury, on the 11th ult., at a special Lenten Service, and received a good rendering by the regular choir, the solo portions being taken by Messrs. P. H. Degriam (Narrator), E. Ashdown, A. Johnson, W. Wellsman, and W. Winter. The Quartet was taken by Master Breedon and Messrs. A. H. Knight, S. Machin, and F. Machin. Mr. Frederic Leeds, the Organist and Choirmaster, accompanied.

Mr. Augustus Holmes gave his annual Concert at the Public Hall, Peckham, on the 7th ult. The selection of music was of an attractive character, the principal vocalists being Miss Ada Loaring, Miss Marian Holmes, Miss Ellen Marchant, Mr. Ager Grover, and Mr. Fred. Bevan. Instrumental solos were given by Mr. G. Holmes, Mr. Waud, and the Concert-giver.

Professor J. F. Bridge delivered at Toynbee Hall, Commercial Street, on the evening of the 12th ult., his interesting Lecture, entitled "An hour with my Mozart MSS." Prior to the close of the discourse Dr. Bridge distributed amongst the audience copies of the fac-simile of the Minuetto which was included in the Mozart supplement of the December number of The Musical Times.

Benedict's Oratorio "St. Peter" was given at St. John the Evangelist's, Waterloo Road, on Sunday afternoon, the 20th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. S. S. Martyn. The solos were effectively rendered by Misses G. Izard and F. Green, Messrs. Gostick and Winton, and Mr. Henry J. B. Dart presided at the organ.

Mr. T. A. Matthay gave a Concert at the Bow and Bromley Institute on the 5th ult., assisted by Miss Ethel Bevans, Mr. Wilbur Gunn, and Mr. Max Reichel (violin). Brahms, Raff, Henselt, Liszt, Gounod, and the Concert-giver were among the composers drawn upon, and encores were numerous.

At St. Mary's, Kilburn, on February 28, Spohr's "God, Thou art great," was sung at the monthly Cantata Service, which is held at the Church after the evening service. Mr. Edgar Pettman, director of the choir, presided at the organ. These services are becoming increasingly popular in the neighbourhood.

The Kyrle Choir gave a performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" at the Congregational Church, Canning Town, on the 15th ult. The soloists were Miss Ada Loaring, Miss Ball, Mr. Herbert Clinch, and Mr. George Tate. Mr. F. A. W. Docker conducted, and Dr. E. H. Turpin presided at the organ.

The little pastoral play entitled "The Dryad" was performed for the second time, on the 19th ult., at Toynbee Hall. The parts were sustained by Miss Bass, Mrs. Fagan, Miss M. C. Foley, Miss Dobie, and the author, Mrs. Christina Dening.

Stainer's "Crucifixion" is being given, alternately with Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" and "Christus," at the Wednesday Lenten performances at St. Mark's, Notting Hill. Mr. Warren Tear presides at the organ, and the solos are sung by members of the choir.

The abridged version of Bach's Passion Music (St. Matthew) will be sung at a special Service to be held in St. Paul's Cathedral on the Tuesday in Passion week, according to the usual custom.

The Cremona Orchestral Society gave its first Orchestral Concert on the 8th ult., in the Iron Hall, Askew Road, Shepherd's Bush. The Society now numbers over forty members, and the Hon. Conductor is Mr. J. Stansfeld.

A popular edition of Professor H. C. Banister's "George Macfarren: his Life, Works, and Influence," has just been published by Messrs. George Bell and Sons.

Mr. Albert Fransella has recently been appointed as Principal Flute in the Crystal Palace Orchestra.

REVIEWS.

Wagner as I knew him. By Ferdinand Praeger. [Longmans, Green and Co.]

Dr. Eduard Hanslick, the well-known Viennese musical critic and æsthetician, who had long been regarded as an active opponent of Richard Wagner, on writing about the first performance of "Parsifal," protested that he had no objection to Wagner himself, and asserted that his strictures had been directed against the Wagnerites. Under the denomination of Wagnerites, he doubtless included composers who plagiarised Wagner; composers who, conscious of their inability to rival him, gave up composing altogether and employed their pens in expounding his works and theories; and that lesser fry of hangers-on who, by espousing his cause to the exclusion of everything else, contented themselves with basking in the master's reflected light.

The study of Wagnerism—which includes Wagner the man, Wagner the poet-musician, and his works, both musical and literary, has unfortunately become so much a matter of party feeling and contention, that any book on the subject, until it has been read, is naturally regarded with suspicion. In whichever class of Wagnerites specified above the late Ferdinand Praeger should most properly be placed, it may at once be avowed that his recently published book contains much which, on account of its novelty, is calculated to interest and satisfy both classes of readers—whether friends or opponents of the Wagnerian cause.

Friends—those hero-worshippers who prize every little anecdote or bit of gossip about their idol more than the study of his works—will find plenty to entertain them.

Opponents—especially those who have been actively employed—will rejoice that Praeger, who was fully alive to his friend's failings, has not sought to vindicate Wagner in all things, and has even furnished them with information which might serve as a handle for further condemnation.

Its title, "Wagner as I knew him," is an especially happy one, as indicating the general character of the book, which, though it furnishes a tolerably complete account of Wagner's life and artistic career, is most properly to be regarded as complementary to Glasenapp's voluminous biography, the reminiscences of others, and the article contributed by Mr. Edward Dannreuther to the "Dictionary of Music and Musicians"—at once the most complete and the most concise which has appeared in any language. In dealing with his personal reminiscences of Wagner, Praeger must have found it a difficult matter to avoid obtruding his own personality. That he has not done so unduly, and has achieved his task with becoming modesty, is a highly satisfactory point.

Among the matters treated, which will be found absolutely or comparatively new to English readers, may be enumerated—(1) Incidents in Wagner's school-life, both at Dresden and Leipzig; (2) his first love, a Jewess; (3) his first wife, Minna Planer, a thoroughly amiable woman, who was devotedly attached to him, but incapable of fully sympathising with and comprehending his genius, his high artistic aim and ambition; (4) his first visit to London in 1839; (5) his sojourn in Paris, 1839-42; (6) his residence at Dresden (1842-9), a detailed account of the part he took in the Revolution there, and the composition of "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin;" (7) his flight and exile to Zürich (1849-61); (8) his visit to London as Conductor of the Philharmonic Society in 1855, which is minutely described from Praeger's personal observation and association with him at that period; (9) his visit to Paris and return to Germany in 1861. From this point up to the date of Wagner's death in 1883, except for a long series of letters written during 1861-5 and now published for the first time, Praeger's personal reminiscences become more and more sparse.

By no means its least interesting portion is that which treats of August Roeckel, a truly remarkable individual, who made Wagner a revolutionist and Praeger a Wagnerite; and, for the part he took in the Revolution of 1848-9, suffered thirteen years' imprisonment—a fate from which, it is made clear, Wagner only escaped by a mere accident.

True to the title of his book, Praeger abstains from lengthy disquisitions upon Wagner's works, both musical and literary. A notable exception, however, is made in favour of the pamphlet "Judaism in Music." Though not altogether agreeing with Wagner's estimate of the Jews, he gives a very full account of its contents, principally for the sake of showing that Wagner has treated the matter more from an artistic than from a personal point of view.

It is to be regretted that Praeger did not live to "see his book through the Press," as he would then have reaped the glory as well as the emolument of its publication. Further, on looking it through again, he would probably have modified it in several particulars, the treatment of which, as they stand, is partly due to the fact of their having been written down from his dictation—a mode of procedure which weakness of sight and hand compelled him to adopt in his latter days, and one which does not conduce to continuity and elegance of style or to accuracy of diction. As an instance of this, the name of Ronge, a priest at Dresden, who proposed certain alterations in the Roman Catholic ritual, and made himself otherwise obnoxious to the Church, comes out as "Wronger"; and the title of Wagner's pamphlet "A Communication to my Friends," is printed "Commutation," &c. He would no doubt also have remodelled the dedicatory letter addressed to the Earl of Dysart, which is dated as far back as June 15, 1885. The very first sentence of this, which speaks of his intimacy with Wagner as "an uninterrupted friendship of close upon half-a-century," is misleading, for it is not till we have reached page 219 that we learn that he did not make Wagner's personal acquaintance until he came to London in 1855, and that up to this time he was "but the reflection of August Roeckel," a mutual friend of his and Wagner's resident in Dresden, and with whom he had corresponded. Thus this "uninterrupted friendship of close upon half-a-century" is reduced to twenty-eight years. Praeger's statement that he was "Wagner's first and sole champion," and that it was through "his sole exertions that the Philharmonic Society in 1855 offered Wagner the post of Conductor" will surprise many, and in the interests of truth calls for confirmation or refutation.

It seems improbable that this can have been so from the fact that up to the summer of the previous year Praeger was strongly opposed to the "new German School," as appears from a letter which he addressed to the Musical World of July 24, 1854, and in which he gives an entertaining account of the Rotterdam Musical Festival of that year, and of his journey thither from Cologne in a Rhine steamboat in company with a number of German musicians and critics. These kept up an incessant discussion about music, "till at last," says Praeger, "I lost my patience, and told them roundly that their Zukunfts-musik (music of the future) was no better than Deutschlands Zukunft (the future of Germany)."

A letter of Wagner, to Liszt, dated London, May 16, 1855, seems to settle the question in favour of Sainton. Wagner writes therein: "Poor Klindworth has been ill all along, and the fact that I could undertake nothing with him has deprived me of a great pleasure. Besides him my intercourse is limited to Sainton, the leader of the orchestra, who caused my ill-fated appointment here (the italics are our own), and a certain Lüders, who lives with him. Both are ardently devoted to me, and do all in their power to make my stay here pleasant. Apart from this I frequently go to Praeger, a good soul." (N.B.—The last three words are omitted in Hueffer's translation of the "Correspondence of Wagner and Liszt.")

Notwithstanding the publication of this letter of Wagner's, Praeger wrote to the Musical World of July 28, 1888, in correction of a statement of the Quarterly Review that it was Sainton who proposed Wagner as Conductor of the Philharmonic Society's Concerts, and maintaining that it was he himself who had first made the suggestion to Sainton, and that on his passing it on to the directors of the Philharmonic Society he was invited to attend their meeting, when he gave them all the information they required. In this same letter, as evidence of his long acquaintance with Wagner as a composer and his skill as a conductor, he alludes to an article on the performance of "Rienzi" at Dresden, which he had contributed to the English Gentleman in 1845. In his book he speaks of this as an article on "Tannhäuser." Evidently his memory here played him false, and having regard to his admission that up to 1854 he was "but the reflection of August Roeckel," it seems quite on the cards that the suggestion of Wagner's engagement came primarily from Roeckel, if not through him, from Wagner himself. As all seven directors of the Philharmonic Concerts of 1855 are dead, the matter is not an easy one to set at rest. To us, of the present day, it matters little from whom it emanated, nor should we have now thought it worth discussing, had not Praeger himself publicly raised the question, and that for the first time, as it appears, after a lapse of thirty years' silence.

We may seem to have laid too great a stress upon Praeger's inimical opinion of the "music of the future," expressed in his letter to the Musical World anent the Rotterdam Festival of 1854; but, having been cognisant of its existence and of its contents since the date of its publication, we could not do otherwise than refer to it. Ample evidence is afforded by letters, both from Wagner and Roeckel, contained in his book, that long previously to the Rotterdam Festival he had heard much about Wagner from his friend August Roeckel. Remarking upon one of the latter's, dated Dresden, March, 1843, he says: "I had such complete confidence in his (Roeckel's) perception and judgment that I was at once won over to Wagner's side by the tone of hero-worship that pervaded his letter." Wagner, too, in a letter of January 8, 1855, writes: "My heartiest thanks are due to you, my ardent champion in a strange land and among a conservative people. Your first espousal of my cause, ten years ago, when August read to me a vigorous article, from some English journal, by you on the "Tannhäuser" performance at Dresden, and the several evidences you have given subsequently of a devotion to my efforts, induce me to unhesitatingly throw the burden of somewhat wearisome arrangements upon your shoulders."

In attempting to reconcile these apparent discrepancies, we are therefore driven back upon the assumption that at the date of the Rotterdam Festival Praeger's opposition to the "New School," like Hanslick's, was not directed against Wagner, the founder of it, but against his disciples; or that he had good reasons for keeping his real opinions to himself until the proper time came for divulging them with effect.

Notwithstanding the deficiencies which we have thought it but right to point out, "Wagner as I knew him" is a remarkable book. Singularly free from the "scissors and paste" element of ordinary biographical compilers, it furnishes us with an independent view of the life and career of certainly the greatest musical genius that, since Beethoven, has shed a lustre upon the present century.

Six Morceaux pour le Violoncelle avec accompagnement de piano. Par J. Hollman. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

These pieces are respectively entitled "Légende," "Pizzicati," "Aubade," "Andante," "Petite Valse," and "Tarantelle," a sufficient proof of their variety. It will be taken for granted that they are so written as to display to the best advantage the characteristics of the instrument which their composer handles with such consummate skill. Let us add that these qualities are but a small portion of their merits, which include a rare degree of melodic and expressive charm, much freshness of treatment, and an entire freedom from the modern vice of straining after effect. Excessive difficulty being equally conspicuous by its absence, it is clear that Mr. Hollman has deserved well of violoncellists.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Pope Leo XIII. has addressed a circular letter to eminent composers in Europe and the United States requesting their co-operation in his efforts to bring about a reform in the domain of sacred music, which, in his holiness's opinion, partakes too much of a mundane and theatrical character in the present day.

A commemorative tablet was, on February 20 last, placed against the house, via Lamarmora, at Cagliari, where the great tenor Mario first saw the light. The tablet bears the following inscription in Italian: "In this house was born, of noble parentage, on October 17, 1810, Mario de Candia, distinguished in the vocal art; an enchanter of the world, an honour to his country."

Pietro Mascagni is busily engaged upon the score of his new opera, "I Rantzau," the subject of which is again drawn from one of Erckmann-Chatrian's stories. According to some Italian papers, the opera is to be first brought out at the Imperial Opera, of Vienna, during next autumn, while others name the Teatro Pagliano, of Florence, as being the lyrical stage selected for the première, and even give the names of the artists cast for the principal parts.

Baron Franchetti, the composer of "Asraël," gave a private performance of some extracts from his new opera "Christoforo Columbus," last month, at Milan. The opera will be first performed at Genoa, in connection with the Columbus celebrations.

At the Teatro Parthenope, of Naples, a new operetta, with a really comic libretto from the pen of Signor Paolo Marulli, entitled "Nini la scuffiara," was produced last month with much success. The composer is Signor Gaetano Scognamiglio.

Two new operas are announced to be brought out shortly at the Teatro Bellini, of Naples—viz., "Maëstro Giorgio," by Signor Sodero, and "Mercedes," by the Maëstro Pellegrino.

An interesting Concert, on a grand scale, was given last month by the Sociedad de Concertos, of Madrid, at the Teatro Principe Alfonso in that capital, with the co-operation of the orchestra and chorus of the Opera, members of military bands, and some fifty juvenile voices. The programme consisted almost entirely of works by Wagner, including orchestral portions of "Rhinegold" and "Tristan und Isolde," and the entire Finale of the first act of "Parsifal." The reception of these excerpts by a Spanish audience was a most enthusiastic one, mingled with some occasional opposition on the part of a small minority. Signor Mancinelli conducted the performances.

Herr Felix Weingartner, the able Conductor of the Berlin Royal Opera, has just completed an opera entitled "Genesius," which is to be shortly produced at the theatre in question.

Special performances are in course of preparation at Halle, the birth-town of Handel, of Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde," "Die Walküre," and "Siegfried," with the co-operation of Herr Gudehus and Mesdames Sucher and Moran-Olden.

At the Munich Hof-Theater the new opera "Heilmar der Narr," by W. Kienzl, first brought out some time since at the Hamburg Stadt-Theater, was produced with good success on the 8th ult. The work, both as regards the book and the musical setting thereof, is constructed upon Wagnerian lines, without, however, slavishly imitating that master's manner, and contains some very effective scenes. The composer conducted the performance.

The Oratorio "Franciscus," by the talented Belgian composer M. Edgar Tinel, met with a highly favourable reception at its performance last month, at Aix-la-Chapelle, under the direction of Herr Schwickerath. The interesting work has already been performed in several leading German towns.

The late violin virtuoso Robert Heckmann was the possessor of a number of valuable violins, notably an Antonio Stradivarius dated 1721; the instrument which Heckmann used at most of his concert performances, and one of the finest and most valuable violins in existence. The collection likewise contains an Amati and a Guarnerius. These superb instruments are now offered for sale (at Mannheim), there being no artistic successor to their late owner in the Heckmann family.

Dvorák's "Requiem" was performed recently by the Gesangverein of Olmütz, where the fine work met with a considerable amount of appreciation.

The long-deferred project of erecting a monument to Mozart in the Austrian capital is at length in a fair way of being realised, the committee constituted for the purpose having approved of a new model recently submitted to them by the sculptor, Herr Tilgner. The work will be taken in hand at once, and, it is estimated, will be completed about May, 1894. The monument fund so far subscribed amounts to 82,000 florins.

A memorial tablet bearing the following inscription was placed, on the 14th ult., against the house, Währinger Strasse, No. 26, Vienna: "On this site there formerly stood the Gartenhaus where Mozart resided from the summer of 1789 to the autumn of 1790, and where he wrote 'Cosi fan tutte,' as well as the Symphonies in G minor, E flat major, and the one in C major, with the Fugue."

Herr Felix Draeseke's new opera "Herat" was produced, for the first time, at the Dresden Hof-Theater on the 10th ult., and was exceedingly well received. The music is described as more of an orchestral than a vocal order, but written in a bold and grand style, and full of dramatic life. The libretto, on the other hand, written by the composer himself, is said to be somewhat tedious. The work contains some important choral numbers.

Mascagni's "L'Amico Fritz" was brought out, for the first time on German soil, at the Frankfurt Stadt-Theater, on the 12th ult. It was, on the whole, very favourably received, more especially as regards the first and second acts, while the third and last acts proved to be less interesting to the audience.

Herr Carl Schröder's new opera "Aspasia" met with an enthusiastic reception on the occasion of its first performance, on the 3rd ult., at Sondershausen.

A new operetta in three acts, entitled "Utopia," the libretto by Herr Paul Wendt, the music by Herr F. Goetze, met with a very favourable reception upon its first performance last month at the Stadt-Theater, of Stettin.

Dr. Hans von Bülow, having lately acquired the citizenship of Hamburg, has taken up his residence permanently in the art-loving Hanse town.

The authorities of the Munich Hof-Theater have prohibited the species of adverse criticism taking the form of hissing on the part of the audience during a performance, as being incompatible with the dignity of that Royal institution. The measure has created quite a storm of controversy in the Bavarian press organs.

At a recent Concert given by the Bach-Verein of Heidelberg, under the direction of Professor Wolfrum, the experiment was successfully tried of hiding both orchestra and Conductor from the view of the audience, by means of reversing the amphitheatrically arranged orchestral podium, the back partition of which being thus turned towards the audience, while the choristers had been placed in a gallery above the orchestra. The performance consisted of excerpts from "Die Meistersinger" and "Parsifal," and the new arrangement is said to have produced highly satisfactory results, acoustically and dynamically, a more even balance being established between voices and instruments on the one hand, and the string and wind instruments on the other.

Handel's "L'Allegro, il Pensieroso ed il Moderato" was performed, with much success, on the 1st ult., by the choir of the Martin Luther Kirche in Dresden, under the direction of the cantor, Herr Römhild.

Anton Rubinstein, on his return from his recent visit to the Austrian capital, gave a Recital, with a charitable object, at Dresden, and also took part in a Concert given in that town by Madame Krebs-Brenning, his performance on both occasions arousing an indescribable enthusiasm amongst the audience. A similar result attended a subsequent public performance of the pianist-composer at Berlin, the receipts whereof were distributed amongst four charitable institutions of that capital.

A three-act vaudeville, "La Princesse Nangara," by MM. Bataille and Sermet, the music by the young composer Edmond Missa, was produced on the 13th ult., at Rheims, with great success. The piece will shortly be transferred to the Paris stage.

The Paris Société des Compositeurs de Musique has conferred the first prize of 500 francs, instituted by M. Lamy, for a dramatic scene, to M. Busser-Devriès for his setting of a poem "Jeanne Gray," by M. Guinand. The same Society now offers prizes of 1,000 and of 500 francs for a Pianoforte Concerto and a Suite for flute, oboe, clarinet, French horn, bassoon, and pianoforte respectively, to be competed for during the current year.

Mr. Charles Oberthür's Harp Quartet on British national melodies was played at a recent Conservatoire Concert in Paris by pupils of that institution, and pleased the audience so much that the performance had to be repeated a few days later at the Salle Erard.

In consequence of the great success of "Lohengrin," several afternoon performances of that opera have taken place last month at the Paris Opéra, the house being crowded each time.

Under the title of "Wagner en Caricatures" a very interesting volume has just been published in Paris (Librairie Larousse) from the pen of M. John Grand-Carteret. The volume contains one hundred and thirty caricatures relating to the Bayreuth master and his works, chiefly drawn from German, French, and English sources, with a critical commentary written in good taste and far from antagonistic to the subject caricatured.

The first representation of a new two-act opera, entitled "Atala," the libretto from the pen of M. Paul Collin, the music by Mdlle. Juliette Folville, took place on the 10th ult. at the Grand Theatre of Lille, where it met with a highly favourable reception. The composer, a young Belgian lady twenty-two years of age, herself conducted the performance, and was the recipient of much hearty applause on the part of a numerous audience.

Mr. Franz Villaret, a former pupil of the Paris Conservatoire, has been appointed to the vocal professorship at that institution vacated by the death of M. Heyberger.

The ninetieth anniversary of the birth of Victor Hugo was recently commemorated at Oporto by the performance of a musical composition entitled "Patrie," specially written for the occasion by the pianist-composer, Senhor Antonio Soller. The performance met with a highly favourable reception.

Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana" was brought out at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels, some weeks ago with the same success as has attended the work elsewhere, frequent repetitions having taken place since.

A Concert on a grand scale is announced to take place on the 2nd inst., at the Reformation Hall in Geneva, under the direction of M. Gustave Doret when the performances will consist exclusively of works by modern French composers, including MM. Massenet, Saint-Saëns, Ch. Widor, V. d'Indy, and Th. Dubois. An analytical lecture upon the compositions to be performed is to be delivered on the preceding day by M. Dalcroze, a professor at the Musical Academy of Geneva.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music is always kept in stock, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Accrington.—On Wednesday, the 16th ult., the Choral Society gave, on the occasion of its Jubilee, a performance of Costa's Eli. The principals were Miss Charlotte Walker, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. E. Branscombe, Mr. Kinnel, and Mr. Andrew Black. The chorus numbered one hundred, and the orchestra, of forty-three performers (leader, Mr. Nuttall), was selected from Sir Charles Hallé's. Mr. Thalberg Brown was the Conductor.

Basingstoke.—On the 1st ult. the Harmonic Society gave a performance of Handel's Messiah, in the Town Hall, under the able conductorship of Mr. W. H. Liddle, Organist of the Parish Church. The orchestra was led by Mr. J. S. Liddle. The soloists were Miss Amy Wells, Miss Mary Reeve, Mr. John Bartlett, and Mr. Alfred Camp, who did full justice to their parts. The choruses—notably the "Amen"—went excellently. The audience remained to the last, and throughout their applause was most hearty.

Braintree.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Samson on the 1st ult. The principals were Miss Ada Loaring, Miss Minnie Chamberlaine, Mr. Harry Stubbs, and Mr. George Stubbs. Band and chorus numbered 120, and were under the conductorship of Mr. James Newman. The hall was crowded.

Chichester.—The Church of England Temperance Society gave a grand Concert on the 1st ult. The principal feature in the programme was J. More Smieton's dramatic Cantata King Arthur. Miss Alice Holman, Mr. Clifford Hunnybun, and Mr. Harold Koblich were the solo vocalists. Mr. Crick (Salisbury Cathedral), who had been engaged as baritone, was unable to appear owing to indisposition, and his place was at the last moment taken by Mr. Seymour Kelly, who also carried out the duties of Conductor with much care and efficiency. Mrs. Dean presided at the pianoforte and Mr. H. P. Allen at the harmonium.

Cleckheaton.—The Philharmonic Society gave a performance of The Messiah on the 22nd ult., with full band and chorus, in the new Town Hall. The principals were Miss Marjorie Eaton, Miss Sarah Berry, Mr. Aldroyd, and Mr. Thornton, all of whom sang most satisfactorily. Mr. W. H. Wright conducted.

Dover.—The Harmonic Society gave an excellent Concert on the 1st ult., consisting of Lloyd's Hero and Leander and a miscellaneous selection. The part of Hero was in the capable hands of Miss Marjorie Eaton, whose fine voice told well, and Mr. Arthur Strugnell, as Leander, gave much satisfaction. Miss Eaton also scored a great success by her artistic rendering of Mackenzie's "Hush thee, my babie," and Gounod's "Ave Maria," the violin obbligato of which was well played by Mr. Barclay. Mr. Howells conducted.

Headingley.—The first Concert of the Choral Society took place on February 29, in St. Michael's Parochial Institute, under the direction of Mr. Charles Wilkinson. The first part of the programme consisted of Gade's The Erl-King's Daughter, the second part being miscellaneous. Miss Jessie Beevers was responsible for the soprano solos, the somewhat difficult part assigned to the baritone being sung by Mr. Gordon Heller, while the contralto music was undertaken by a lady in the chorus. In the second part Mr. Wilkinson gave a capital rendering of "Two Russian Airs" (Thalberg).

Herne Bay.—The choir of Christ Church gave its annual Concert in the Town Hall on February 25. Part-songs by Battison Haynes, E. Stirling, Sydenham, Handel's chorus "From Harmony," and a number of vocal solos and duets were well given by the choir, Messrs. W. Flower Kemp, F. Ridout, A. Scott, R. Fielder, and Masters Sydney Smith and H. Admans. The Concert was directed by the Organist, Mr. Cruttenden.

Ilford.—The orchestra and chorus of the Vocal Union gave a very satisfactory performance of Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise and Hear my Prayer and Schubert's Song of Miriam, in the Reading Room, on February 25, the principals being Madame Barter, Mrs. S. de Jastrzebski, and Mr. Herbert Clinch, all of whom gave an artistic and effective rendering of their respective parts. Special praise is due to Madame Barter for so admirably acquitting herself of her arduous task in the three works named. The orchestra was efficiently led by Miss Eva C. Haynes. Conductor, Mr. A. Storr.

Maidstone.—The choir of St. Faith's Church gave a performance of the Stabat Mater on Sunday evening, February 28, after service, in memory of the Rossini Centenary. The solos were well sung by Miss Kate Trendall (soprano), Mr. Crow (tenor), and Mr. Syckelmore (bass); the duet "Quis est Homo" was sung by the ladies of the choir. The choruses were given in a manner which reflected the greatest credit on the choirmaster, Mr. Frederic Dutnall, who presided at the organ with great skill.

Newcastle.—A large audience assembled in the Town Hall on February 29, the occasion being the first Concert given by the lately-formed Newcastle Harmonic Society. The Cantata performed was F. H. Cowen's St. John's Eve, and, taking into consideration that it was a first attempt, the work was very well rendered. The quality of the voices is good, the strength of the choir being well combined, and with more practice and a determination to excel, the Society should have a successful career before it. The soloists last night were Miss C. Armitage, Miss Annie Unsworth, Mr. Fred. Mace, and Mr. J. Duncanson. The second portion of the programme was of a miscellaneous nature. The orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. J. H. Hill, was considerably above the average, and played the accompaniments as well as the Larghetto movement from Beethoven's No 2 Symphony and the Overture to Mozart's Don Giovanni in capital style. The whole was given under the able conductorship of Dr. C. Chambers, to whom, with Mr. R. Hesketh, the Hon. Secretary, the success of the Concert was undoubtedly due.

Ruabon.—Mr. Matthew Bowen gave an excellent Concert on the 7th ult. to a large audience in the Assembly Rooms. The pianoforte solos played by Mr. Bowen's pupils were rendered in a manner reflecting high credit on their teacher. The Overture to Tancredi, as a duet, played by Mrs. Bowen and Miss Johns, a pupil, was rapturously applauded. The vocalists were Miss Louise Cestria, Miss Nellie Moore, Mr Sam Parry, and Mr. Emlyn Davies, who had the advantage of the excellent accompaniment of Mr. C. Morton Bailey.

Rugby.—The Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah in the New Big School on the 17th ult. The solos were excellently sung by Miss Mary Richardson, Miss Jeannie Rankin, Mr. William Green, and Mr. A. Foxton Ferguson. The accompaniments were admirably rendered by a string band and the fine organ lately placed in the room by Messrs. Bryceson. The President of the Society, Mr. E. Edwards, conducted the performance, while Mr. Basil Johnson played the organ. The leader of the band was Mr. A. Pettersson.

Ryde, I.W.—The Choral Union (which has worked under the bâton of Miss Margaret Fowles for eighteen years) gave the last Concert of the present season on February 29. The Town Hall was filled in every part, and enthusiastic applause testified to the enjoyment of the audience. Several descriptive part-songs and choral ballads by Macfarren, Faning, Stewart, Hecht, &c., were given by the Choral Union with most artistic effect, and the following artists lent their valuable aid: Miss Florence Shee (soprano), Madame Schlüter (contralto), Mr. Robert Grice (baritone), Mr. Herbert Walenn (violoncellist), and Mr. Bernard Fowles (pianist).

St. Albans.—The second of the winter series of vocal and orchestral Concerts, arranged by Mr. W. H. Speer, were given on February 25. At both afternoon and evening Concerts the attendance was very gratifying. Each vocal piece was excellently rendered, and the brilliant performances of Mr. Speer on the pianoforte, and the admirable efforts of the well-balanced orchestra, were especially noticeable.

Sidcup.—A new opera, in a prologue and three acts, entitled The Magic Fountain, was produced here on February 24 and 27, with much success. The libretto is by Mr. J. R. Johnston, the music by Mr. Harold S. Moore. Miss M. Nutter, Miss F. Croft, Mr. Johnston, and Mr. F. Wilson sustained the chief parts with much ability, and the chorus and orchestra, under the direction of the composer, did their work well. The large audience was loud in expressions of approval.

Stockbridge.—Mr. Coward's Cantata The Story of Bethany was given in the Congregational Chapel on February 29. The band and chorus, which had undergone a painstaking preparation at the hands of Mr. J. W. Fawcett, numbered upwards of 100. The work was conducted by the Composer, and received a most flattering reception at the hands of an audience which filled the chapel in every part. The principals were Miss Ogden (soprano), Miss S. A. Gill (contralto), Mr. Harrop (tenor), and Mr. A. Shaw (baritone). The chorus did complete justice to the work, as did the band, admirably led by Mr. Butcher.

Sunderland.—The Philharmonic Society gave its third Concert of the season on Tuesday, the 1st ult., when Handel's Acis and Galatea was performed with full orchestra and chorus under the direction of Mr. Kilburn. The second part of the programme contained, among other pieces, a Pianoforte Concerto by Sterndale Bennett, played in excellent style by Miss Pearson. The principal vocalists were Miss Amy Sherwin, Mr. Braxton Smith, Mr. H. Hagyard, and Mr. Norman Salmond, whose rendering of Schubert's "Erl-King" was much applauded.

Tiverton, North Devon.—The newly-formed Choral Society gave its first Concert in the Drill Hall on February 29. The chorus and orchestra gave good renderings of choruses selected from St. Paul and Eaton Faning's part-song "The Miller's Wooing." The soloists were Miss Florence Monk, Miss Britton, Mr. Dan Jones, and Mr. S. J. Bishop. Herr Otto Milani and Mr. J. Pomeroy respectively played a violin and violoncello solo. Mr. Allan Allen conducted.

Tring.—The Choral Society gave its first Concert on February 24, the programme consisting of Gaul's Ruth (Part I.) and a miscellaneous selection. The principal artists were Miss Emily Briggs, Miss Clara Robson, Miss Florence Nash, and Mr. James Blackney. Conductor, Mr. Sidney A. Mosdell; accompanists, Miss Pickburn and Mr. Mosdell. The Concert was the best yet given by the Society, and was greatly enjoyed by a large audience.

Tunbridge Wells.—A very successful performance of Gounod's Redemption was given on the 8th ult. by Mr. F. Hunnibell's Choral Society. This was the first performance of the work here, and it made a great impression. The soloists were Miss Medora Henson (who was compelled to repeat "From Thy love as a Father"), Miss Marian McKenzie, Mrs. A. W. Pearson, Mr. Gordon Fletcher, Mr. Bantock Pierpoint, and Mr. David Hughes. There was a good orchestra, and the choir sang with spirit and intelligence. Mr. Hunnibell conducted with zeal and discretion.

Uttoxeter.—The Uttoxeter and Tutbury Choral Unions gave a very successful performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah in the Town Hall on Friday, the 11th ult. The soloists were Miss Emily Davies, Miss Mary Reeve, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Musgrove Tufnail. The band, under the leadership of Mr. F. Ward, was exceptionally good. Mr. Herbert Drury, of Derby, conducted. The room was crowded in every part.

Wembley.—A Concert on the 16th ult. was given at the Workmen's Hall by Madame Emily Lawrence, who, with the aid of Miss Florence Dixon and Mrs. Stanley Allcyne as soloists, and a number of ladies as chorus, performed a Cantata of her own composition entitled Bonny Kilmeny, a setting to music of an adaptation of Hogg's well-known poem. The second part of the programme included a pianoforte duet by Madame Emily Lawrence and Miss Choice, a violin solo by Miss Abraham, and songs by Mr. Stewart Beckley, Mrs. MacCarthy, and Mr. Pelham Grubb.

Organ Appointments.—Mr. Ernest H. Ruston, Organist and Choirmaster to Christ Church, Endell Street.—Mr. F. Haydn Blackbee, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Jude's, Mildmay Park.—Mr. Francis Hemington, Organist and Director of the Choir to All Saints', Tufnell Park.—Mr. W. H. Davies, Organist and Choirmaster to Mare Street Chapel, Hackney.—Mr. George F. Mountford, Organist and Choirmaster to Westport Parish Church, Ireland.—Mr. Charles J. Capponi, Organist and Choirmaster to All Saints', Battersea Park.—Mr. A. M. Richardson, Organist and Choirmaster to Holy Trinity Church, Sloane Square.—Mr. Charles F. Uhde, Organist and Choirmaster to All Souls' Church, South Hampstead.

Choir Appointments.—Mr. G. H. Barber (Tenor), to Clapham Parish Church.—Mr. Harry Cooke (Alto), to St. Bartholomew's, Sydenham.—Mr. Alfred Cox (Tenor), to St. Michael's College, Tenbury.—Mr. E. B. Maund (Bass), to St. Michael's College, Tenbury.—Mr. A. Norman Kendall, to Exeter Cathedral. Mr. E. J. Cockaday (Alto), to the Chapel Royal, Windsor.

UNISON CHANTS

FOR THE PSALTER

A COLLECTION OF SINGLE ANGLICAN CHANTS

APPROPRIATED TO THE DAILY PSALMS IN THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

EXPRESSLY SELECTED AND ADAPTED FOR THE USE OF CHURCH CHOIRS AND CONGREGATIONS

EDITED BY

THE REV. CANON SIR F. A. G. OUSELEY,

Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc., Precento Hereford, and Professor of Music in the University of Oxford, 1855-89,

AND

EDWIN GEORGE MONK,

Mus. Doc., Oxon., Organist and Master of the Choir, York Minster, 1859-83.

THE VOICE PART—Price One Shilling. ORGAN HARMONIES—Price Five Shillings.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

IN furtherance of a more general chanting of the Psalter in Churches, this Book of Unison Chants is an attempt to supply a plan sufficiently easy to secure extensive adoption, yet varied enough to be attractive, upon the one and only basis regarded by the Editors as being universally practicable—viz., the employment of Single Chant Melodies, to be sung "in Unison."

The present Work, projected (and even announced) some score of years ago, is intended to meet the need indicated, by providing a Series of easy and suitable Chants, for Unison Singing only, for the monthly course of the Psalter in the Book of Common Prayer. Not only have small and moderately qualified Choirs been kept in view, but also particularly the Voice of the great Congregation. In order to secure this much to be desired end—Chanting of the Daily Psalms by Choir and Congregation combined—the following means are proposed:—

I. Singing in Unison (strictly speaking, Octave-Singing).

II. Employment of Chants of Restricted Compass only; especially as to all Reciting-Notes.

III. Provision for Change of Chant at every fresh Psalm; and also, whenever in the course of any of the onger Psalms such change could be made to follow the significance of the Sacred Text, conduce to its clearer understanding, or enforce its teaching.

IV. Suggestion for occasional Change of Instrumental Harmony as a further mode (often of much value and potency) of heightening the desired expression; or of calling attention to important divisions, and changes of subject or utterance, in cases when actual change of the voice-part seemed undesirable.

Transposition has been largely resorted to, in order to meet the requirements of a limited vocal range; and, more rarely, slight modifications and excisions have been necessary, to carry through and ensure the specific scope and purpose of the Work.

It will not, it is hoped, be imagined by any that in this advocacy of Unisonal Chanting distinctively for the Psalter there is the slightest wish to discourage the use of Choral Harmony in Divine Worship, with all the moving and noble effects produced by well-balanced and refined Part-Singing; or a desire for the further extension of Unison-Singing; beyond its common employment for the People's Part in Confession, Lord's Prayer, Response, and Creed. Not to mention simple "Anthems" and "Services," which are available for Choirs where practice and discipline prevail, the Canticles with carefully selected Chants, as well as Hymn-Tunes, may readily be sung in Harmony by such Choirs against the Congregational Unison, by reason of constant recurrence, and consequent familiarity: advantages which cannot attach to the Hundred and Fifty Psalms of David, which do not quickly become well known to those singers who chant on Sundays only, and are unaccustomed to daily use of the Psalter in Matins and Evensong.

THE TEN VIRGINS

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

(Op. 42)

Composer of "The Holy City," "Ruth," "Passion Service," "Joan of Arc," &c.

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"The Cantata is replete with charming music of that school which every one can appreciate, and which found so distinguished a master in Mendelssohn. If composers would have their works popular with choral societies, it is only reasonable to expect that they will bestow a fair share of their attention upon the choruses. The old masters knew this, and there is no doubt that the fact has much to do with the long-continued popularity of their works; and there is equally little doubt, we think, that the principal cause of the failure of so many works produced now-a-days is the uninteresting nature of the choruses. Compare the choruses of the three most popular works ever produced—'The Messiah,' 'Creation,' and 'Elijah'—with a large number of modern works, and our meaning will be clear. If we mistake not, such thoughts as these passed through Mr. Gaul's mind when he set himself to compose those works which have placed him in the front rank of English composers—the 'Holy City,' 'Joan of Arc,' and 'The Ten Virgins'—and that the public endorse his views is proved by the enormous sale which these works have had."—Newcastle Daily Journal, Dec. 17, 1890.

"The subject is an excellent one for a Cantata . . . a stronger work than 'Joan of Arc.' . . . Melodious, vocal, and of moderate difficulty, and, like Mr. Gaul's earlier Cantatas, will be eagerly welcomed by societies in search of new works having these characteristics."—Newcastle Daily Leader, Dec. 16, 1890.

Bow and Bromley Institute Choir.—"The hall was overcrowded by an audience that was disposed to encore every other number of the work. If the verdict of a miscellaneous audience, that could have no possible reason for being favourably prejudiced, is of any account in estimating the merit of a new work, a career that will rival that of the same composer's 'Holy City' may be predicted for 'The Ten Virgins.' That Mr. Gaul should have secured this undoubted popular success with a work far more contrapuntal than any of his former works, is a remarkable tribute to his power of welding science and beauty into one whole."—Musical Times, Dec. 1, 1890.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

The above Cantata has been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral, including three numbers for Sopranos and Contraltos (The Virgins).

JOAN OF ARC

A DRAMATIC CANTATA

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

REQUIEM MASS

FOR

SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

ANTONÍN DVOŘÁK.

Paper cover, 5s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 7s. 6d. Full Score, £3 3s. Vocal and Orchestral Parts in the Press.

 All communications respecting performances of this work should be addressed direct to the Publishers.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The "Requiem" of Antonín Dvorák is a chef d'œuvre, difficult, no doubt, and imposing much labour upon those who grapple with it for mastery, but all the more on that account, perhaps, the thing I have said; at this no amateur is likely to be surprised. . . . I am not going to set up a comparison between the "Stabat Mater" and the "Requiem." Although the "Requiem" draws more largely than its predecessor upon the resources of highest art, it belongs to the same class of work, and whoever would approach the latter in a spirit of preparedness should do so through the earlier. The two are consecutive links in a golden chain. Following them, we go from glory to glory, and the end we trust is not yet. Dvorák has established himself as the greatest religious composer of the age, not so much, perhaps, in the matter of technique as in the sublime expression of exalted feeling.

STANDARD.

A work in every sense worthy of the gifted Bohemian composer, and one of the noblest settings ever penned of the Roman Catholic Office for the Dead. . . . Even an essay would fail to give an adequate impression of Dvorák's latest masterpiece. . . . The fascination of Dvorák's music consists in the strong individuality of expression which shows itself in almost every line of the score. . . . The "Requiem" (at the Albert Hall) was followed with close attention by a large audience, and, so far as could be judged, made a profound impression.

DAILY NEWS.

To describe the masterly and thoroughly characteristic manner in which Dr. Dvorák treats his orchestra—often in a daring spirit of originality, but always with the happiest effect—is not now necessary. It will suffice that, despite certain minor blemishes, the opinion offered by the analyst, that the "Requiem" is "truly a solemn masterpiece," will be endorsed by connoisseurs, and generally, it is hoped, by the more thoughtful majority of the public.

MORNING POST.

The expectations which had been formed of the new "Requiem," composed at the request of the committee for this Festival by Antonín Dvorák, were fully realised, and Birmingham may once more be congratulated upon having called into existence another work of genius which will stand as a monumental treatment of the time-honoured service in commemoration of the dead.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Antonín Dvorák has at length provided his famous "Stabat Mater" with a fitting companion. . . . From any composer it would be an honourable contribution to art, but from Dvorák it is specially welcome as serving to make manifest that the noble work by which he has hitherto been best known to English concert frequenters was not a solitary specimen of genius in the treatment of sacred subjects.

THE ATHENÆUM.

If it be true, as alleged, that the idea of writing a Requiem originated when the news of the death of Cardinal Newman reached the Bohemian composer, the world is indirectly indebted to that distinguished ecclesiastic for one of the noblest and most beautiful tributes to the dead that ever proceeded from the hand of a musician. . . . The effect of the entire combination (in the "Dies Iræ") is, as we have said, stupendous, and has never been surpassed in any setting of the same words.

WEEKLY DISPATCH.

The work itself is a worthy companion to the celebrated "Stabat Mater," though which is the greater of the two I shall not pretend to decide. . . . The great merits of the score consist in the wealth of rich and striking harmony and the strong infusion of fresh and original melody. I have no space to describe it number by number, but I would point to the "Dies Iræ" as one of the grandest settings ever penned of this awful hymn, and to the "Recordare" and the "Offertorium" as containing music unspeakably beautiful. The mind that conceived these things is that of a master.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

A second hearing deepens our admiration for this wonderful "Requiem." It is strikingly original, and quite unlike any other setting of the Mass for the Dead. . . . The "Recordare" surely is one of the most exquisite passages of vocal harmony that can be found in the range of music. . . . The masses of harmony towards the close ("Quam olim Abrahæ") are piled up in a way which excites us more and more, and there was little reason for surprise when it was redemanded.

THE CHRISTIAN PILGRIM

A SACRED CANTATA

COMPOSED BY

J. E. NEWELL.

PREFACE.

The growing custom of performing complete works in places of public worship has led the composer of the "Christian Pilgrim" to hope that his Cantata may be found acceptable in choirs, where the larger and more difficult works of the great masters are often inadmissible; it contains twenty-four numbers of Solo and Concerted Pieces, and can be effectively rendered, with either Pianoforte or Organ Accompaniment.

The words are selected passages of Holy Writ and well-known Hymns, and are intended to portray the life of the Christian Pilgrim through the many trials and temptations that beset him on his heavenly way, to the final triumph of eternal life.

PART I.

1. Prelude.
2. Pilgrims here and strangers we (Chorus and Soprano Solo).
3. Grant that in the stranger's land (Chorale).
4. As when the weary traveller (Contralto Solo).
5. I was wandering and weary (Tenor and Contralto Solo and Chorus).
6. Love not the world (Quartet).
7. Beset with snares (Chorus).
8. Oft as I look upon the road (Bass Solo).
9. Lead us not into temptation (Chorus).
10. Blessed is the man (Duet—Tenor and Bass).
11. Flee from evil (Chorus).
12. The Pilgrims' March.

PART II.

13. Fight the good fight (Chorus).
14. I'm but a stranger here (Soprano Solo and Chorus).
15. Strangers and Pilgrims (Chorus).
16. Prepared the trumpet's call to greet (March Chorus).
17. The Lord my pasture shall prepare (Tenor Solo.)
18. Yea, though I walk (Quartet).
19. It is near, it is near (Chorus).
20. Dear Lord, I see my home (Soprano Solo).
21. Blessed are the pure in heart (Chorus—Female Voices).
22. I have fought a good fight (Bass Solo).
23. Thine for ever (Duet—Soprano and Contralto).
24. The gates, the gates are open (Chorus).

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY OF MUSICIANS

BY

WILLIAM H. CUMMINGS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

PREFACE.

STUDENTS of music, and others, desirous of ascertaining at what period any particular musician lived, have frequently to make a somewhat lengthened search before they can obtain the required information. In the following pages the dates, and places of birth and death, together with the details of the special branch of music cultivated by each individual, are given in a condensed form, so that important facts may be read at a glance. As a primer of rudimentary musical biography, it is believed that the present publication will prove of great service, and it is proposed to supplement what is detailed here with a larger work, giving fuller narrations of the stories of the lives of those whose names are included in the roll of musicians. The work now published is the result of much laborious time and trouble, and has been accomplished by reference, in many cases, to documents and registers not readily accessible, in cathedrals and churches, and private libraries. Every endeavour has been made to secure accuracy, but of course it would be vain to hope that no error has crept in; it is human to err. I shall, however, be obliged by any notice of apparent inaccuracy, and glad to receive well authenticated corrections. W. H. C.

FOR SOPRANO, ALTO, TENOR, AND BASS.

The present Collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the favourite Foreign Operas. The Arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. The words have been expressly written for the work, and the harmonies arranged in four parts, as likely to be most useful in small Classes.

MISS

(CONTRALTO)

Northern Review, December 11, 1889.

"The recit. 'Elijah, get thee hence,' was exquisitely rendered by Miss Hooton, who possesses a contralto voice, rich in quality and powerful enough to suit any hall, however large. Miss Hooton's singing is artistic and full of expression, and that she will ere long become one of our best contraltos, if indeed she is not entitled to that distinction already, I have not a shadow of doubt. Miss Hooton's rendering of 'O rest in the Lord' was an exceptionally fine effort, and had the conductor permitted it, the audience would have had it repeated."

Nottingham Daily Express, January 10, 1891.

"Miss Hooton sang 'Hymen, haste' (Semele), Handel, with much richness and power. . . . Both her songs, 'La Charmante Marguerite' (old French) and 'Will he come?' (Sullivan), were enthusiastically received. There is no doubt at all that Miss Hooton will take a very high place amongst contraltos. She has everything in her favour, youth, good looks, a splendid voice, which she has been trained to produce in an excellent manner, while she pronounces very distinctly, and has evidently the right musical feeling."

(Consisting of English Artists).

MISS FRIEDA GRIFFITHS

"The excellent singing of Miss Frieda Griffiths in 'By the Fountain,' 'Last Night,' and 'The Little Dustman' left nothing to be desired, and proves her to be one of our coming sopranos."—Wandsworth and Battersea Advertiser.

"Miss Griffiths, in the air 'Flies fluttering to thy breast a wounded dove,' sang not only with fine musical effect, but with a touching realisation of the pathos of the situation. Having quoted the composer's testimony to the effect that he had never heard the air sung better, no higher praise need be given."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Madame Julia Hutchings secured an unequivocal success with 'The Banks of Allan Water' and 'Angus Macdonald.'"—Battersea District Times.

MR. A. BOWYER BRISTOL

"Mr. A. Bowyer Bristol, a rising tenor, sang 'Queen of the Earth' and 'I am waiting' in a manner that recalled to our minds that prince of tenors, the late Mr. Joseph Maas. There is no doubt a great future before Mr. Bristol, and we shall be pleased to hear him again."—Wandsworth and Battersea Advertiser.

"Mr. A. B. Bristol is the possessor of a sweet and resonant tenor voice which has been well schooled; this assertion could be verified by his share in Dr. Heap's Cantata and Salaman's 'I arise from Dreams of Thee.' This at once caught the taste of the audience, and a double recall followed. Mr. Bristol is certainly a valuable acquisition to the tenor department."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

MR. EDMUND EDWARDS

"Mr. Edmund Edwards could scarcely have been heard to greater advantage than he was in Loder's song 'The Diver.' It suited to perfection his powerful bass, and he interpreted it with true emphasis and with a thorough grasp of the deep rich pathos of the subject. He was loudly encored."—Northampton Daily Reporter.

Solo Pianoforte—

MRS. A. L. RICHARDSON, L.R.A.M.

"Mrs. A. L. Richardson displayed abilities of the first rank, and her playing is of the best ever given in this hall."—Wandsworth and Battersea Advertiser.

Solo Violin—

MR. W. H. HENLEY

"Mr. W. H. Henley played a couple of violin solos with a cleverness of manipulation which fairly astonished his listeners."—Manchester Courier.

Conductor and Accompanist—

MR. WALTER J. EVANS.

PRESS NOTICES.

"The engagement of Mr. Walter J. Evans' Concert Party being a sufficient guarantee of musical excellence."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"One of the most praiseworthy Concerts ever given in Clapham."

"We congratulate Professor Jones upon having secured such an efficient troupe of artists."—Barmouth and County Advertiser.

"Mr. Walter J. Evans is to be congratulated upon his Concert Party, their performances placing them in the front rank, and for all-round abilities would be difficult to beat. We trust we shall have the pleasure of hearing the party again before long."—The Wandsworth and Battersea Advertiser.

THE MUSIC HALL MANIA.

IN one of his brilliant musical essays M. Saint-Saëns runs full tilt against the literary man who must for ever be talking about music. The personage in question, who probably does not know a major from a minor scale, but who lays down the law with an air of infallibility which would do credit to the Pope himself, is unhappily not indigenous in France alone. We know and suffer from him on this side of the Channel as well. His name is not exactly legion, but he is a numerous species, and by virtue of his powers of expression he too often commands attention for utterances of the most amazing and atrocious ineptitude. As an instance of what the man of letters can be capable of when he deviates into the domain of musical criticism, we would commend to our readers' careful consideration the article entitled "The Music Hall of the Future" in the Pall Mall Gazette of the 13th ult., from the pen of Mr. Arthur Symons. Mr. Arthur Symons, if we are not mistaken, is a young literary lion with a considerable gift for the spinning of verses, and, like so many of the other young literary lions of the day, he is consumed with a passionate enthusiasm for the luminaries of the music hall stage. He is the hierophant of the new-fangled cult of the costermonger, the champion of the fin de siècle "serio-comic." He raves of "the delightful Nellie Navette" and "the delicious Minnie Cunningham," and applies the term of "artist" to the inspired creator of "Two lovely black eyes." Believing as he does with such implicit confidence in the music hall of the present, it is only natural that he should hold sanguine views about its magnificent future. "For one thing," argues Mr. Symons, "it is the only form of entertainment which satisfies the modern rage for variety. The play in five acts is becoming as tiresome as the novel in three volumes, as the poem in twelve books. To the people who go out nightly for their entertainment it is becoming more and more essential that that entertainment should be provided in small doses." Mr. Symons, it will thus be seen, is a fervent apostle of the snippet system. Away with such stale maxims as res severa est verum gaudium or ars longa! Away with symphonies and concertos, operas and oratorios! The great heart of the people, so the Pall Mall Gazette once assured us, can only be stirred by the music hall, and the essence of the music hall system is the "quick change" and the short "turn." Again, we have Mr. Symons's word for it that it is quite a mistake to suppose that the music hall entertainment of to-day is tainted by vulgarity. "The quality of the entertainment and the quality of the audience have been steadily, and of late rapidly, rising." In other words, the masses and the classes are united in their zeal for the new cult, and 'Arrys and aristocrats vie with each other in their appreciation of the refined sallies of Miss Jenny Hill and Mr. Daniel Leno.

These things being so, how comes it then that Mr. Symons should be desirous of any change in a régime which affords him such delightful and delicious pleasure? We suppose the answer must be found in that divine discontent of which a double portion is ever to be found in the true poetic temperament. Rare and radiant though the music hall entertainment of to-day may be, it still falls short of perfection in one or two trifling particulars. The old-fashioned "serio-comic" and the male artist who appears in a dress coat grate upon Mr. Symons's sensitive soul and mar his otherwise unalloyed ecstasy. The elimination of these blemishes is, in his opinion, a desirable reform. Then, again, he holds that the programmes consist of too many items. At present the patron of the music hall suffers from an embarras de richesses. Twenty-five "turns" is a by no means uncommon allowance, and this is more than a well regulated spectator can stand without suffering from æsthetic vertigo. These alterations are of a negative and comparatively simple character; it is only when we come to the constructive side of Mr. Symons's scheme of reform that the generous catholicity of his attitude towards music reveals itself in all its beauty. The great charm of the music hall, according to its champion, is its variety. The novel, the drama, the pulpit, and the concert hall are all more or less effete instruments of culture, but that is no reason why whatever makes for righteousness in them should not be transplanted on to the music hall stage. Just as in a photographer's window you may observe side by side the portraits of an archbishop, a novelist, a prima donna, a danseuse, and an athlete, so, in the ideal music hall contemplated by Mr. Symons, representatives of all callings which aim at amusing or instructing the public are to be included in the cast of performers—aye, even down to violinists and singers who devote their talents to the interpretation of classical music.

Lest we should be accused of misrepresenting or perverting Mr. Symons's meaning, we hasten to transcribe the concluding paragraph from his article: "A music hall with such artists as those I have named [viz., the 'delightful' Miss Nellie Navette, the 'delicious' Miss Minnie Cunningham, Miss Ada Lundberg, Mr. Charles Coborn, and Mr. Albert Chevalier], with such others as Jenny Hill, Katie Lawrence, R. G. Knowles, Dan Leno, varied by the foreign singers whom we see at the Trocadero and the Oxford, by such human wonders as Sandow, such human works of art as Eugénie Petrescu, such gymnasts and acrobats as the Craggs, the brothers James, the Montrose troupe—that music hall would be able to hold its own against any theatre. And that music hall we shall soon have. Without losing the charm of its freedom, the flavour of its Bohemianism, it will cease to be vulgar by becoming consistently artistic. And when that point is reached we shall see—and we shall see without surprise—Albert Chevalier followed on the same stage by Tivadar Nachez, Minnie Cunningham by Antoinette Sterling." O rare young bard, what a blissful vista you open up to our bewildered vision in this impassioned peroration! "We shall see without surprise"—aye, truly; if we see it at all we shall see it without any surprise, all emotion, all sense of incongruity having long since been eliminated from our composition. But, methinks, Mr. Symons is far too modest in his prediction of this amalgamation of "all the talents" on the boards of the music hall stage. Let us endeavour, then, to fill in his outlines by the addition of a few more figures. We shall see, and we shall see without surprise, Joachim playing an obbligato accompaniment on the wrong side of the bridge to Miss Jenny Hill, and we shall behold without winking M. Paderewski, with his face blacked, accompanying the White-Eyed Musical Kaffir, alias Chirgwin, with the backs of his hands; and we shall see, without moving a muscle or turning a hair, Jean de Reszké standing on the palm of Sandow's extended right hand and Miss Lottie Collins on his left singing the "Marseillaise" in consecutive fifths and in the Mixolydian mode. And we shall listen with unruffled composure to the Two Macs proclaiming in antiphon the blessings of International Arbitration, while the entire bench of bishops, arrayed in harlequin costume, express their approval by turning somersaults in the background. Lastly, we shall see, and we shall certainly see it without the least shred of surprise, Mr. Symons enthroned as the High Priest of the new cult, and presiding over the revels of this motley crew as great Anarch of all he surveys.

'Tis in good sooth a delightful—nay, a delicious prospect. But though Mr. Symons speaks with the sublime confidence of one who has attained to something like prophetic strain, we confess at times to a certain vague misgiving as to its speedy realisation. There is a story of an eminent violinist who, on arriving at a house where he had been engaged to play, discovered that amongst the other artists retained was a troupe of performing dogs, whereupon he then and there marched off without playing a note. This arrogant and recalcitrant behaviour augurs ill for that cordial rapprochement between the great lights of the music hall and the lesser luminaries of the concert platform which is so essential a preliminary to the fulfilment of the artistic millennium foreshadowed by Mr. Symons. After all, these misgivings, though not unnatural, are easily dispersed by the reflection that under the all-pervasive sway of the County Council of the future the amalgamation of the two professions, if not spontaneously arrived at, can be easily brought about by coercion. When classical Concerts are suppressed, when oratorios are proscribed, and operas obliterated, the artists who hitherto courted popularity in these quarters will naturally gravitate towards the only form of entertainment left open to them—the only form of entertainment, also, which, under the enlightened régime of the twentieth century, it will be lawful for the public to patronise.

FROM MY STUDY.

I am very glad to find that these rambling papers are drawing around them not only a circle of readers—who, good sooth, must be very indulgent people—but, also, a circle of correspondents, able and disposed to contribute information. The second ring pleases me greatly, for the obvious reason that it takes some of the burden from the shoulders of one who desires to be regarded only as an inquirer among inquirers, a learner among learners. Indeed, my principal hope is to draw from the stores of knowledge which special studies have given to many a reader. When that hope has been realised I shall have done some service and found matter for very pleasant reflection during the easy-chair period of the day.

It may be that my readers desire to hear no more about Dr. Worgan and the Easter Hymn, but I must ask them to suffer both just once again, because I cannot pass over without notice certain communications from obliging correspondents. Besides, in this connection, I want some kindly helper to undertake an interesting task with the advantage of greater leisure than just now is mine.

Writing, apparently, before Mr. Colin Mackenzie's letter appeared in The Musical Times for April, Major G. A. Crawford, of Sevenoaks, sends evidence as to the existence of the Easter tune in the "Lyra Davidica" (1708), at the date of which, as Mr. Mackenzie pointed out, Worgan was not born. I am indebted to Major Crawford for the full title of the "Lyra Davidica," and here it is:

"Lyra Davidica, or, a Collection of Divine Songs and Hymns, partly new, Composed and partly Translated from the high German and Latin Hymns, and set to Easy and Pleasant Tunes. London: J. Walsh, 1708."

My correspondent adds:—

The tune is harmonised in two parts, treble and bass, both words and tune being anonymous. It (the hymn) was originally taken from the Latin, and attributed by Wachernackel to the fourteenth century.

In 1750, when Worgan inserted it in "Apollo's Cabinet," he transmuted it into a Christmas Hymn. In 1749 it appeared in Arnold's Psalmody, in three verses, the first of which was "Jesus Christ is risen to-day," as in the modern form; verses two and three were new ones, but in "Lyra Davidica" there are given the original stanzas from the Latin, namely:—

Haste, ye females, from your fright,
Take to Galilee your flight,
To His sad disciples say
Jesus Christ is risen to-day.
Hallelujah!

In our Paschal joy and feast
Let the Lord of Life be blest;
Let the Holy Trine be prais'd,
And thankful hearts to heaven be rais'd.
Hallelujah!

In "Apollo's Cabinet," of course, the words are wholly different. The melody is the same in all cases.

I apprehend that Major Crawford intends his last sentence to have a limited application, because it has already been shown that there are material differences between the tune as given in "Apollo's Cabinet" and in "The Compleat Psalmist."

Mr. James Mearns, who was assistant editor of the valuable "Dictionary of Hymnology," recently published, is cordially thanked for the information that a copy of "Lyra Davidica" may be found in the British Museum, the number of its press-mark being A 749. Mr. Mearns adds: "The book is a somewhat curious one, so I hope you will look at it and write a short notice of it for the May number of The Musical Times." May I interest some reader, learned and leisurely, in this agreeable task, and so gain another helper?

I am sorry to inform Mr. Deakin, of Birmingham, that the information he desires to have respecting the Vauxhall song composer, John Wynne, has not come to hand. Better luck may attend the publication of another query preferred by Mr. Deakin, who writes me as below:—

Your kindly notice in The Musical Times for April of my communications emboldens me to ask you to help me to discover the authorship of a little, apparently unknown or little known, book I have in my possession. The title thereof is—

"A New and Easie Method to Learn to Sing by Book, whereby one (who hath a good voice and ear) may, without other help, learn to sing true by Notes. Designed chiefly for, and applied to the promoting of Psalmody; and furnished with variety of Psalm Tunes in parts, with Directions for that kind of Singing. Licensed Jan. 29, 168§. Rob. Midgley. London: Printed for William Rogers, at the Sun, against St. Dunstan's Church in Fleet Street. 1686."

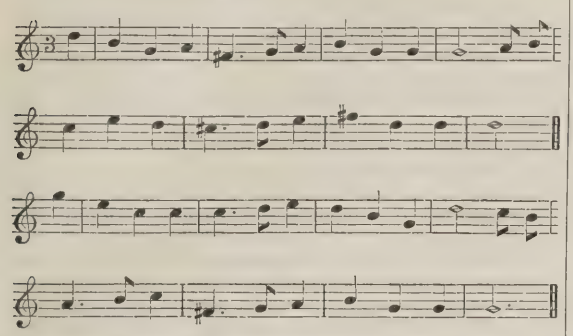
The third page has the following dedication:—

"To the Ingenious and Hopeful Thomas Foley, eldest son of the Worshipful Thomas Foley, of Witley, Esq., and also, To the Vertuous young Ladies Letitia and Anne, Eldest Daughters of the Worshipful Philip Foley, of Prestwood, Esq.; the Author (as an Acknowledgment of his obligations to that Worthy Family, whereof these are Branches) Humbly dedicateth this Essay."

This book has (I think) some historical significance, inasmuch as it contains the earliest (as far as I know) rejection of the old method of solmization, as set forth in the works of Morley, Simpson, Playford, Campion, and others; furthermore, a condemnation of the various clefs, and a general reduction of them to the F and G clefs, and other matters showing approaches to modern methods.

The author (whose name nowhere appears) gives, as an example of triple time, a tune which he calls

THE FLATTERIES OF FATE.



This tune is not in Chappell's "National Airs" (1838), but in the old book it is said to be a tune commonly known.

I ask your notice and help because I have compiled what I believe to be a complete or nearly complete Bibliography of the English Musical Literature of the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries, and I have not found in Burney, Hawkins, Lowndes, or any other writer mention of my old book.

Perhaps Mr. Mearns knows something about the authorship of the work to which Mr. Deakin refers.

In a former paper mention was made of the "Gentleman's Journal" (1691—94) and its report of the proceedings at a celebration of St. Cecilia's Day, when Henry Purcell sang "with incredible graces." By kind favour of Mr. W. H. Cummings I have before me a complete copy of that work in one volume, and shall, from time to time, dip into its curious pages for the amusement or edification of my readers. Let me say now that there is no other reference to the singing of Purcell in public, and that Mr. Cummings —than whom exists no better authority upon this particular matter—knows of no other in the literature of the day.

Turning over the pages of the "Gentleman's Journal" I met with the name of Ludovic Muggleton, and remembered my possession of a book entitled "Divine Songs of the Muggletonians, in Grateful Praise to the only true God, the Lord Jesus Christ. London: R. Brown. 1829." Some former possessor of this volume had it beautifully bound in panelled calf, prizing it, no doubt, as representing a curious survival of the strange religious beliefs which rose, like scum, to the surface of the theological seething-pot in the seventeenth century. Muggleton began to "bear his testimony" in 1641, and, in conjunction with John Reeve (said to have been a tailor), founded a sect having as its raison d'être the belief that God the Father, leaving the government of heaven to Elias, came down to earth and suffered death for man in the person of our Lord; also that Reeve and Muggleton were the two last witnesses spoken of in Rev. ix., 3, who should appear before the end of the world. Muggleton died in 1697, but his sect survived, certainly till 1850, and there may even now be a remnant left. The Hymnal, to which I more especially refer, contains 228 "songs." It was published by subscription—there are eighty-four names in the list—and is adorned with a portrait of Ludovic himself, attired in Geneva gown and bands.

This gentleman's followers appear to have raised their own poets. I look in vain for hymns originating beyond the Muggletonian ranks, but I find ample reason to believe that the Muse of Poetry had no dealings with the sect. The hymns are stuff of the poorest quality, by comparison with which the sacred verse of Sternhold and Hopkins is a product of genius. No tunes are printed with the words. While sufficient unto themselves in the matter of lyrics, the Muggletonians took their music where they could find it, thoroughly believing, with Rowland Hill, that it was unfair for the devil to have all the pretty tunes. If the reader pleases, I will give him a few examples of Muggletonian poetry, and of choice in the music to which it should be wedded. The first hymn in the book is adapted to the tune of "De'el take the wars," and begins thus:—

In sixteen hundred, fifty and one,
This morning God did freedom proclaim,
Christ did declare Himself God Alone,
Unto His ambassador, John Reeve by name,
Ludowick Muggleton was also included,
Wisdom to the elect to make known.

"Scots, wha hae" was a tune favoured of the sect, and sung to a hymn of which the first verse runs thus—

Reeve and Muggleton, who led
The sons of God, and have them fed,
And show'd who was the Lamb that bled,
To gain the victory.

The "Commission Song" is dramatic in form, very curious and bold, and sung to any tune at pleasure. In the first verse, the Divine Voice calls John Reeve by name, giving him charge to publish secrets hitherto withheld. The new apostle is modest:—

"O Lord," said I, "I Thee desire
Some other person Thou'lt inspire;
For my great inability,
Too mean Thy messenger to be.

He, nevertheless, accepts the commission—after a threatening of severe punishment for contumacy—and only stipulates for the gift of inspiration. This is granted:—

Then said the Lord, "It shall be done,
Go take thy cousin, Muggleton,
Him I declare thy mouth to be,
And a high priest to wait on thee."

Other directions are given—

Then said the Lord, and spoke it soon,
"Go, take thy choice companion,
And to John Tanee straight repair,
And seal him when thou comest there."

"Now I command thee, swift as tide,
Take Muggleton thy faithful guide,
Go to New Bridewell, where thou will see
The Antichrist that opposeth Me."

Reeve is then charged to use some very strong language against Antichrist, and, next, instructed in the doctrines to be preached. The poet concludes with a burst of exultation—

Then praise the Lord, all you that own
His prophets, Reeve and Muggleton,
For His most gracious, free decree,
Peculiar you His saints to be.

The proper tune for a hymn beginning "My heart is as light as a bird in the spring" is "Cassius and Pompey was both of them hated." By way of prefatory note to "the ninety-eighth Song," it is said: "On the 17th of January, 1676, being the day the prophet Muggleton was tried at the Old Bailey for blasphemy, fined five hundred pounds, to be imprisoned till paid, and to stand three days on the pillory (two hours each day) at Temple Bar, at the Royal Exchange, and West Smithfield in the City of London. His books were divided into three lots, and burnt before his face each day while he was on the pillory." The hymn celebrates this persecution in appropriate language:—

One thousand, six hundred, and seventy-six,
Was a black dismal day which the devils prefixt,
To bring a great prophet to their unjust bar,
Where reason was clouded and malice shone far;
An endictment of blasphemy then was brought out,
And the question was asked, whether guilty or not

The third verse must be quoted, not alone for its reference to a historical personage well remembered in the West Country:

When the jury, that for the same purpose was made,
Had brought in their verdict, the judge's thanks paid,
And Balaam Jeffreys was left the court's sentence to pass,
Which he did with a voice that did bray like an ass;
And said, "Thou must stand in the pillory thrice,
And pay a small fine of five hundred pounds price."

The fine, mitigated to £100, having been duly paid, Muggleton came out of prison on July 10. In commemoration of that joyful event his followers sang, to a familiar tune:

Now his great foes in judgment sat,
An hundred pounds they prized him at;
'Twas more than their forefathers set
Upon the Lord of glory.
The fine was paid, the prophet clear'd,
Their malice now need not be fear'd;
Rouse up, my friends, and let's be cheer'd
To hear this welcome story.

It is hard to believe that this strange hymnal bears the date of 1829. Are any remnants of the sect left to the present day?

In the Antiquarian Repertory (1808), compiled by Francis Grose and Thomas Astle, is a curious extract from the churchwardens' books of the Parish of Basingborne, in Cambridgeshire. It appears that on St. Margaret's Day, in the year of grace 1511, the play of "The Holy Martyr St. George" was performed, under the direction of the ecclesiastical authorities of the parish, with Basingborne being associated for this purpose a number of other parishes adjacent. Each contributed a share to the expenses, the township of Royston leading off with 12s. and Foxten bringing up the rear with 4d. There is a separate entry of money received from Basingborne and the strangers within its gates, the amount being 16s. 5d. When at Kneesworth on the Wednesday after the play, the churchwardens obtained a further sum of 1s. 7d., together with—as they are careful to record—a pot of ale. The total subscribed was £4 18s. 7d. The churchwardens note their expenses, as to which I quote verb. et lit.:

"Expences of the said Play.

"First paid to the Garnement Man for Garnements and Propyrts and playbooks, xxs.

"To a Mynstrel and three Waits of Cambridge for the Wednesday, Saturday, and Monday, Two of them the first Day, and three the other days, vs. xid.

"Item in expences on the Players, when the Play was shewed, in bread and ale and for other Vittails at Royston for those Players, iiis. iid.

"Item in expences on the Playday for the bodies of vi. Sheep, xxii. pence each, ixs. iid.

"Item for iii. Calves and half a Lamb, viiis. iid.

"Item paid five days board of one Pyke Propyrte making for himself and his Servant one day and for his horses pasture vi. days, is. ivd.

"Item paid to Turners of Spits and for Salt, ixd.

"Item for iv. Chickens for the Gentlemen, ivd.

"Item for fish and bread and setting up the Stages, ivd.

"Item to John Becher for painting of three Fanchoms (? phantoms) and four Tormentors (amount not stated)?

"Item to Giles Ashwell for easement of his Croft to play in, is.

"Item to John Hobarde, Brotherhood Priest, for the Play-book, iis. viiid.

These entries give us a most interesting glimpse of the miracle plays in provincial England, and particularly of the doings in Giles Ashwell's meadow 380 years ago. It is plain that the feast was not entirely one of reason, nor was the flow exclusively confined to soul. Six sheep, three calves, four chickens, and half a lamb, to say nothing of bread and ale, made up a substantial bill of fare, and cost fully two-thirds of the sum expended upon the play itself. It is curious that the players received nothing beyond refreshments, while the four musicians were paid—at the rate of a fraction under 9d. per day per man. But ninepence, it will be observed, was the price of nine chickens, and not far from that of half a sheep. It is probable, therefore, that the musicians were content with their wages. Can any of my readers supply further information with regard to what may be called parochial mystery and miracle plays, as distinct from the well-known and more imposing celebrations at Coventry and Chester? Particulars of the music on such occasions are specially desired.

I take up Robert Browning's "Parleyings with Certain People of Importance in their Day," and read once more his discourse with Charles Avison, "whileom of Newcastle organist," and composer of "Sound the Loud Timbril." The poet looks out upon his garden one bitter March morning and notes where the winter storms have torn a creeper from the wall, but left a shred of cloth fluttering on a nail. To it, disregarding wool on every fence, comes a blackcap, tugs at the cloth, tears it away and flies off in triumph. The poet wonders at the bird's preference, yet it is not more strange than that his memory, flying through the past of years after an "appropriate rag to plunder," should pounce upon a march bearing "the dead and gone Name of a music-maker: one of such In England as did little or did much, But, doing, had their day once."

Avison!
Singly and solely for an air of thine,
Bold-stepping "March"—foot stept to ere my hand
Could stretch an octave, I o'er-looked the band
Of majesties familiar, to decline
On thee—not too conspicuous on the list
Of worthies who by help of pipe or wire
Expressed in sound rough rage or soft desire—
Thou, whileom of Newcastle organist.

The March is a "thinnish air," but, as the poet muses, it expands, while Dream-marchers marched, kept marching, slow and sure,

In time, to tune, unchangeably the same,
From no-where into no-where—out they came,
Onward they passed and in they went.

Then the air "grew burning bright with fife-shriek, cymbal-clash and trumpet blare"—grew gigantic and, finally, "shook me back into my former self." "Here's your music all alive once more," exclaims the poet to Avison, or, at any rate, "as once it was alive"; just as a wax-work figure attests how such a person looked "when outside death had life below." When this music breathed it kindled rapture, though now weak and powerless:

Hear Avison! He tenders evidence
That music in his day as much absorbed
Heart and soul as Wagner's music now.
Perfect from centre to circumference—
Orbed to the full can be but fully orbed.

Why blame faultlessness, though it be exhausted and no match for fresh achievement?

Feat once—ever feat!
How can completion grow still more complete?

Here suspending his plea for the music of the past, the poet propounds a thesis: "There is no truer truth obtainable by Man than comes of music," and proceeds to discuss it. Underneath Mind is that we call Soul. The workman, by steps well-known and intelligible, bridges a gulf at the bottom of which flows a torrent. The bridge is Mind, fixed and definite, but who can congeal the torrent-life of the Soul so that how we feel may be in evidence as hard and fast as that we know? Music essays to solve the puzzle.

All the Arts strive to the same end, but the poet encourages Music to out-do both Poetry and Painting:

> Give momentary feeling permanence,
> So that thy capture hold, a century hence,
> Truth's very heart of truth as, safe to-day,
> The Painter's Eve, the Poet's Helena,
> Still rapturously bend, afar still throw
> The wistful gaze.
> . . . . .
> Could Music rescue thus from Soul's profound,
> Give feeling immortality by sound,
> Then were she queenliest of arts.

But this is impossible. Men once said that love has perfect utterance in "Radaminta" and that pity lives and breathes in "Rinaldo." "Once all was perfume, now the flower is dead," and for neither love nor pity do we look to one or the other. Feeling continues to exist, but its form and expression in any given piece fades away to exhaustion. Continually, however, are the emotions re-embodied in music:

> Off they steal,
> How gently, dawn-doomed phantoms! back come they
> Full-blooded with new crimson of broad day,
> Passion made palpable once more. Ye look
> Your last on Handel? Gaze your first on Gluck!
> Why wistful search, O waning ones, the chart
> Of stars for you while Haydn, while Mozart
> Occupies Heaven? These also, fanned to fire,
> Flamboyant wholly,—so perfections tire—
> Whiten to wanness, till . . . let others note
> The ever new invasion.

For the poet himself, he will ("in fancy, please you") use what musical cunning he has learned of "great John Relfe" to reanimate the dead things of the past:

> See there, and there!
> I sprinkle my reactives, pitch broadcast
> Discords and resolutions, turn aghast
> Melody's easy-going, jostle law
> With license, modulate (no Bach in awe),
> Change enharmonically (Hudl to thank),
> And, lo, upstart the flamelets—what was blank
> Turns scarlet, purple, crimson.

Then eyes that like new lustre again see love in the Largo, hatred in the Rubato, and Titanic striding towards Olympus even in Avison's March.

The poet now tells us what comes of his argument, Music's throne is occupied by a succession of Kings, each of whom pushes his predecessor off. But what has once lived can never die. The things in limbo only seem dead. If we bring our life to kindle theirs—bring to them sympathy and love—each starts up reanimate, "no inch that is not Purcell." It would be lamentable indeed if Man's last gain proved his first to be futile—"a blur to wipe from human records, late it graced so much." These are comfortable words, and for the preaching that in every true art-work of the past there is a smouldering fire which can be fanned to flame, let our poet be thanked.

X.

PREMATURE NOTICES.

It must be confessed that in many respects we differ toto caelo from our old friend the Snark. That fabulous creature, it will be remembered, was noticeable for its procrastination. In the words of the bard:—

> Its habit of getting up late you'll agree
> That it carries too far, when I say
> That it frequently breakfasts at five o'clock tea,
> And dines on the following day.

Our tendencies lie in a diametrically opposite direction. We rather aim (metaphorically speaking) at breakfasting overnight and dining with the lark. We date our weekly papers three days in advance, while our Christmas numbers are in danger of clashing with St. Martin's summer. Panting time toils in vain after the enterprising journalist. Books are reviewed before they appear, and second editions are advertised before the first are on sale. On every side this mania for discounting and forestalling the future manifests itself, and it is not therefore to be wondered at if it has invaded the region of music. People are no longer content with reading notices of pieces on the morning after their first production. The competition between the daily papers has developed new flights of "previousness," and we are now threatened with the advent of a régime under which everybody will know all about everything before anything comes to pass. To descend from generalities to particulars, let us take the case of a recent production at the Lyric Theatre. No doubt the successive postponements of "The Mountebanks" had made people a little impatient, and there was on this account some excuse for the effort to satisfy curiosity in advance. None the less the facts of the case are sufficiently remarkable to call for comment. To begin with, the plot of the piece was revealed in an interview with the librettist, Mr. Gilbert, which appeared in an evening paper just a week before the final rehearsal took place. That was not a bad start. The final rehearsal took place on a Saturday, and in the same evening paper, in addition to an account of the rehearsal, passages from the "book" were quoted. The première took place on the following Monday, but by that time there was very little left to be said about the new piece. One of the Sunday papers had published a complete account of the opera, plot and music, which though nominally only descriptive, was tantamount to a criticism, inasmuch as the epithets applied to the score and its interpreters could not fail to influence the minds of that large section of the public who take their opinions ready-made from the press. One of the leading dailies followed suit on Monday morning with a similar article, with the result that those critics who had deferred expressing their verdict until after the first performance found the ground almost completely cut from under their feet.

No doubt a good many people will be ready to acquiesce in this state of affairs, and to applaud the practice as the inevitable outcome of the tendencies of modern journalism. No protest that we are aware of was offered by the manager of the theatre or the author of the libretto, and in the absence of any such protest, one cannot hold up the action of the authors of these premature notices as reprehensible. In a matter of this sort a manager can do as he pleases, and, if no embargo is laid by him on the publication of notices based upon rehearsals, the practice is sure to become general. In the race of journalism an editor can hardly afford to give odds to his rivals, and we may look forward on similar occasions to the adoption of the plan by most, if not all, of the daily papers. Personally, we cannot help thinking the principle radically unsound, impolitic, and unfair, and, in the faint hope of preventing its introduction, we beg to submit to those who have the arbitrament of the question in their hands the considerations on which our conclusion is based.

To begin with, we hold it to be inexpedient and impolitic on the part of the producer to impair the freshness of a new piece by affording facilities to representatives of the press by which the public, so to speak, are let behind the scenes before the first night. Most people are still old-fashioned enough to regard the function of the stage as recreative—using the word in the highest sense—rather than didactic. Now the most delightful element in recreation, as Sir James Paget once remarked in a very admirable essay, is surprise. But the impact of a novelty on the mind of a spectator or auditor is seriously diminished if he has read all about it in advance. The gilt is off the gingerbread before it reaches the hand of the consumer. If we mistake not, in the old days of the Savoy Triumvirate a totally different course was pursued. The utmost pains were taken to keep the secret, not a hint as to the story or the music being permitted to ooze out before the public were admitted on the opening night, and, as a natural result, we feel sure that the curiosity of the public was far more effectually stimulated than under the new plan of early and advance information.

Secondly, the method of premature notices is incompatible ex hypothesi with adequate or impartial criticism, and for the following reason. The permission to attend final rehearsals is not extended indiscriminately to all representatives of the press, but to a certain number. It partakes, therefore, of the nature of a favour, and it places the critic in a position difficult to reconcile with the ideal attitude of independence and detachment. At any rate, if he yields to the temptation to say something about a new piece before—according to our theory—he has any right to do so, it is pretty sure to be complimentary. He knows that it may be somewhat of a violation of the old tradition to dilate on a new piece before the first public performance, but, at any rate, he can come to no harm so long as he adopts a eulogistic attitude. Let it not be thought, in conclusion, that we would urge upon managers and entrepreneurs the duty of excluding critics from final rehearsals. The advantages to be derived from this privilege are very considerable, so long as they are not abused. But if these gentlemen continue to take representatives of the press into their confidence, it should be on the strict understanding that their secrets shall be kept until after the first performance.

TOO MUCH HARMONY.

I am about to attempt a difficult—perhaps an impossible—task. I want to write an article upon a technical subject, and yet make it interesting to the general reader. If I fail I shall be sorry, for I dislike boring people. But why should harmony necessarily produce that effect when one talks about it?

A conviction has long been growing upon me that the groundwork of the musician's art is needing to be taught in a different way from that which has hitherto obtained; not that the old teaching is wrong, but that music and musicians are different. What is the normal course of a musical education in the present day, and why is it insufficient? A child usually commences at the age of seven or eight to grapple with the pianoforte or violin, after the slightest possible initiation into the exasperating mysteries of our musical notation, and no grounding at all in what are called "Elements." This is theoretically reprehensible, but experience shows that it cannot be helped. No young child can understand, even if it learns, the abstract matters of key, time, and so forth; the first knowledge can only be taught parrot-wise to the young, save in some few very exceptional cases. But as time goes on the young pupil should be constantly shown what rules may be deduced from experience—in fact, taught to find out grammar for itself; and this is rarely, if ever, done.

If you will look back to your school days and consider what branch of study interested and affected you least, I make very little doubt that grammar will occupy that position. And if you reflect you will find that your use of your native language is scarcely influenced at all by the rules you learned in Lindley Murray, but almost entirely by the example of those around you; you learn by ear, in fact. If you belong to a humble sphere of life, you mix up singular and plural, ignore verbal conjugations, drop h's, and eke out a restricted vocabulary with "'e sez, sez 'e," and similar tautologies. If you move in the higher circles, you drop your final g's and r's, make your sentences as short as possible, say "Don't chew know," and, generally, use the speech of your kind. If you live in the North, you pronounce your vowels broad; if in the West, you mince them small; if in the South, you never use less than three at a time; but, however you talk, you never talk as the books teach you, and how people would stare if you did! Now a somewhat extensive knowledge of music and musicians has led me to believe that they too are influenced far more by mere imitation than by abstract rules and theories.

But here, lest it should appear that I am disparaging theoretical teaching, I should remind the reader that a person never really knows a thing unless he can teach it to someone else, and he can never teach it unless his knowledge is systematised into a definite grammar. The mistake we make in music is in thinking (or acting as if we thought) that a musician is one who can talk irreproachable grammar and nothing else. This is an absolute mistake. A musician can only be made by taking a person endowed with a reasonably perfect ear, more than ordinary intelligence, and considerable patience, industry, and—above all—inclination towards the art, making him acquainted with vast quantities of music (some of which he will digest and the rest, by some mysterious law, will not affect him) and causing him to analyse it as closely as possible. Captain Burton is reported to have boasted that he could learn to speak any language in a month, his system being simply to compile vocabularies, learn them off by heart, and then construct a grammar for himself. And this is the only true way to learn music. Whether we set to work on Latin or Chinese, we begin with a vocabulary and then straightway apply this to the construction of simple sentences, if they only take the form of "The lion has eaten the gardener" or "The good father has some ink." But the musical student labours for years over such pleasing matters as these—which have ceased to have any appreciable connection with music for at least a century. Now the vocabulary of music may be described as the melodic, rhythmic, and harmonic phrases or figures in common use. These the student is always supposed to pick up for himself: the harmony books describe the construction and use of a chord of dominant seventh, for instance, but it is only by analysing actual compositions that we can learn when to use it, and—more important still—that it is bad to be perpetually using it as the harmony exercises do. The counterpoint books give us some valuable rules for melody, but these are never up to date; while as to rhythm, the long years spent in writing exercises from which this important factor is wholly absent, exert, it is to be feared, a most pernicious effect upon our musical temperament. If you do not quite understand what I mean by this, compare any piece you like of Haydn, Mozart, or Beethoven with one of at all similar character by Mendelssohn, Schumann, or Brahms—to take the greatest names—and you cannot fail to notice how in the earlier masters the accented notes come in irregular places, the phrases are of diverse lengths and shapes, the harmony broken up and, above all, the bass full of melodious life; while in most of the modern composers the accents come like the tick of a pendulum, the phrases are run into a fixed pattern, suggestive of machinery, and the bass comes bang on the first of every bar. And if these weaknesses are apparent in the great men just-named, how destructive are they to the merits of the lesser lights! A modern piece of music can be too often reduced down to a scaffolding of semibreve chords plastered over with a stencil-plate rhythmical and melodic pattern. Why have we degenerated into such weakness in the face of the glorious models held before us? There is but one answer: our students are made to write harmony exercises all the time they are at school and they succeed in learning this—it gets ingrained into them—but they don't learn to write music.

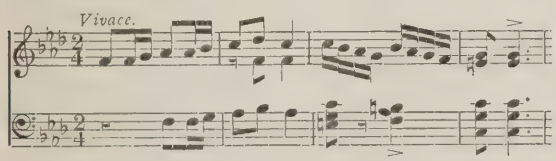
But, you will naturally ask, didn't the great masters learn thus? Why, yes; but that was only the beginning of what they learnt. Harmony was a simpler study in those days, and needed less time spent over it. Having mastered it, they proceeded to do enormous quantities of counterpoint, which after a while gave them that power, so painfully lacking to us moderns, of so writing that all parts of the music had a share of the melodic and rhythmic interest. And this power only comes by immense practice, a practice for which we cannot or will not spare time. So all our work remains journeyman work.

An actual example is better than any amount of general statements. Give any average student some vigorous national melody to harmonise, such as the following, for example—



And, ten to one, he or she will produce some such abortion as this—

Beautifully correct, bless you; not a wrong note or chord anywhere. Only every atom of music taken out of the poor thing. Of course I do not say that any but a student would harmonise every semiquaver of a quick tune, but few indeed are the living men who are capable of treating a tune like that properly. Most musicians would be so intent on harmonising it in an unconventional fashion that they would, like the student, quite overlook the vital point—the musical treatment of the theme. And yet they know—or are supposed to know—their Haydn and their Beethoven!

I lift up my voice, then, to our training schools for young musicians, and I cry with a loud voice, beseeching for less harmony and more music. More technical training, more, much more counterpoint (both strict and free) we want; but if we must learn to grub for roots of chords, let us not waste more time than is absolutely necessary over an occupation which is, after all, of doubtful utility. Learn to recognise the principal chords by ear, and to know what happens to a dominant seventh and an augmented sixth; but beyond this no practical musician needs to burrow in the fields of theory. Learn a vocabulary of chords, of melodic phrases, and, ah, yes! of rhythmical figures, then you will be learning Music.

A Canadian correspondent has sent us some particulars of a crusade now being preached in the Dominion by a Mr. A. S. Vogt against oratorio and in favour of "catholicity in musical tastes." Mr. Vogt, it seems, opened the movement in the columns of the Toronto Mail. We have not seen his article, but a well-known print in New York speaks of it as a "timely" onslaught upon the "oratorio nuisance which afflicts Canada just as it does England." This is enough as to the tenor of the article and, we may add, as to its connection with a familiar propaganda. Our Canadian correspondent, we regret to find, sees reason for taking Mr. Vogt and his clique quite seriously, although he very correctly describes as "arrant nonsense" the following remarks which, presumably, are from Mr. Vogt's pen: "It is a notable fact that conservative old London is gradually throwing off the shackles of antediluvianism and is about to seek her musical salvation in German opera during the summer months, when the artists can be spared from the permanent organisations of Germany." So far from this statement being a "notable fact," it is simply not a fact at all. If by antediluvianism is meant devotion to the great classical masters, and to oratorio as a manifestation of their genius, we are nearly all antediluvians, but, instead of throwing off our shackles, we are proud to wear them and, indeed, think them rather becoming. The remark that we are seeking our musical salvation in German opera is too funny. Does not Mr. Vogt know that German opera is about to be played on a few off-nights of the Franco-Italian season simply as an experiment which Sir Augustus Harris desires to make? Mr. Vogt's ignorance of the state of music in England is astounding.

Our Canadian correspondent puts several queries to us touching the above subject. These we will take in order. Query I.: "To what extent is oratorio performed in England?" Answer: Oratorio enters far more completely and extensively into the musical life of the English people than any other form of the art. Together with the cantata, sacred or secular, it constitutes the staple of every festival programme. Moreover, there is not the slightest sign of change in the direction indicated by Mr. Vogt. If he wishes to be assured of this, or, at any rate, to ascertain the real facts, there are musical directories published in London which give lists of choral societies and works performed. In their pages he can see for himself how wide of the truth are the thoughts fathered by his desires. Query II.: "Are English Musical Festivals becoming more general or dying out?" Answer: They are multiplying and, of late years, have wonderfully increased. Twenty-five years ago the only Festivals in England were those triennially celebrated at Birmingham, Norwich, Gloucester, Worcester, and Hereford. Since that date they have been established in Leeds, Chester, Wolverhampton (this has now died out), Hanley, Bristol, Lincoln, and Peterborough (one day). In the autumn of the present year Cardiff will be added to the list, and measures are on foot for the holding of Festivals both at Portsmouth and in the three counties of the extreme West. At all, oratorio constitutes the musical raison d'être. Mr. Vogt may rest assured that there is no thought of German opera as an ark of salvation. Query III.: "To what extent is orchestral music cultivated in England and where do local orchestras exist?" Answer: This country is just now passing through a remarkable period in its musical history. Our weak point has hitherto been neglect of orchestral music, but we are redeeming the time with a vengeance. London is ringed round with orchestras, largely made up of amateurs, which either devote themselves to the practice of orchestral compositions pure and simple or to the accompaniment of choral works. As in the metropolis, so in the provinces. All the great towns are more or less well equipped with local performers, and the movement is fast spreading to cities of the second and third rank. For example, Gloucester, a place of 50,000 inhabitants, supplied an orchestra of forty to a special Service in the Cathedral on Easter Sunday last. These players were all local, and their appearance for the first time as a body was a striking illustration of the very remarkable transformation we are now witnessing. The whole movement, let us add, is fostered by the love of the people for oratorio and kindred works needing orchestral accompaniment, and by a wide-spread desire to dedicate such compositions to the celebration of religious rites.

According to our correspondent, Mr. Vogt and his clamorous clique demand greater liberality in the choice of musical works for the Canadian public. How far they are justified in so doing the reader may estimate for himself from the facts subjoined. The Toronto Philharmonic Society, established in 1872, has produced, during its life of twenty years, thirty-four choral works, twenty-one of which are by deceased masters—Handel, Mozart, Haydn, Beethoven, Spohr, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Rossini, Romberg, Weber, Glinka, Bennett, Gade, Costa, Smart, and Wagner. Do these names, taken as a whole, represent illiberality? Living composers in the list are Randegger, Gounod, Cowen, Bruch, Mackenzie, Dvorák, and Sullivan. Where is the illiberality here? In the instrumental list we find works by Mozart, Haydn, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Weber, Flotow, Wallace, Arditi, Delibes, and Massenet. Again we vainly look for proof of illiberality. Canadian amateurs may take heart of grace and keep on the old road, assured that they are in step with the old country. They should attach no importance to the warning cries of Mr. Vogt, whose talk about musical liberality is as suspicious as the zeal of a persecuting church for religious liberty when a strong arm restrains it from burning heretics. In this case, apparently, liberality means German opera, which, in Mr. Vogt's mind, means Wagnerian opera, and there you have the bottom of the whole matter.

In another column will be found a short notice of the Concert given a few weeks back at St. George's Hall by the Marlborough College Orchestral Society. In view of the ambitious nature of the works chosen for performance and the fact that the stringed instruments were for the most part played by boy amateurs, it would be unfair to lay great stress on the inevitable shortcomings of their execution. But inasmuch as the Marlborough College orchestra is only about two years old, great credit attaches to Mr. Robert Berndt for the ability and enterprise he has displayed in bringing it up to so creditable a level of efficiency in so short a time. Brass bands and even orchestras have of late years been started at several of our leading public schools; but, unless we are mistaken, Marlborough is the first school that has essayed the performance of symphonic music by a full orchestra. The value of such an experiment resides in the fact that it is an attempt to initiate public school boys in the mysteries of the highest form of classical music, not merely as hearers, but as performers. Now since no schoolboy is forced to learn an instrument, the number of those who have joined in the movement at Marlborough is, we think, a satisfactory proof of its popularity. The appreciation of good music is notoriously a matter of education, of opportunity, and of familiarity. Some of the most attentive frequenters of our classical concerts are men who, although otherwise cultivated, never realised what music meant until they were grown up. This being so, we have nothing but sympathy for an enterprise which has for its aim the inoculation of the sons of "the classes" with a taste for what is noble and exalted in music at an age when games and the grub shop too often occupy their entire leisure.

There is strong internal evidence that the learned and accurate critic of the Saturday Review is enjoying a holiday. Let us hope, in the interests of his equanimity, that he has omitted to order the paper in question to be forwarded to him during his absence, otherwise he will be likely to suffer some bad quarters of an hour when he contemplates the vagaries of his remplaçant. For whoever is responsible for the notice of "New Music," which appeared in the columns of our contemporary a fortnight or so back, displays a naïve ignorance which is truly refreshing in these days of encyclopædic culture. Thus in noticing a collection of songs by Loder, recently put forth by Messrs. Novello, the Saturday Reviewer remarks: "Mr. Loder has arranged an album of old English Songs fairly representative." This is a delightful concatenation of blunders. To begin with, Mr. Loder did not "arrange" the songs, for the excellent reason that he has been dead for twenty-six years. He wrote them, however, so that their description as "old English songs" is ludicrously wide of the mark, considering that they were written between 1835 and 1855. Finally, the expression "fairly representative" lets the cat entirely out of the bag, and proves the reviewer to have imagined that the songs were by different composers. In a previous sentence he (or she?) complains of the want of originality shown by a certain modern composer. This charge, at any rate, cannot be levelled against the reviewer. Only a critic of real individuality could have penned the sentence we have quoted above.

That excellent French adage, Aide-toi, et Dieu t'aidera, strikes us as worthy of the careful consideration of all those who profess an interest in the burning question of musical degrees, diplomas, and initials. It was not from any indifference to the undoubted abuses of the present state of affairs that we abstained so long from expressing our opinions on the subject. They are, unhappily, flagrant and disgraceful. But we have always held that while newspapers may do good service in pillorying fraud, the remedy for the evil lies in the hands of the public and the profession. The former suffer in most cases because of their extraordinary neglect of all precautions and inquiries. As for the honourable members of the latter, in face of the competition of unprincipled and money-grubbing charlatans, one would have thought that they would have been inspired to take concerted action to protect their professional repute from reflected discredit. Lest, however, our silence should be misconstrued, we published an article in our April issue, suggesting the advisability of such a course being taken. The result of this proposal has been absolutely nil. We have not received a single letter in support of our suggestion, nor have we observed a single comment upon it in any of our contemporaries. The obvious but unwelcome inference to be drawn from this indifference is that while people are only too glad to air their grievances, they evince a rooted disinclination to take any steps which may safeguard them from the recurrence of the evil under which they groan.

Dr. Hans von Bülow's recent exploits at the Philharmonic Concerts in Berlin afford a remarkable instance of the generous latitude which is afforded to eccentricity in the present age, even in so patriarchally governed a country as Germany. Certainly times have changed in the half-century that has elapsed since the stormy termination of Spontini's conductorship at Berlin in 1841. In that age the German musical public were less tolerant: nowadays, as the Editor of the Allgemeine Musik-Zeitung puts it, they kiss the foot that tramples on them. A somewhat similar scene was witnessed, not so very long ago, at the première of the new piece at the St. James's Theatre. Let us be thankful, then, that the infection has not spread to the musical profession in this country. Mr. Balfour and Mr. John Morley are both Concert-goers, but we trust that neither Mr. Cowen nor Dr. Stanford will ever avail themselves of the presence of these eminent statesmen to indulge in a political harangue in their laudation or the reverse. The priest in politics is not an edifying sight; the musician is quite as much out of his element when he abuses his opportunities in a similar fashion.

It is far from edifying to find such a piece of meaningless balderdash as the following paragraph in a musical contemporary, presided over by good musicians:—"Many inventions have been from time to time patented for improving the violin, most of them short lived, and nearly all useless. A valuable improvement has, however, been brought out lately by Mr. H. D. Herring; it consists of a slight addition to some portion of the instrument, and produces a wonderful effect: giving free vibration and ensuring perfect fifths and equality of each string—in addition to strengthening and mellowing the tone. Players who have tried it state that the highest shifts are as easy to play as the first position, and the harmonies are full and bell-like, and easy to produce. That it does this has been proved on new violins, and on some of the finest old violins—all being decidedly improved."

It is stated that Ibsen's drama "Peer Gynt" has recently been reproduced in Christiania, and that Grieg has "for this occasion" re-arranged his "Peer Gynt Suites," No. 1 and No. 2, for a larger orchestra, and also added some more music—namely, the "Norwegian Bridal Procession" and "Norwegian Folk Dances." The former is orchestrated by Mr. Bohlmann and the latter by Hans Sitt. From this it is not clear that Grieg has done anything at all, since the Suites were only arrangements for concert use of the entr'actes and ballet music which he wrote for the play years ago. But if he wanted additional music why not have written some, instead of letting other people score his pianoforte pieces? It is not what we should have expected from so fastidious an artist as Edvard Grieg.

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

We take the subjoined choice example of "high falutin'" from an American contemporary: "If it indeed be true that memory is the only Eden out of which we cannot be driven, then to hear Paderewski play is to realise all of that heaven in its fulness. To hear him is a vivid joy. To listen to those marvellous, rippling, silvery cascades that roll in mellow floods from those slender finger-tips is electrifying, joyous, transforming! But afterward? Ah, then it is that all this flood of melody fills your soul as it never did at the moment! It was too mighty, as though all the chords of the soul had responded to their utmost limit and still there were vibrations over and beyond. It was as though this mighty flood of melody, this imprisoned music, had filled all space, and still, out beyond the bearings that are familiar to you, you feel it journeyed where you cannot follow. Those song waves traverse great distances beyond your ken. Past these dull, mortal ears, so imperfectly attuned to melody, those divine strains, rich with all the inspiration of genius, warm with all the colouring of human love and human suffering, floated away, and can no more be gathered up than the nightingale's song, than the sunbeam when it is sped, than the last pale smile that lies on our dearest's lips when they part in greeting for the last time. They are gone for ever!" Happily, our contemporary's eloquence remains.

Gratifying proof of our musical progress is afforded by the success of the Stratford Festival, which annually creates great interest in the neighbourhood among the young people and their instructors. Instituted by Mr. J. S. Curwen in 1883, on the model of the Welsh Eisteddfod, it has more than answered reasonable expectations. The number of competitors has increased, not by "leaps and bounds," but surely and steadily, whilst the average of ability each year exhibits an advance on its predecessor. It is the rule to devote two days in the Spring to competitions in about a score of subjects, and the public are invited to witness the examination before such adjudicators as Messrs. Hoyte, Cowley, Randegger, and Walter Macfarren. This year a sum of over £70 was given in prizes, and the contests at the Stratford Town Hall were in some instances keen. A Concert by the prize winners ended the proceedings on March 31, when the guerdons of victory were awarded by Mrs. Curwen. The majority of the prizes consisted of music and musical works, so that the substantial tokens of honours gained furnished in themselves additional means to efficiency in various branches.

Dr. Hans von Bülow's eccentric importation of politics into the domain of music seems to have made him a hero with the Bismarckians of Berlin. At the final Philharmonic Concert, writes a representative of the Standard: "The hall was fuller than ever, and after the Concert a large number of his admirers accompanied him to his hotel close by, and blocked the street so that carriages could not pass. They shouted 'Hoch Bülow!' again and again, till he appeared at a window and said, 'I thank you, my dear friends. You are as anxious as I that we shall meet again. Be assured that between us the course remains the same.' On his departure the members of the Philharmonic Orchestra awaited him at the station, and the farewell was an extremely hearty one. After he had entered his carriage one of them cried 'Hoch Bülow und Bismarck!' Herr von Bülow made a low bow, and said, 'I am glad that the letter B is so lucky, and I hope that a third B, very near to my heart, may prove equally fortunate—I mean "Boabdil."' This is Moritz Moszkowski's new opera, which is to be performed at the Opera House here, for the first time next Saturday."

We take the following, with reference to the election of Mr. Barnby as head of the Guildhall School, from the Daily News, and, in doing so, support the statements made: "The choice of the Corporation will emphatically be endorsed by the musical world, for Mr. Barnby's candidature was warmly supported by Sir A. Sullivan, Sir John Stainer, Sir George Grove, Professor Bridge, Dr. Mackenzie, and other leaders of the profession, and, indeed, there can be no possible question that he was the best man for the post. No violent changes in the administration of the school may, of course, be expected, nor, indeed, would they be desirable; but the influence of so eminent, experienced, and liberal-minded a musician will necessarily be employed in the encouragement of those of the pupils who may aspire to a serious study of the art, and thus the Guildhall School, without losing any of its distinctive features, will, it is hoped, take its rightful place among our leading musical institutions. Mr. Barnby will not commence his duties until Michaelmas."

Lovers of Schubert in general, and Sir George Grove in particular, will rejoice to learn that the remaining movements of the composer's Symphony in B minor have been discovered. At least, that is the only inference that can be gathered from the Observer, which, in speaking of Mr. Manns's Benefit Concert, says: "Similar success had attended Miss Fanny Davies's excellent performance in Schubert's Symphony," for there is certainly no pianoforte part in the movements with which we are already familiar. No doubt the performance came as a pleasant surprise to those in the room, but in justice to many musicians who would, of course, have liked to be present on so interesting an occasion, we think it should have been announced beforehand. Mr. Manns should give another benefit Concert at once and repeat the movements.

A Committee, headed by the Duke of Teck, are getting up a subscription for a testimonial to Mr. Tivadar Nachèz, the violinist. The circular inviting contributions states: "It has been thought for some time past by the numerous friends and admirers of Mons. Tivadar Nachèz that some recognition should be made, not only of his unrivalled talents as a solo violinist, but also of the frequent and generous aid he has given, absolutely unrewarded for many years past, to various churches, hospitals, charitable institutions, &c. (notably St. George's Chapel, Albemarle Street, and St. James's, Westmoreland Street). An opportunity now offers itself, at least in part fulfilling this, by the purchase of a Stradivarius violin at an exceptionally low price, a possession in the hands of the gifted artist not only grateful to him in the exercise of his art, but also a valuable property in itself."

From distant New Zealand come signs of a new reforming movement within the Church. At a recent meeting of the Anglican Synod, the following resolution was carried on the motion of Mr. Robert Parker (Wellington): "That, in the opinion of this Synod, it is desirable that candidates for holy orders in this ecclesiastical province should possess some knowledge of the principles of public reading and speaking, and of the art of vocal music, in order that the minister's part in Divine service may be more adequately rendered than is now frequently the case." In this matter the colony shows the way to the mother land. Who has not suffered from the painful elocution of the average clergyman? And who does not desire, if only for the sake of common sense, that those whose vocation is public speaking and reading should at least master the rudiments of their craft?

Minneapolis has a wonder-child, and a correspondent describes her: "On the evening of March 18 she made her début before a large audience at the Lyceum. A mere baby she really is, being only three years and ten months old. A sweet, winsome child in snow white dress reaching to the toddling feet, beautiful curls hanging to the shoulders, she made her little bow, throwing kisses from her pink finger-tips to the delighted audience, who enthusiastically greeted her. Her playing is wonderful, her rhythm accurate, and her fingering skilful." The correspondent has no word of reprobation for the cruelty involved in making a show of this infant. There is no change in human nature. Children were made to "pass through the fire unto Moloch" thousands of years ago.

When Emma Abbott died, says the American Art Journal, she left, among other legacies, $5,000 to the Madison Avenue Baptist Church at Thirty-first Street. This was the church in the choir of which Miss Abbott received her first stated salary as a singer; and she has always manifested a strong interest in the church. Within a few days the legacy of $5,000 was paid to the trustees of the church. At first they were puzzled to know what to do with the money. They held a special meeting, and, after much deliberation, it was decided to expend the bequest in "repairing and improving" the big pipe organ. A facetious trustee, it is said, suggested that it would be better to repair and improve the choir.

Mr. J. Cuthbert Hadden, writing in the Nonconformist Musical Journal, says: "A minister told of having on one occasion in the Orkneys carried through a whole Sunday service of two hours himself without a single singing. Here again no precentor put in an appearance at the church, and as enquiry among the assembled worshippers revealed the fact that the only man who could sing was "daft," it was thought best to omit the praise part of the service altogether. The moral of such stories as these would seem to be that ministers should learn to sing." Why not have tried the daft laddie? He may have been a musical genius.

This is a free country, and everybody is at liberty to form and, in a proper manner, to express his own opinions. We have, therefore, no right to censure the musical critic of The People for having written the following passage when commenting upon a performance of Gounod's "Redemption": "Mr. B. Davies and Mr. Salmond sang well and did all in their power to invest with interest the tedious 'narratives' they had to sing. . . . It was not any fault of theirs if they failed to make the dull narratives attractive." But, when a Museum of Curious Opinions is founded, the judgment of this critic upon "The Redemption" narrative will be entitled to an honoured place.

The time-honoured custom of giving Handel's "Messiah" without charge to the poor of Liverpool on Good Friday was carried out this year as usual in St. George's Hall under mayoral auspices, and a crowd of some thousands of the less fortunate among the brethren formed an appreciative audience. The performance was a good one, Mr. Hudson being at the organ and Mr. H. A. Branscombe at the Conductor's desk. The cards of admission had been, judging by the appearance of those present, wisely distributed by the local clergy of all denominations.

SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S dangerous illness has evoked such widespread sympathy that the recent news of his progress towards recovery was naturally received with the greatest satisfaction. Upon enquiry at the moment of going to press, we regret to learn that the latest bulletin is less favourable, and states that "Sir Arthur Sullivan is suffering from a recurrence of the unfavourable local symptoms, with much pain and feverishness, but he has passed a quiet night and his strength is well maintained." It is interesting to note that thirty years have just elapsed since Sir Arthur made his first bow to a British audience, on the production of his "Tempest" music at the Crystal Palace in April, 1862.

THE Musical Times of Queensland states that Mr. George Musgrove has made an arrangement with the manager of Covent Garden Theatre "whereby Sir Augustus will send, after his next London spring season, a grand opera company of high-class artists, the magnificent costumes, properties, and musical library, musical director, stage manager, costumières, armourer, perruquier, and, in fact, the heads of all departments." Presumably the Australasian colonies are the places to be visited, and our contemporary adds, "we may, if we wait patiently, be favoured," &c. Yes, we fancy patience is required.

ADELINA PATTI has appeared in "La Traviata" at New York, and, according to one journal, "cut" a good deal of Violetta's music. "No singer has ever before dared to take such liberties, and in any European opera house the audience would be prompt to note the innovation. Here not one critic noticed it, and very few auditors knew the difference." The same paper informs us that the "Flying Dutchman" drew the smallest house of the season, although Albani, Lassalle, and E. de Reszke played in it.

THE Queensland Musical Times, after quoting from an English contemporary that "although there is plenty of work to do in connection with the post, there were nearly three hundred applicants for the appointment," pertinently remarks: "This reads funnily. We were not aware that musicians were afraid of work. Why should 'plenty of work' be expected to reduce the number of applicants?"

THE following, specially addressed to euphonium players, appeared in a contemporary the other day: "WANTED, a steady MAN, to look after a horse, &c. Apply, ——, Bandmaster ——." This announcement is on all fours with the familiar advertisement of economical country rectors who announce their desire to engage a groom or gardener, with a preference for one able to play the organ.

DR. O. A. MANSFIELD has begun a series of interesting articles on "Hymn-Tune Cadences" in the Nonconformist Musical Journal. We suggest that their usefulness would be greater were the examples printed in music type as a rule and not by exception. Few readers will take the trouble to hunt up a crowd of references.

OWING to want of time in which to complete his Oratorio "Bethlehem," Dr. Mackenzie has withdrawn it from the programme of the forthcoming Gloucester Festival. It is probable that "The Redemption" will be substituted.

IN the April number of our young contemporary The Victorian Magazine, Mr. W. L. Barrett, the flautist, discourses learnedly, but pleasantly withal, on the instrument of which he is so great a master. The reproduction of a curious old wood engraving representing a quartet party is a prominent feature of the article.

MR. WALTER DAMROSCH has just given, in New York, a stage representation of "Acis and Galatea." The fact calls to mind Macready's wonderful production of the same work many years ago, and, later, the revival at the Princess's Theatre under J. L. Hatton.

MR. LLOYD appeared at the Boston Festival on the 13th, 15th, and 17th ult., singing in "The Messiah," Bach's "Passion," and the "Creation." He is said to have scored a great success, and we can easily believe it.

AMONG intending pianoforte reciters this season are several artists not yet known to English fame. These comprise Mr. Willibald Richter and Miss Muriel Elliot. The genial Florentine pianist, Buonamici, is also expected.

WALES is ever faithful to her musical children. Mr. Ben Davies has been engaged for the Cardiff Festival in September next, and will sing in Dvorák's "Stabat Mater," Dr. J. Parry's "Saul of Tarsus," and Berlioz's "Faust."

AMONG "dead-head" curiosities is a letter recently addressed to the manager of the Carl Rosa Company. Said the writer: "I love opera, and my highest bliss would be a pass for two." Men of modest desires have not yet become extinct.

MADAME ALBANI sailed for England on the 20th ult. She appeared at Toronto on the 12th ult., and was four times encored in the course of a single Concert.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

HANDEL was the attraction, of course, on Good Friday at the Royal Albert Hall, where "The Messiah" was given to a very large assemblage. This Oratorio, long accepted as the grandest of its school, naturally gains, like its companions, by any superiority of conditions under which it may be performed. Certainly no work better accords with Good Friday, and from beginning to end it could not obtain a more sympathetic interpretation than from the Royal Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. Barnby. On this occasion the solo parts were entrusted to Madame Nordica, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Norman Salmond, who in all respects justified their appointment. The choruses were sung with such massiveness, vigour, and regard for expression that finer renderings of "For unto us," "Lift up your heads," and the "Hallelujah" it would be vain to hope for. Though every point in the work was familiar, the result was the reverse of the oft-quoted axiom. Such a performance carries its own recommendation, the effect of which is not transient.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

It is not unusual for what is done at the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts to be repeated shortly afterwards by the Philharmonic Society, and vice versâ. An instance of this recently occurred in the case of the Overture in G composed by Cherubini for the Philharmonic in 1815. The Overture, it appears, remained unpublished till a little while ago, when a German firm issued the full score, which Mr. Manns obtained, and, with his usual enterprise, caused the work to be performed. His action, as a matter of course, directed the attention of the Philharmonic Committee to the fact that the autograph score remained in their possession, and that the Overture had not been given by them for forty years. There was a special reason why they should follow up the Crystal Palace performance with one of their own. The German score appeared to have been compiled from a set of separate parts, and, on comparison with the autograph, was found by no means accordant therewith, the changes being numerous, and, some of them, important. Hence the revival of the Overture at the third Philharmonic Concert on the 7th ult. was an exhibition of the pure, undiluted Cherubini, desirable under any circumstances, somewhat imperative under those actually existing. The Overture, however, is not one of Cherubini's finest achievements. So great a master could produce nothing destitute of high merit, but he was always least convincing when engaged upon abstract music. His Philharmonic Overture has no "programme," and there is reason to believe that the composer worked best when inspired by a dramatic story, as witness his magnificent operatic preludes. Mr. Cowen directed a fine performance of the Overture, which is certainly good enough to deserve a rehearing before another term of forty years has passed.

The Concerto at this Concert was that of Max Bruch for violin and orchestra—the German master's third and latest work of the kind. Upon this we need not dwell. It has been repeatedly heard in this country and almost as often noticed critically. There only remains to say that, while being a brilliant virtuoso piece, the Concerto in D minor will never make amateurs forget the greater beauties of its earliest predecessor, upon which, we fancy, the fame of Bruch in this branch of his art will chiefly rest. The soloist was Joseph Joachim, who scarcely appeared at his best. Schumann's Symphony in C came after the Concerto, and was finely rendered, seemingly to the entire satisfaction of a critical audience, who also appreciated, it may be hoped, the abounding evidence of masterful strength given in every movement. As an orchestral writer Schumann was not the most completely equipped of his order, but though the manner be sometimes open to improvement, the matter is always excellent and the spirit that of an inspired man.

Mr. Cowen's beautiful little Suite, "The Language of Flowers," opened the second part, and charmed as much as ever by its dainty grace and perfect finish. Last of all came Weber's Overture to "Preciosa"—an effective ending to an admirable Concert. The vocalist was Madame Nordica, who, in her best manner, sang a scena from "Tristan," and, by way of contrast, the Polacca from "Mignon."

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

At the Concert held on March 26 Miss Ethel Sharpe, an ex-scholar of the Royal College of Music and the winner of the valuable medal given by the Musicians' Company, made her début at these Concerts. For her principal effort she chose Schumann's Concertstück in G (Op. 92), her rendering of which was free from affectation and eminently legitimate. Miss Sharpe showed more promise, however, in Chopin's Study in C sharp minor and the great Polonaise in A flat, though somewhat over-weighted in the latter piece. Excellent performances were given of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, Sullivan's picturesque "Macbeth" Overture, and a selection from Berlioz's "Faust," consisting of the Hungarian March, the Ballet of Sylphs, and the Dance of Will o' the Wisps. Madame Swiatlowsky, the Russian contralto, contributed the Aria of Fides from "Le Prophète," "O mon fils," with considerable success. If her art were on a par with her natural resources, she would take high rank amongst the singers of the day. Madame Swiatlowsky was also heard to advantage in songs by Reichel and Schäffer. A somewhat sparse audience was played out by the strains of the Overture to "William Tell."

In spite of the rival attractions held out at the Popular Concert of the 2nd ult., when Brahms's new Trio was given for the first time in England, a large audience assembled at Sydenham on the occasion of the performance of "The Redemption." The solos were sung by Miss Macintyre, Miss Annie Swinfen, Miss Sarah Berry, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Norman Salmond, and a very creditable ensemble was attained in the choruses by the Crystal Palace Choir.

On the 9th ult. Mr. Manns opened the afternoon's entertainment with Mr. Arthur Hervey's Dramatic Overture in G, a work which was originally produced at one of Señor Albeniz's Orchestral Concerts in December, 1890, and has since been performed with success at Homburg and Frankfort. The Overture was finely played and heartily applauded, the composer being summoned to the platform to bow his acknowledgments. Mr. Frederic Lamond was heard in Tschaikowsky's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor (No. 1), the solo part of which he rendered with abundance of masculine vigour and sound intelligence. The work, however, is a striking example of the inability of the Russian musical temperament to adapt itself to the classical forms. It contains some excellent tunes, but the working out is intensely patchy and tedious. Nothing could be more inartistic than the way in which the enormously long cadenza in the first movement is introduced. It is not led up to, it is simply lugged in anyhow. Mr. Lamond was also heard in transcriptions from Schubert and Strauss by Liszt and Tausig. Two vocalists took part in the Concert—Signorina Gambogi, who contributed airs by Verdi and Jomelli with considerable neatness and fluency of execution; and Signor Sparapani, whose tremulous delivery of "Dio Possente" met with but scant approval. The orchestra was admirable in Haydn's delightful Symphony in D (No. 7 of the Salomon set) and in Svendsen's brilliant tour de force, "The Carnival at Paris."

The last Concert of the Saturday series fell on the 16th ult., when the most notable feature of the afternoon was a fine performance of Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony. M. Duloup, who revived Max Bruch's First Violin Concerto, plays in excellent style, but with a thin and wiry tone. He was more successful in Saint-Saëns's familiar Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso in A. The orchestra gave a good performance of Mr. Wingham's Concert-Overture in F (No. 4), but their rendering of Wagner's "Walkürenritt," though vigorous, was rough. The vocalists were Madame Bella Monti, who possesses a powerful soprano of a decidedly hard quality; and Mr. William Ludwig, who gave a highly effective rendering of Wolfram's Romance from "Tannhäuser."

Mr. Manns's annual Benefit Concert took place on the afternoon of the 23rd ult., in the presence of an overflowing audience, which served once more to demonstrate the popularity of the esteemed Conductor, who has, perhaps, done more than any other musician to advance the cause of music of the highest class in this country. The co-operation of several well-known artists, including Madame Nordica, Miss Fanny Davies, and Mr. Andrew Black, lent interest and attractiveness to the entertainment, but the most notable feature of an exceedingly enjoyable Concert was the brilliant début of Dr. Joachim's pupil, Fräulein Gabriele Wietrowetz, who carried the audience by storm by her splendid performance of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto. She combines delicacy and fervour of expression to a remarkable extent, her phrasing is scholarly, her technique remarkably fine, and her tone powerful. Miss Fanny Davies gave an exceedingly refined rendering of the pianoforte solo from Beethoven's Choral Fantasia, besides contributing minor pieces. Mr. Andrew Black was highly successful in the air from "The Flying Dutchman," "The term's expired," which he declaimed with great vigour, and Madame Mely and Mr. Braxton Smith also sang solos. The orchestra rendered an admirable account of themselves in Mr. Hamish MacCunn's brilliant and delightful Concert-Overture "The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow" and in Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony. Mr. Manns, who conducted with all his wonted animation, was heartily cheered both at the beginning and the end of the Concert.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

If all is well that ends well Mr. Arthur Chappell may be congratulated on the conclusion of his thirty-fourth season, for the production of Brahms's new works for clarinet and other instruments aroused a surprising amount of interest in musical circles, professional and amateur, and the large audiences at the closing performances afforded some compensation for the dull time immediately preceding. Taking up the record where it was suspended last month, we have first to speak of the Concert of Saturday, March 26, of which there is little to say in the way of criticism. Herzogenberg's Quartet in G was repeated, Brahms's concise Pianoforte Trio in C minor (Op. 101) and Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins, superbly played by Madame Néruda and Herr Joachim, were the other concerted pieces, and Sir Charles Hallé played Beethoven's Sonata in D (Op. 10, No. 3). The vocalist was Miss Louise Dale, a young soprano with a small but sweet voice and an artistic method.

On the following Monday there was a large attendance of connoisseurs anxious to make acquaintance with Brahms's Clarinet Quintet in B minor (Op. 115). Those who came to criticise remained to admire, for beyond all question the work, which occupied a portion of the composer's holiday period last autumn, must be numbered not only among his own finest efforts, but among the masterpieces of chamber music by the great composers. In the first movement the style is somewhat veiled, but the succeeding Adagio in the tonic major is a gem of the purest water, the beauty of the themes and the writing for the clarinet, alone or in combination with one or more of the other instruments, being masterly in the extreme, and at the same time wonderfully fresh and spontaneous. Almost equally effective is the Andantino in D with an alternative Presto, which does duty for a Scherzo, though its prevailing tint is sombre, like the rest of the work. Brahms is an adept in the art of writing variations, and he has done nothing better than the set which forms the Finale of this work. In the Coda we have a distinct reminiscence of the opening movement, giving additional consistency to the whole, which, however, it certainly did not need. Each of the movements comes to a quiet close, and in each the method of expression is chastened and subdued, though more suggestive of soft melancholy than tragedy. The clarinet is frequently treated as an orchestral rather than as a solo instrument, and Brahms displays consummate knowledge of its capabilities. Mr. Mühlfeld, of Meiningen, who had been engaged at the composer's special desire because he had created the part and knew its requirements, speedily proved himself an executant of the highest calibre. His tone in the lowest register is superb, and his phrasing absolutely unsurpassable for finish and beauty of expression. The Quintet was received with a storm of applause, opinions as to its merits being evidently unanimous. As to the rest of the Concert, it will suffice to say that Miss Zimmermann gave a chaste rendering of Schumann's Sonata in G minor (Op. 22), Herr Joachim played Spohr's favourite Barcarolle and Scherzo, and the Concert ended with Mozart's Trio in B flat (No. 5). Miss Gherlsen was the vocalist.

On Saturday, the 2nd ult., Brahms's Clarinet Quintet was repeated, and his new Trio in A minor (Op. 114), for pianoforte, clarinet, and violoncello performed for the first time. On the whole, this work is less lofty in conception, but its general characteristics are similar and the themes are for the most part melodious and winning. The Finale, however, is more bright and vivacious than any movement in the Quintet. Magnificently rendered as it was by Miss Fanny Davies, Mr. Mühlfeld, and Mr. Piatti, the Trio could not fail to make a favourable impression. Some minor pianoforte pieces by Chopin and Mendelssohn were played by Miss Davies, and Mrs. Helen Trust was artistic in songs by Samuel Webbe and Chaminade. Concerning the Concert of the following Monday, it will be enough to say that the new works of Brahms were given for the last time his season and were again enthusiastically received; that Mr. Joachim gave his wonderful performance of Bach's Chaconne, and that Miss Fanny Davies was again the pianist and Mrs. Helen Trust again the vocalist.

At the last Saturday performance, on the 9th ult., the principal pieces were Mozart's Quintet in D, Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata, and four of Brahms's Hungarian Dances as arranged by Mr. Joachim for pianoforte and violin. Mr. Leonard Borwick, the pianist of the afternoon, contented himself with trifles by Schubert and Mendelssohn, adding as an encore the Scherzo from the last-named composer's rarely played posthumous Sonata in B flat. Miss Fillunger was the vocalist. The final Concert on Monday, the 11th ult., was, as usual, an "artists' night," each favourite performer receiving an effusive greeting. Mozart's matchless Quintet in G minor commenced the programme and was followed by Max Bruch's Hebrew melody "Kol Nidrei" for violoncello, played, of course, by Mr. Piatti. Madame Néruda and Mr. Joachim joined in Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins, and, as an encore was insisted upon, added the slow movement from Spohr's Double Concerto in B minor, Sir Charles Hallé, who was not announced to appear, accompanying on the pianoforte. Four other numbers of Brahms's Hungarian Dances were played by Mr. Joachim and Miss Fanny Davies, and the Concert ended with Schumann's Quintet in E flat (Op. 44), with Miss Zimmermann at the pianoforte. Mr. Plunket Greene contributed songs in French, German, and English, being equally artistic in his efforts in each tongue. Although the season was not uniformly so prosperous as usual, for reasons easy to understand, it could not well have come to a more brilliant termination.

PASSION MUSIC AT ST. PAUL'S.

Bach was heard in divers places during Lent, but the attendance at St. Paul's Cathedral on the Tuesday in Holy Week, at the annual performance of the Passion according to "St. Matthew," was not in the least affected thereby. Indeed, with respect to Bach's compositions it seems at the present time that increase of appreciation by the general public is accompanying better acquaintance—not a surprising state of affairs, but none the less noteworthy. Happily the "St. Matthew" and "St. John" Passions are now well known, though with such works revelations of beauties of expression and of religious feeling are continuously being made to those listeners whose minds are attuned to the services of which these compositions were designed to form a part. The melodious tenor air "With Jesus I will watch and pray," restored at the performance of 1891, was again sung, and as before the treble solos were allotted to a small choir of boys in unison. The chief tenor and bass solos were given by Messrs. Kenningham, Fryer, Kempton, and Miles, and Mr. Fred. Walker at the pianoforte accompanied the recitatives. Dr. Martin conducted, and the portable organ (played by Mr. Herbert Hodge) again supplemented the great organ, at which Mr. W. Hodge presided. The performance, it is scarcely necessary to say, was throughout very impressive.

GOOD FRIDAY MUSIC.

The increasing demand in London for sacred music on Good Friday was satisfactorily met. Both as regards age and popularity the Crystal Palace is entitled to first mention. Here Mr. Manns wisely broke through the routine of detached pieces by offering a brief selection from "Redemption." Presumably it was intended as a test, and, as such, was so successful that the Conductor will be justified next year in developing the scheme. Perhaps the day may come when, instead of a series of scraps, we may hear a complete work under Mr. Manns's direction on Good Friday. The excerpts from Gounod's Trilogy were the quartet and chorus "Beside the Cross remaining"; the beautiful contralto solo "While my watch I am keeping," expressively sung by Miss Marian McKenzie; and the fervently prayerful soprano solo "From Thy love as a Father," given with emotional power by Miss Macintyre. Messrs. Barton McGuckin and Santley assisted in the quartet. This selection was received with great favour. The vocalists named, and Miss Anna Williams, were also heard in oratorio airs and sacred songs.

There was a crowded audience at St. James's Hall in the evening when, according to custom, Rossini's "Stabat Mater" was followed by miscellaneous sacred pieces. In the complete work Miss Antoinette Trebelli, Madame Patey, Mr. Barton McGuckin, and Mr. Santley were the soloists, the youthful soprano singing the "Inflammatus" with such force and spirit as to secure an encore; and the choruses were entrusted to the members of the South London Choral Association, conducted by Mr. L. C. Venables. The latter body subsequently earned warm praise for a smooth rendering of the melodious Evening Hymn from Sullivan's "The Golden Legend."

In two quarters of the East End there were immense audiences for "The Messiah." The undying work constituted the beginning of a three nights' Oratorio Festival at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End. Miss Annie Marriott, Miss Marian McKenzie, Messrs. Kearton and Manners were the soloists, and an able band and chorus were obedient to the wishes of Mr. G. Day Winter. At the Shoreditch Tabernacle Mr. John Eyre conducted a highly meritorious performance with Miss Anna Williams, Miss Meredyth Elliott, Messrs. McKay and Watkin Mills as principals.

We should mention that the other two nights of the Festival at Mile End were occupied by Gounod's "Redemption," given on Easter Eve, with Misses Anna Williams, Minnie Clark, Greta Williams, Messrs. Iver McKay and W. H. Brereton as principals; and "Israel in Egypt" on Easter Monday, with Miss Clara Leighton, Miss Marian McKenzie, and Mr. Iver McKay—Mr. Barnby's example of assigning "The Lord is a Man of War" to the tenors and basses of the chorus being followed.

NORTH LONDON HOSPITAL CONCERT.

Lovers of music, and especially of oratorio, are much indebted to Mr. James Shaw and those who act with him for the performances given in St. James's Hall this season in aid of the building fund of the North London Hospital for Consumption. A charity Concert is too often a weariness to the flesh, at any rate to amateurs of cultured tastes; but the choralists from the Northern heights are capable of high class work, and they have a thoroughly able leader in Mr. Shaw. It was an extremely happy idea to revive Handel's beautiful and most undeservedly neglected Oratorio "Samson," and the performance on the 6th ult. reflected the highest credit on all concerned. The chorus, consisting of 350 voices, sang with brightness, good tone, and even refinement, though not accustomed to work together; and although the amateur element was largely present in the orchestra it was a thoroughly efficient force. Madame Nordica was admirable in the principal soprano music, her best efforts being in Dalilah's air "With plaintive notes," which is frequently omitted, and "Let the bright Seraphim," which had the advantage of the excellent trumpet obbligato of Mr. W. Ellis. Miss Hilda Wilson was, of course, artistic in the contralto airs, particularly in "Return, O God of hosts"; and Mr. Robert Newman was, on the whole, commendable in the dual parts of Manoah and Harafa. The surprise of the evening, however, was afforded by Mr. Henry Piercy, who threw an amount of artistic energy and feeling into his rendering of the principal part which entitles him to a very high meed of praise. The young tenor vocalist has done nothing better than this. The additional accompaniments, which have been generally approved, were those of Mr. Ebenezer Prout, first used, we believe, at the Leeds Festival in 1880.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

These performances have not been numerous during the period over which our present record extends, and remarks upon those given need not be lengthy. On the afternoon of March 31 Miss Adelina de Lara gave a Recital at the Princes' Hall, which was largely attended. The young lady did not commence well, Beethoven's Sonata in F minor (Op 57), familiarly known as the "Appassionata," being beyond her present powers. Her playing was neat and unpretentious, but unquestionably weak, and her method of playing chords as arpeggios became after a time extremely irritating. Miss de Lara was far more commendable in some of Chopin's quieter pieces, including the Etude in F (Op. 25, No. 3) and the Nocturne in E. In these she displayed a beautifully musical touch and delicate feeling. She also played Brahms's Scherzo (Op. 4), the first part of Schumann's Humoresque, and minor pieces by Paderewski, Mendelssohn, Arthur Somervell, and Jensen in highly finished style.

On the evening of the same day and in the same hall Mr. Willem Coenen gave a Recital, which attracted a large and fashionable audience. This accomplished artist, who is too seldom heard in public, commenced with Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in F minor (Op. 35, No. 6), the next number being, by a curious coincidence, the Sonata of Beethoven which Miss de Lara had played in the afternoon. Mr. Coenen's rendering was far more vigorous, his command of the keyboard being especially noticeable in the impetuous Finale. He was heard to still more advantage in two charming and piquant trifles ("What does little birdie say" and "On the Hillside") by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, four of Grieg's minor pieces, and perhaps best of all in Rubinstein's enormously difficult Etude in C, from Op. 23. An interesting feature of the Recital was the performance of three of Dvorák's characteristic Slavonic Dances, by four of Mr. Coenen's young lady pupils, on two pianofortes. The ensemble was perfect, showing that the pieces must have been very carefully rehearsed. Some pieces by Liszt concluded the Recital.

The Recital given by Mr. Sapellnikoff in St. James's Hall, on the 6th ult., was well attended, and the improvement made by the young artist since he was last with us was again distinctly perceptible. In the opening of Beethoven's Sonata in E minor (Op. 90) he showed some uncertainty, but the lovely Allegretto was exquisitely played, without a trace of exaggeration. Again, in Schubert's "Wanderer" Fantasia in C (Op. 15), while the execution in the fiery first and last movements was not unerringly accurate, though extremely powerful, the two middle sections could scarcely have been more eloquently interpreted. Some pieces by Chopin came next, including a rarely heard Prelude and Nocturne and the Ballade in F, the two former being especially well played. Pieces by Schumann, Tschaikowsky, and Brahms may be passed over, but mention is due of Liszt's Rhapsodie Espagnole, in which Mr. Sapellnikoff manifested extraordinary executive powers. In due course the Russian pianist should achieve fame alike as an artist and a virtuoso.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The orchestral Concert given in St. James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon, the 5th ult., was interesting in more than one respect, its most agreeable feature being the high promise displayed by the two students who were represented as composers. To Mr. George Wrigley fell the Charles Lucas Prize last year for a "Kyrie" and "Gloria in excelsis" in E, which were placed first in the present programme. These settings of portions of the Roman Catholic Liturgy are noteworthy alike for the evidence they afford of the composer's widely extended knowledge of various schools of sacred music, and for the ease with which he works in divergent styles. Whether the model be Handel, Brahms, or Gounod, Mr. Wrigley seems to be equally at home, and there is little or no sign of immaturity in his music. If he has not done so already, he should at once set the remaining portions of the Mass so as to form a complete work. Making allowance for the inequalities in the choir—196 sopranos and contraltos being matched against thirty-five tenors and basses—the excerpts were effectively rendered, justice being given to the solo parts by Miss Sylvia Wardell, Miss Mary Stiven, Mr. Philip Brozel, and Mr. Arthur Appleby. The other new composition was an Overture entitled "May Day," by Mr. Roland Revell, a bright, fanciful, and thoroughly modern piece, which, although it was placed at the end of the programme, kept a large number of persons in their places. Of the solo efforts by the pupils the most noteworthy was the rendering of Henselt's Pianoforte Concerto in F minor, by Miss Kate Goodson. This extremely difficult work was interpreted in such a way as to encourage the fairest hopes for the young lady's future. The best of the vocal performances was that of Miss Minnie Robinson in Rebecca's air from "Ivanhoe," and a word of praise should be given to Mr. B. P. Parker for his careful rendering of Raff's Concerto in D minor for violoncello. The Concert was conducted with his usual care and tact by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie.

On March 30 and 31 and the 1st and 2nd ult. performances were given at this Institution by the operatic class directed with so much skill and energy by Mr. Betjemann. Act II. of Mozart's "Nozze," Act II. of Wagner's "Dutchman," Act II. of Flotow's "Martha," and selections from Acts II. and IV. of "Il Trovatore" were each played three times with different casts, so arranged as to allow the same student to appear in different rôles. Among those whose singing and acting showed most promise may be named Misses L. Redfern, E. Mackenzie, L. Burden, M. Roebuck, K. Lewis, V. Robinson, E. Rasey, I. Webb, A. J. Cullum, B. Muat, V. Galbraith, and I. Thorpe-Davies; Messrs. W. E. Philp, Arthur Barlow, C. E. Jones, Leslie Walker, P. Brozel, G. C. Williams, A. Henning, and J. Walters. The difficult Finale in Mozart's opera was exceedingly well done, and the women's chorus at the opening of the act from the "Dutchman" has in all probability never been so well sung or acted in this country. Praise, too, is due to the stage "business" generally, which testified alike to the intelligence of those concerned and to the excellence of their training. Mr. Betjemann, who of course conducted, might, in the matter of watchfulness, have given points to Argus. He was warmly congratulated on the efficiency shown by his pupils. The accompaniments were capitally played by ten students on stringed instruments, backed by Mr. Gilbert R. Betjemann at the pianoforte.

Several competitions for prizes and scholarships have taken place at the Royal Academy of Music since our last issue, the first being for the Louisa Hopkins Memorial Prize, on March 26. The examiners were Mr. Graham P. Moore, Mesdames E. Clinton Fynes and Alma Haas (in the chair). There were twenty-two candidates and the prize was awarded to Llewela Davies, the examiners highly commending Mabel Lyons and Ada Tunks. The competition for the Sterndale Bennett Scholarship took place on the 7th ult. The examiners were Messrs. E. Prout, H. R. Rose, E. Sauret, T. Wingham, and W. Macfarren (chairman). There were eleven candidates and the scholarship was awarded to Stanislaus Szczepanowski, the examiners highly commending Bernard C. Flanders. The competition for the Sterndale Bennett Prize took place on the same day. The examiners were Messrs. Waddington Cooke, Carlo Albanesi, and Miss Fanny Davies (in the chair). There were thirty-five candidates and the prize was awarded to Lavinia Powell. The examiners highly commended Ada Tunks and commended Mabel Lyons, Lilias Pringle, and Edith Pratt. The competition for the Liszt Scholarship took place on Friday, the 8th ult. There were fourteen candidates, who had passed the Literary Examination held on Tuesday last, and of these the judges decided to recommend Miss Ida C. Betts to the trustees for election to the scholarship. The examiners were Mr. Sapellnikoff, Professor Niecks, and Mr. Ed. Dannreuther (Chairman). The competition for the Parepa Rosa Scholarship was also decided on the same day. The examiners were Messrs. F. King, F. Walker, W. Nicholl, E. Fiori, and M. Garcia (in the chair). There were fifty candidates and the scholarship was awarded to Alice A. Simons. The examiners highly commended Ada M. Loaring and Lilian A. Foote and commended Aileen Burke, M. Willis-Bund, Maud L. Hoppé, Mary J. Ford, and Kate J. Nicholes.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The usual terminal Orchestral Concert at this Institution took place at Alexandra House on March 24, under the conductorship of Professor Stanford. The chief piece, which was placed at the end of the programme, was the music to the "Midsummer Night's Dream," given complete with all the vocal parts. The choice of Mendelssohn's music was not altogether happy, for its proper execution requires an extreme delicacy, refinement, and finish which can scarcely be expected from performers still in a state of pupilage. It will easily be conceived that the fairy music hardly had full justice done to it, and that the performers were more successful in the Wedding March and the vigorous parts of the Overture. The burlesque Funeral March amused the audience, and the rendering of the Notturno deserves praise. The solo parts were agreeably sung by Misses Mary Richardson, Una Bruckshaw, and Margaret Purvis. Brahms's "Academic" Overture was played with much spirit, and indeed showed the orchestra to much more advantage than Mendelssohn's work. Miss Edith Green, an excellent pianist, played Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte Concerto in G minor with great spirit and brilliancy, though at times a little overpowered by the band. The vocal pieces were contributed by Miss Una Bruckshaw, whose singing of Mendelssohn's "Infelice" was correct, but seemed to lack warmth and impulse; and by Miss Jeanie Rankin, who may be warmly commended for an intelligent rendering of Volkmann's scena "An die Nacht," a fine work with a very effective orchestral introduction.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.

Professor Bridge concluded, on the 9th ult., at the Royal Institution, an exceedingly interesting series of three Lectures, entitled "Dramatic Music from Shakespeare to Dryden." The Professor said that although in 1565 there appeared something like a real musical drama by Richard Edwards, Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal, music could scarcely be said to exist in the play before the time of Shakespeare. If, however, our great poet had not originated the musical play he had, by his many beautiful lyrics and opportunities afforded in his plays for instrumental music, greatly assisted its development. As a rule, the songs were not sung by the actors but by men and boys introduced for the purpose. "It was a lover and his lass," in "As you like it," was sung by two pages, apparently introduced with this object. In the "Merchant of Venice," the song, "Tell me where is fancy bred?" was preceded by the stage direction, "Music, while Bassanio comments on the caskets to himself." Malone told us that "The band of eight or ten performers was placed in an upper balcony over what is now called the stage box." In the introduction to Shakespeare's "Tempest," as altered by Dryden and Davenant, and first played at the Duke's Theatre, Lincoln's Inn Fields, in 1670, we were told that "the front of the stage is opened, and the band of twenty-four violins, with the harpsichords and theorbos which accompany the voices, are placed between the pit and the stage." This passage had led to the supposition that this was the first occasion on which the band had taken the position it had since occupied, or rather until it was banished underground. In the early days of the stage companies of boy actors were very general, the choir boys of royal and noble persons were frequently employed in the play, and so great was the desire to obtain good voices that boys were actually pressed into the service and taken by force from other establishments. The Westminster play was a relic of the days of Queen Elizabeth. The musical abilities of these boy actors doubtless encouraged dramatists to increase the number of songs in their plays.

At the second Lecture the Professor treated of the Masque, although, he said, "the masque existed not only side by side with, but long before the plays of Marlowe and Shakespeare." The masque, however, was an entertainment for the rich, its only popular use being as a kind of allegorical introduction to the play. A remarkable instance of its employment in this manner occurred in the earliest English tragedy, entitled "Ferrex and Porrex." The plot, as related in the "Argument of the Tragedie acted on January 18, 1562, before Queen Elizabeth, by the gentlemen of the Inner Temple," was as follows:—"Gorboduc, King of Britain, divides his realm during his lifetime between his two sons, Ferrex and Porrex. The sons fall to discussion. The younger kills the elder. The mother, in revenge, kills the younger. The people rise in rebellion and kill both father and mother. The nobles assemble and destroy the rebels. Afterwards they fall to civil war, in which many are slain and the land miserably wasted." Each of the five acts of this work was preceded by a dumb show allegorical of what was to follow, accompanied by instrumental music, which was remarkable for being the earliest specimen of the use of appropriate instrumental colouring; the instruments used having evidently been most carefully selected with regard to the appropriateness of their timbre to the prevailing sentiment of the dumb show, a fact, the Professor said, which seemed hitherto to have escaped notice. During the reign of Queen Elizabeth "the inventing of masques became a distinct profession," the most celebrated inventors being George Ferrers, Soldingham, and Churchyard, all of whom contributed to the "princely pleasures of Kenilworth." The early Italian masques chiefly consisted of dancing and revelry, accompanied by music of a noisy and inartistic character; but they were raised and refined by English genius until they culminated in Milton's "Comus," the most beautiful of all. Under Ben Jonson the masque acquired dramatic action and lyrical beauty superior to anything of the kind that had appeared in Italy. He also invented the "Anti-masque," a species of comic interlude usually entrusted to professional players and intended as a "foil or false masque," a relic of which would still seem to exist in the harlequinade of the modern pantomime. The first use of the "Anti-masque" was in Jonson's "Hue and Cry after Cupid," performed in 1608. Lord Commissioner Whitelock had left some interesting accounts of a remarkable masque given by the Inns of Court, in February, 1634, to Charles I. and his queen:—

"For the musicke, which was particularly committed to my charge, I gave to Mr. Ives and Mr. Lawes £100 a-piece for their rewards; for the four French gentlemen, the Queen's servants, I thought that a handsome and liberal gratifying of them would be made known to the Queen, their mistress, and well taken by her. I therefore invited them one morning to a collation, att St. Dunstan's taverne, in the greate room, the oracle of Apollo, where each of them had his plate lay'd for him, covered, and the napkin by it, and when they opened their plates, they found in each of them forty pieces of gould of their master's coyne, for the first dish, and they had cause to be much pleased with this surprisall. The rest of the musitians had rewards answerable to their parts and qualities: and the whole charge of the musicke came to about £1,000. . . . The charges of all the rest of the masque, which were borne by the Societies, were accounted to be above £20,000."

There could be little doubt but that Milton was indebted for the plot of "Comus" to a play entitled "The old wives' tale," by George Peele (1595). There was also published in 1608, and re-issued at Oxford in 1634, the very year of Milton's "Comus," a Latin play called "Comus," by a Dutchman, Hendrik van der Putten. The masque received its death blow during the civil wars, although after the Restoration several performances were given, and in the Library of Westminster Abbey was the score of a masque by Dr. Blow, who was organist of the Abbey in 1708.

At the concluding Lecture, the Professor said Shakespeare endowed the play with lovely lyrics, and afforded the musician opportunities not before available; and Ben Jonson and Milton gave the masque beautiful poetry and dramatic action. We were thus brought to the borderland of opera, towards which both the play and masque had been gradually developing. There was, however, one important point to be noticed in this development: poets made the play and the masque, but musicians made the opera. The importance of a good libretto could scarcely be over-estimated, but the greatest poet could do nothing for the opera if he were allied with a musical charlatan. Shakespeare's plays and Milton's "Comus" could exist and give pleasure without the incidental music, but the majority of the libretti of our early English opera was only tolerated for the music. It was the enormous strides made by music in this country in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries which made an English opera possible. The first step towards the revival of the play, after their suppression in 1647, was a drama, entitled "Cupid and Death," by Shirley, set to music by Locke, and performed before the Portuguese Ambassador in 1653. A nearer approach to the opera was made in 1656 by Sir William Davenant, in an "Entertainment in Declamation and Music after the Manner of the Ancients," and styled in the stage directions "an opera." It seemed to have been a curious medley of music and declamation, with scenery, but no real acting. It was, however, one of the first plays in which women took part, the lady being Mrs. Coleman, alluded to in Mr. Pepys' Diary, under date of October 31, 1665. After the Restoration, music seemed to have been largely introduced into plays. Downes, the dramatic historian of this period, spoke highly of a tragedy by Shadwell, entitled "Psyche," set to music by Locke, and produced in 1673. Pelham Humphrey and Banister also helped forward the progress of dramatic music; but the first real opera—i.e., in which there were no spoken words, was Henry Purcell's "Dido and Æneas," both the music and form of which were considerably in advance of the works of his contemporaries. After briefly commenting on other dramatic writings and operas by this composer, Professor Bridge concluded by saying that it had been well said that "Henry Purcell is as much the pride of Englishmen in music, as Shakespeare in productions for the stage, Milton in lyric poetry, or Newton in philosophy."

During the Lectures a most interesting series of performances were given by Professor Bridge, Miss Monk, Messrs. A. Collard and Dan Price, and choristers of Westminster Abbey.

TRINITY COLLEGE.

At the Orchestral Concert given at Princes' Hall, on the 6th ult., two new works by students were played for the first time—viz., an ambitious but somewhat heavy and uninteresting Scherzo for orchestra by A. Mistowski, and a Caprice, for pianoforte and orchestra, by A. W. Ketelbey. The latter young gentleman is evidently old-fashioned enough to take Mendelssohn for a model, and to believe in the value of an extended, formal melody, such as he has been so fortunate as to invent for his charming second subject. His music is clear, graceful, and continuous; it displays an agreeable fancy, lightness of touch, and considerable knowledge of effect. Miss Marion Clapton played Liszt's Hungarian Fantasia, but was not altogether equal to the great difficulties which it presents. Miss Edith M. Idle gave a careful performance of two movements from Henselt's Pianoforte Concerto and Mr. C. S. Fenigstein was heard once more in the Andante and Finale from Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto. Miss Maggie Pritchard may be commended for a tuneful rendering of "With verdure clad." The orchestra played some trifles by Bizet and the first and last movements from Grieg's now rather hackneyed "Peer Gynt" Suite. Considerable improvement was noticeable in the strings, especially as regards quality of tone and intonation, but the "wind" was less satisfactory.

THE WAGNER SOCIETY.

Mr. W. Ashton Ellis gave, on March 30, before the Wagner Society, his concluding Lecture on Wagner's "Art-Work of the future." The Art-Work was written in six weeks in the autumn of 1849, an almost incredibly short space of time when the amount of deep thought it contained was considered. The difficulty of interpreting these works arose from their compressed meaning and employment of words in a wider sense than their common acceptation. Thus, the word "folk" was used to signify the racial characteristics of a people which were frequently traced back, as in his great dramas, to early folk-lore. After referring to the significations of several other words used by Wagner, Mr. Ellis briefly sketched the contents of the principal sections of the "Art-Work"—viz., 1. Art of Dance—i.e., the pantomimic portion of the drama; gesture based on rhythm; 2. Tone, compared by Wagner in a magnificent metaphor to an unfathomable ocean which bound together the lands of Dance and Poetry; 3. Poetry, necessary to give music definite expression; 4. Architecture, employed in the auditorium and stage; 5. Sculpture, vivified in the actions of the actor; 6. Painting, utilised in the scenery. In conclusion, the lecturer said that Wagner's "Art-Work of the future" was not, as had been advanced, a glorification of his own musico-dramatic system, but a great look forward to the time when art should become a part of our daily life.

DVORÁK'S "REQUIEM" IN BRIGHTON.

The production here of Dvorák's great work, on March 31, naturally excited the interest of music-lovers in an exceptional degree. Great credit is undoubtedly due to the Brighton and Hove Choral and Orchestral Society and its energetic Conductor, Dr. F. J. Sawyer, or presenting a work of such importance so soon after its production. The performance was so good that the difficulties of the work were brought far less into prominence than was the case at its production in Birmingham, a proof that, given the necessary perseverance, they are to be successfully overcome by choral societies of smaller calibre than our festival choirs. The pathos of the work made a deep impression, and its striking originality, shown in the treatment of the orchestra especially, was recognised with as much surprise as pleasure. Dvorák's "Requiem," unless we are very much mistaken, is a work which will take permanent hold on the affection of English amateurs. The solos were entrusted to Miss Pattie Hughes, Miss Jeanie Rankin, Mr. James Gawthrop, and Mr. Albert Reakes, to whose assistance the success of the performance was largely due. Orchestra and chorus alike gave frequent evidence of their fitness for the task they had so bravely undertaken, and of their Conductor's skill. Dr. Sawyer should feel proud of his little army.

The "Requiem" was preceded by the first two movements of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. It had been intended to give the whole work, but second thoughts suggested the dismemberment, on account of the length of the programme. Dr. Sawyer secured an excellent rendering of the immortal strains, the sublime Funeral March, as usual, making a stupendous effect on sympathetic hearers. It says much for Dvorák's "Requiem" that, coming after such music, its unfamiliar beauties were yet able to exert their spell. The ordeal of such a contrast is to be successfully passed by genius alone.

THE VIENNA EXHIBITION.

In view of the opening, on the 7th inst., of the Vienna Musical and Dramatic Exhibition, the following communication to the Viennese press by an expert member of the musical section of the committee, Dr. Emil Vogel, will doubtless be read with interest. Dr. Vogel says: "It is proposed to present a complete and comprehensive picture of the entire development of musical art, from the remotest antiquity to the present day. This peregrination, as it were, through the various phases of music-culture, during the space of some two thousand years, has been divided into nine stages, represented by characteristic groups. The first of these comprises the music of the pre-Christian era (Egyptian, Persian, Arabian, Hebrew, Greek, and Roman), so far as the existing evidence, pictorial or literary, will permit. The second illustrates the early manifestations and further development of music in the Middle Ages, up to about the year 1200. Passing over a few centuries, we are introduced in the third group to the period of polyphony (1400 to circa 1560), the period of the predominance throughout Europe of the increasingly complicated system of counterpoint initiated by the Netherlandish masters. The fourth group is devoted exclusively to Protestant church music (beginning with Luther's reform), special regard being had to the different schools of organists (Tablatures) of South and North Germany. To the secular music of the seventeenth century the fifth group is assigned, while the sixth is devoted to that of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. In the former, the most remarkable feature is the origin and cultivation of the dramatic forms—viz., the oratorio and the opera, with their precursors—monodic song (accompanied by instruments) and madrigal. To the further cultivation of the dramatic forms, shown in the sixth group, there is added the higher development of instrumental music (sonata, symphony, chamber music). The two succeeding divisions are concerned with the historical representation of the Volkslied and military music respectively; while the final one is dedicated to the most eminent modern artists. Most valuable contributions have been sent for the special illustration of every one of these nine principal groups and their sub-divisions. The famous Academy of St. Cecilia, of Rome, will place at the disposal of the Exhibition a collection of some 480 valuable manuscripts. Count Nigra contributes thirty-two water colour costume studies, illustrative of the history of the Italian stage at the end of last century. A unique collection of operatic librettos, in many languages, comprising no less than five thousand numbers, has been sent by Dr. Carotti, of Turin, and an album, containing many documents relating to the musical and theatrical history of the town, has come to hand from the municipal authorities of Florence. A famous Indian mandoline is expected from Catania, and valuable documents, antique musical instruments, &c., are being sent from Turin, Verona, and other Italian towns."

The loan contributions from this country will compare not unfavourably with much that is to be sent on the Continent. Her Majesty the Queen lends from the manuscript treasures of Buckingham Palace, and Mr. Matthew, Mr. Taphouse, Mr. Cummings, and other well-known collectors liberally assist. Mr. Donaldson sends no less than twenty-five of his rare instruments. Lord Powerscourt's harpsichord will hardly be matched elsewhere for artistic grace and decoration; and there is also Lord Tollemache's "Queen Elizabeth's" lute. Among the oil paintings, Professor Case's portrait of Sir W. Sterndale Bennett and Mr. Henry Irving's of Ellen Terry as Lady Macbeth, painted by Sargent, are only two that are noteworthy among many. But much more might have been done had the subscription upon which the present British Loan Section rests been earlier thought of. Until a recent date it was expected that sufficient guarantee would have been offered by the Vienna Commission; as it is, the £2,000 required is not yet all raised, and further contributions paid to the account of this section at Coutts's will be very welcome. Owing to this want of money, the choral and dramatic performances intended to show what we can achieve in England have had to be dropped, whether to be resuscitated is extremely doubtful. Unfortunately, there are no Royal or State subsidies here, such as have helped other European countries to secure complete representation; but as far as the Loan Collection is concerned, as already said, there is no want of exhibits, and those of the highest possible interest.

OBITUARY.

The Prince de Chimay, Belgian Minister of Foreign Affairs, whose death occurred on March 29, at Brussels, was an excellent musician, he having been a pupil at one time of Mr. George A. Osborne and of Vieuxtemps, who dedicated one of his Concertos to him. Himself an accomplished violinist, he was the possessor of one of the finest and most valuable collections of stringed instruments known, some superb specimens of which formed part of the Inventions and Music Exhibition held in London some years since.

We have also to record the following deaths, viz.:—

On March 30, at Geneva, Anton Wallerstein, violin virtuoso and celebrated composer of dance music, aged seventy-nine.

On the 1st ult., at Bayswater, Signor Giuseppe Caravoglia, the well-known basso.

On the 1st ult., at Vienna, Sebastian Stelzer, popular operatic singer, aged forty-three.

On the 5th ult., at Meissen, Gottfried Hartmann, for fifty years musical director at Waldenburg (Saxony) and afterwards at Meissen, aged seventy-seven.

On the 6th ult., at Amiens, Madame Yvert, née de Taisy, under which latter name she was an admired singer at the Paris Opéra some twenty-five years ago.

On the 10th ult., at Christiania, Carl Warmuth, founder of the well-known music publishing firm in that capital and publisher of the Nordisk Musik Tidende.

On the 7th ult., at Leipzig, Dr. W. A. Lampadius, able writer on musical subjects, author of a Mendelssohn Biography, aged eighty.

On the 12th ult., at Cassel, while undergoing a dental operation, Frau Brandt-Goertz, highly gifted operatic singer, lately a member of the Royal Opera, Hanover, aged thirty-three.

The death is announced, on the 23rd ult., at Paris, of Edouard Lalo, one of the most distinguished and conscientious of modern French composers, who made his chief mark somewhat late in his career with his opera "Le Roi d'Ys, brought out in 1888 at the Paris Opéra Comique.

He is also the composer of several important symphonic and other instrumental works (notably the Symphonie Espagnole for violin and orchestra), some of which have been produced in this country, at the Crystal Palace and elsewhere. M. Lalo was in his seventieth year, having been born at Lille, on January 27, 1823.

With much regret we announce the death, in his seventy-fourth year, of the Rev. Henry Allon, D.D., of Union Chapel, Islington, which took place on the 16th ult. His services in the cause of Church music are well known. He will long be remembered as the compiler of the "Congregational Psalmist," an admirable collection of hymns, anthems, and chants selected with great catholicity of taste, and which he edited in conjunction with Dr. Gauntlett and Dr. W. H. Monk. He was the author of some admirable lectures, one on "Church Song" and another on the "Psalmody of the Reformation" being historically of considerable value.

The Rev. Thomas L. Wheeler, well known to music lovers for his valuable services during many years as Hon. Secretary of the Worcester Musical Festivals, died on the 8th ult., at the advanced age of eighty-six.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

With the last of Mr. Stockley's Orchestral Concerts, given in the Town Hall, March 31, the curtain was rung down upon our musical season. The chief features of the Concert were Cowen's "Scandinavian" Symphony, Grieg's Overture "In Autumn," and Mackenzie's "Benedictus"; all, the last especially, being well performed. Mr. Willy Hess gave a fine rendering of Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor, and vocal pieces were sung by Miss Charlotte Walker (her début here), Miss Annie Holmes, and Mr. Ben Davies.

Minor Concerts have been numerous, the most prominent being that of the Midland Musical Society on the evening of Good Friday, when Gounod's "Redemption" was performed in the Town Hall to an overflowing audience. The work is now so thoroughly identified here with this Society and so popular with the masses that success was a foregone conclusion. The choir made its greatest effect with the superb chorus "Unfold, ye portals everlasting," and the orchestra, by its effective rendering of the passage depicting the consummation of the Tragedy on Mount Calvary. The audience, attentive to a degree, were quick to notice the good points of the performance and generous in tokens of appreciation. Miss Lizzie Matthews sustained the soprano solos, Miss Florence Bourne was the contralto, the narrative was given by Mr. J. Hartland (tenor) and Mr. W. Pountney (bass), and Mr. W. Evans gave, very impressively, the utterances of Christ. There was an excellent orchestra, with Mr. Perkins as organist, and Mr. H. M. Stevenson, the Conductor, filled his post with discretion and tact.

Stainer's "Crucifixion" was performed in St. George's Church, Edgbaston, on Tuesday evening, the 12th ult., and at the "Old Meeting" Church on Good Friday; and Spohr's "Last Judgment" was given the same evening at St. Augustine's, Edgbaston.

"The Messiah" was performed by the Birmingham Choral Union, in the Town Hall, on the 2nd ult., Mr. Thomas Facer conducting; and on Easter Monday the Choral and Orchestral Association, under Mr. Halford's direction, presented the Oratorio in the same place.

Two Concerts have been given in the Midland Institute by the Madrigal Choir, on March 28 and the 7th ult. Morley's "Now is the month of maying," Horsley's "See the chariot at hand," Eaton Faning's "Moonlight," and other pieces of the madrigalian and modern schools were well sung. A young lady violinist, Miss Christine Hayward, appeared with success, and the performances were directed by Mr. Halford.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The penultimate Concert of the Bristol Musical Association took place on the 9th ult., when several sparkling and familiar choruses and part-songs were admirably sung. Princess Ahmadee, Mr. Alfred Wetten, and Mr. Montague Worlock contributed songs, and instrumental solos were performed by Mr. Riseley (organ), Mr. A. H. Smith, and Mr. W. C. Ace. The band played overtures and selections.

Mr. John Barrett's choir, one of the most efficient associations of vocalists in Bristol, gave a performance of Barnett's "Paradise and the Peri" at their eleventh annual Concert on the 20th ult., the event taking place at the Victoria Rooms. The solo parts of the work were allotted to Madame Probert-Goodwyn, Miss Rose Howard, Miss Jessie Sweet, Miss Clara Aldersley, Mr. E. T. Morgan, and Mr. J. F. Nash, who acquitted themselves praiseworthily; the choruses were given with remarkable precision, excellence of tone, careful marking of light and shade, and correct phrasing. Mrs. Brockbank Young was the pianist, and Mr. Barrett conducted. Among the miscellaneous pieces in the second part of the programme were Wagner's "The Messengers of Peace," chorus for ladies' voices; the bright Part-song, "Song and Summer," of A. H. Brewer; and a Madrigal, "The Lesson of Love," of Dr. J. H. Nice, which met with hearty appreciation. The performance by Mrs. Young of a Caprice in A flat, by G. F. Vincent, was both skilful and artistic.

During Holy Week Stainer's "Crucifixion" was given in many churches, notably at the Cathedral. Here, also, the first choral celebration of communion took place on Easter Day. At several churches also choral settings of the communion office were used, and in a few cases orchestral instruments were employed. In sundry dissenting churches the services are musically more ornate and efficient.

A county festival performance of Gounod's "Redemption" was given in the Winter Gardens, Cheltenham, on the 5th ult. The choir of 350 included members of the Cheltenham Festival Society, and contingents from the Gloucester Choral Society, the Cirencester Choral Society, and the Tewkesbury Philharmonic Society respectively. There was an orchestra of 100 executants, under the leadership of Mr. E. G. Woodward. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Hutchinson, Madame Hope Glenn, Mr. E. Houghton, Mr. H. Sunman, and Mr. W. H. Brereton. Miss Susan Harrhy and Mr. Attree assisted in minor parts. The French master's work was most praiseworthily interpreted. The soloists discharged their duties with general satisfaction, while the choir, under the clear and inspiriting direction of Mr. Matthews, sang the many magnificent choral numbers with excellence of tone, precision, freedom, and due attention to every nuance. There was a vast audience from various parts of the county who were deeply impressed by the fine interpretation of the work.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(From our own Correspondent.)

A programme of peculiar interest was presented by Mr. Kirkhope's Choir before a good audience in the Music Hall on the 5th ult. It is a difficult matter to keep up freshness of interest in any considerable consecutive number of madrigals, however well sung; but Mr. Kirkhope must be congratulated on the happy choice of various contrasted styles. The Choir responds with such remarkable promptitude to the Conductor's bâton that there is just a danger of the mechanical becoming too apparent; but that is little ground for complaint when one remembers with much pleasure how the grand breadth of Gibbons's "Silver Swan," the delicate smoothness of Benet's "Flow, O my tears," and the exquisite fragrance of Walmisley's "Sweete flowers, ye were too faire," were alike successfully reflected. Jackson's rather meretricious arrangement of Arne's "Where the bee sucks" was highly appreciated, and "The cloud-capt towers" was selected by a discriminating audience for the honour of an encore. Caldicott's humorous glees, "Humpty Dumpty" and "Jack and Jill," were most amusingly rendered. Mr. Kirkhope should feel encouraged to repeat the experiment another season and include some foreign compositions. In painful contrast to the unanimity and perfect intonation of the choir were the performances of the Edinburgh Quartet, which certainly varied the programme.

Another choral society which has distinguished itself by evidences of careful rehearsal and skilful leading is Mr. Moonie's Male Voice Choir, which gave its annual Spring Concert in the Music Hall on March 28. The novelty this season was "Harald's Bridal Voyage," by Hofmann. The solo part was entrusted to Mr. R. A. Grant, who is leaving Edinburgh to undertake the duties of first bass in Wells Cathedral. The choir was not so well balanced as usual. Gernsheim's "Salamis" was repeated to very general satisfaction, and the rest of the programme consisted of Scandinavian and Scottish melodies, cleverly arranged by the Conductor. Mr. Stronach won an encore for "Love sounds the alarm," and a small orchestra did effective though not always unanimous service.

Mr. Lingard's Ladies' Choir gave a second annual Concert in the Hall of the Literary Institute, when a varied programme was successfully performed.

The annual Philosophical Concert was as well attended as usual, and the long established favourites, Dr. Joachim, Signor Piatti, and Miss Davies, were enthusiastically welcomed. The programme contained Trios by Schubert and Haydn, violin solos (Tartini and Max Bruch), Signor Piatti's own "Sonata Idyllica," and a selection of pianoforte pieces, for which Miss Davies was awarded a well deserved encore. Mrs. Helen Trust, in songs by Giordani, Haydn, and Dr. Arne, made a most favourable impression.

On the same afternoon Professor Niecks (Hon. President) and Dr. Joachim (Hon. Member) inaugurated the fourth session of the Edinburgh Bach Society. The report of the Hon. Secretary and Treasurer (Mr. Franklin Peterson) showed an encouraging increase in membership and general interest. The programmes have included many important works which are only feasible under the auspices of such a society. Professor Niecks made a valuable and suggestive speech, and, after a few words from Dr. Joachim, some members of the Society played the Concerto in C for three pianofortes with string accompaniment. Very fine performances of the "Mount of Olives" and the "Lobgesang" were given in St. Mary's Cathedral on the 6th and 20th ult. Mr. Collinson conducted and there was a full orchestral accompaniment.

At the first Concert of the Edinburgh Quartet works by Grieg, F. Lachner, and Davidoff were played. Miss Guthrie was the vocalist and sang "When first I saw you," by Francis Gibson, and "Ma voisine," by Goring Thomas, in a very pleasant manner.

The last of a course of six illustrated Lectures on "Modern Opera" was delivered by Mr. Franklin Peterson, in the Philosophical Institution, on the 8th ult.

The Dundee Choral Union chose MacCunn's charming Cantata "Bonny Kilmeny" and J. More Smieton's "King Arthur" for the second Concert. The former is not suited for such a large chorus, nor for the broad style in which this Association always excels. "King Arthur" was rather at a disadvantage coming last in such a long programme, but it received every justice in interpretation, and the composer was loudly called to the platform at the close of the Concert. The work shows a great advance on Mr. Smieton's earlier compositions; besides the evidences of an earnest ideal and conscientious study, there is good chorus-writing and very bright and effective orchestration. A word of praise is due to Mr. James Smieton, who wrote the excellent libretto. The orchestra, which opened the Concert with a spirited performance of the "Oberon" Overture, did its share of the work exceedingly well.

Mr. Peterson's Choir gave a Concert on the 19th ult., at which Stanford's "Battle of the Baltic" was given for the first time in Scotland. The programme also included a selection from the "Preciosa" music, a Ballet and Chorus from "William Tell," "Summer is a cumen in," &c. The performance, which was accompanied by a small orchestra, was throughout very satisfactory.

A successful Concert was given on the 21st ult. by the Dalkeith Philharmonic Society, at which the "Hymn of Praise" and "The Bride of Dunkerron" were performed, with orchestral accompaniment, under the conductorship of Mr. Charles Guild.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Last month's musical life in Glasgow may be briefly summarised, inasmuch as the local season practically closed some weeks ago. One or two Concerts given during the earlier days of the month possessed, however, interest which may fairly claim record, notably the performance on the 6th ult., by the Bridgeton Choral Society, of Hamish MacCunn's "Bonny Kilmeny," and the annual gathering on the 12th ult., under the auspices of the Glasgow Glee and Catch Club. The Greenock composer's Cantata was well sung by Mr. George Taggart's chorus. The soloists were Miss Emily Davies, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Tufnail, and in the accompaniments Mr. W. H. Cole's orchestra acquitted itself very creditably. A miscellaneous selection completed the programme. As of yore the voucher for the Glee Club Concert was in large demand, showing the popularity of these delightful gatherings, as also the revival of interest in an art which has abiding claims on every musician. Mr. Allan W. Young's choristers and their cultured style of singing has long since won for them enviable repute amongst kindred societies. The old and the new order of things were again pleasantly contrasted in a programme culled from Mendelssohn, Horsley, Hatton, John Parry, and Spofforth, &c., and one or two songs lent an agreeable variety to the work of the evening.

The testimonial presented to Mr. Julius Seligmann at Redlands House, on the evening of the 8th ult., consisted of an annuity of £150 for the veteran Professor and Mrs. Seligmann and an elegant tea service. This tangible recognition of Mr. Seligmann's services to the musical art during a residence of fifty years in Glasgow has given singular satisfaction to numerous friends in the West of Scotland, and many felicitous greetings were exchanged amongst the guests who were invited to witness the interesting ceremony.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent).

The Philharmonic Society has announced the usual twelve Concerts for the season, 1892-3. In view of the satisfaction expressed on all hands relative to the recent revival of the older traditions of the directorate in regard to the production of important choral works, the new programme is expected, when it appears, to prove pleasant reading. Sir Charles Hallé's engagement as Conductor is continued, and it follows that his band, mainly recruited in Manchester, will be again in evidence. Of late, however, the strings have been strengthened from the ranks of local players, and this has been a distinct gain to the balance of power.

The Musical Association announced a performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," at St. George's Hall, for the 26th ult., with Mr. Santley as the Prophet, a band and chorus of 300, Mr. W. T. Best at the organ, and Mr. J. F. Swift—better known outside his own sphere by his songs bearing the nom de plume of Godfrey Marks—as Conductor.

Good Friday brought with it a couple of performances of Rossini's "Stabat Mater," at the Court and Shakespeare Theatres, respectively directed by Messrs. Shepherd and Forsyth. At the first-named place the chorus consisted of the Liverpool Opera Society, an institution to which the late Carl Rosa gave his patronage, and which has during several years past done good independent work as well as lending yeoman service in the production of the grander examples of lyric drama in this city by the Rosa Opera Company.

Once more instrumental music has been to the front in Liverpool and Birkenhead, and there have been during the past month Concerts by the Orchestral Society, under Mr. Rodewald, at the Philharmonic Hall; by the Societa Armonica, under Mr. Cafferata, at the Mount Street Institute; and by the Wirral String Orchestra, under Mr. Ernst Schiever, at the Town Hall of the adjacent township.

In the capital of Cheshire itself, Cowen's "St. John's Eve" was given on the 26th ult., under Dr. J. C. Bridge, now, happily, restored to health. The graceful and tuneful work was very well received, its many beauties being sympathetically set forth by the soloists engaged—Miss Medora Henson, Madame Joyce Maas, Mr. Edwin Houghton, and Mr. Ffrangcon Davies. Goldmark's "Rustic Wedding" Symphony was also announced for this Concert, by the excellent orchestra invariably recruited for the performances of the resident musical society.

Two musical services on Easter Day are worthy of record, one of these being signalised by the production of a new Mass, by Mr. T. J. Brown, at St. Nicholas Catholic pro-Cathedral, and the other by a revival of Vincent Novello's B flat Mass at St. Patrick's.

At Runcorn the season of the local Musical Society came to a close during the past month, but by some mistake the wrong date had originally reached the principal bass, Mr. Bantock Pierpoint, whose brother is hon. sec. of the Society, and he was on his way to the scene of operations while the first part of Haydn's "Creation" was in progress. The chief bassoonist, Mr. Foulds, however, proved equal to the emergency and sang some of the concerted music. Whether he would have attempted to describe "the heavy beasts" and put in the famous BB flat on his instrument as well is not recorded, as Mr. Pierpoint arrived in time. Any way, as it was, Mr. Foulds saved the credit of an important portion of this performance.

Southport is busy preparing for its centenary celebrations, and the local Philharmonic Society is rehearsing Sullivan's "On Shore and Sea" for the same, under Mr. H. Hudson. This organisation has given Handel's "Messiah" and Parry's "Judith" during the past season. At the same watering-place Sunday evening Oratorio Services were commenced late last year at Holy Trinity Church, and it was hoped that these would have been continued, but unfortunately the promoters have been disappointed. Some good work was, however, done in the production of Spohr's "God, Thou art great," Mendelssohn's "As the hart pants," and Stainer's "Crucifixion."

Easter time in North Wales was, as usual, celebrated by various Concerts and Eisteddfods. At Rhyl, on Good Friday, there were performances of Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" in the New Pavilion, the chorus being that of the Birkenhead Cambrian Choral Society.

On Easter Monday the goodly sequence of tournaments of song initiated under the patronage of Queen Elizabeth at Caerwys were continued at Llandudno, Llangefni, and other choral centres of the principality. The great musical Mecca of Wales will however shortly be Rhyl, where the National Eisteddfod is to be held this year and in connection with which important prizes are to be awarded.

On Easter Monday the Duke of Westminster's place at Eaton Hall witnessed the eighth annual gathering of village choirs, the total number of voices being about 250. Mr. H. Leslie is to be credited with the inception of these meetings, which have done much to keep up the standard of vocal music in a district of which the conductor of the once famous choir is a near neighbour.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

DURING the past month we have enjoyed our music in the theatre and forsaken for a time the concert-room. During an exceptionally long sojourn here the Carl Rosa Company has found it advisable to enlarge its répertoire and to allow the old worn-out ballad works to sink into oblivion. Too great a leaning upon the spectacular dramas of the Meyerbeer school may, however, prove a mistake. They need a larger stage than may easily be found in the provinces and a wealth of accessories very trying to the resources of a travelling company. The music of the "Prophet" is terribly shorn of its glamour unless rendered by singers of great power and carried along upon the broad stream of sound of a large band. Even more dependent upon its mounting is "Aïda," with its less sensuous music. Far more attractive—largely because more within the scope of the company—has Mascagni's "Rustic Chivalry" proved. It has been given more than a dozen times, and has charmed through its unpretentious simplicity and the even flow of its melody. Our chief English lyric company evidently demands careful management just now, and it is strange that the ambition of its very successful founder to establish native opera upon a firm basis should have been lost sight of. A recent unhappy event—the death of Mr. Goring Thomas—has called attention not only to hopes excited on behalf of future promise, but to achievements of high character. There may be obstacles in the way of presenting "Nadeshda," or any of the operas specially written for the late Mr. Carl Rosa; but if there are the sooner those difficulties are surmounted the better. It is pleasant to hear some of the fresh voices of the younger recruits of the company. Especially valuable must Miss Palliser prove with her evident dramatic instincts and her extraordinarily sonorous upper voice, not yet vitiated by the detestable vibrato which makes one so writhe while listening to the painful exertions of many of our impassioned vocalists.

Cellier's "Mountebanks" was sure of a respectful hearing in Manchester, but "Dorothy" remains the work by which we most esteem him as a composer.

At the Town Hall Mr. Pyne every Saturday evening regales lovers of organ music. Probably in no other city are amateurs of the instrument so numerous or so constant in attendance. Unusual interest was given to the gathering on Saturday, the 9th ult., by the fact that the Organ Committee invited the attendance of the members of the National Society of Professional Musicians, who had been holding a sectional meeting here in the afternoon.

Great preparations are being made for the installation of Earl Spencer as the Chancellor of the Victoria University. According to the custom of the older Universities, an Ode has been prepared which will be given at the important ceremonial of the 25th inst.

MUSIC IN NORWICH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LATER in the year than usual the Norwich Gate House Choir gave its first Concert of the present year on March 31. In consequence of the Lenten season the vocal works were of a religious character, the principal one being Weber's Cantata "In constant order." The solos were taken by Miss Bond, Miss Palmer, Mrs. A. J. Clark, Mr. S. H. Burton, and Mr. A. J. Clark, all members of the Society, to none of whom did the work offer much chance for display, and the choir was somewhat overweighted; in Gounod's motet "Ave Verum" and Field's part-song "The angels' whisper" greater success was achieved, and the effect of Mr. Kingston Rudd's careful training was apparent. The great interest of the Concert centred in the appearance of Dr. Joachim, who, in addition to giving Spohr's ever welcome Adagio and Bach's Chaconne as solos, played, conjointly with Mr. Rudd, Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata. Dr. Joachim's interpretation of the violin part of this colossal work is well known, and it may be fairly said that under Mr. Rudd's facile fingers the pianoforte part lacked nothing in expression or execution. Miss Burrows and Mr. E. A. Bracey contributed vocal solos and Mr. W. Lain did useful service at the harmonium.

On the evening of Friday, the 8th ult., a special Service was held in the nave of Norwich Cathedral, when, after a short but eloquent address by the Dean (Dr. Lefroy), Gaul's Passion Music was sung by the Cathedral Choir. This was the first opportunity which had occurred for hearing the work in the city wherein its composer was born, and no more suitable place could have been selected for the purpose than the sacred edifice in which he commenced his musical training. The solos and concerted pieces had every justice done them by Messrs. Snelling, Cockaday, Brooks, Hemmings, Thouless, Daines, Smith, and Brockbank. The trio "Thou hidest Thy face, O Lord," and the quartet "Hath God forgotten to be gracious?" both charming specimens of part-writing, showing of what good work Mr. Gaul is capable, made a great impression upon the large congregation present. The same remark equally applies to the solo and quartet in the concluding part, "Blessed are the departed." Dr. Bates presided at the organ.

If anything was needed to show the desire of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich Cathedral to utilize the building under their care on behalf of the noblest forms of music, the performance of the major part of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" at a special Service, held on the evening of the 22nd ult., would be ample proof of the sincerity of their wishes. On Dr. Bates, the Cathedral organist, devolved the duty of carrying the desire of the Dean into effect, and for this purpose, in addition to his own choir, he enlisted the services of several church choirs in the city and about thirty picked tenors and basses, chiefly members of the Festival choir. The band engaged numbered about fifty performers, led by Mr. F. W. B. Noverre, mostly residents in Norwich, with a few additions from neighbouring towns. The nave of the Cathedral was entirely filled from end to end. The vocal quartet comprised Master Snelling, Messrs. Cockaday, Brooks, and Brockbank, all members of the Cathedral choir, and the various recitatives and airs were admirably sung by these gentlemen. The massive choruses which abound in "St. Paul" were well rendered by the choir. If any fault could be found with the band, we might say that it was too powerful; but distance has to be taken into account, and probably half-way down the nave this difficulty was not apparent. Dr. Bates conducted most carefully, and with all necessary decision, and must be congratulated upon a highly successful performance. We believe that Norwich is the only Cathedral in England where such festival-like services are open to the public without charge. A collection was made towards defraying the expenses incurred, the balance being guaranteed by several gentlemen interested in popularising the Cathedral services.

Following the precedent of former years, Drs. Hill and Bunnett arranged a performance of Handel's "Messiah" on Good Friday afternoon in St. Andrew's Hall on behalf of local charities, the Festival Chorus and the Philharmonic Society's band giving their services. The principal vocalists were Miss Florence Monk, Mrs. Malony, Mr. H. Sawford Dye, and Mr. Dan Price. Dr. Bunnett presided at the organ, and under the bâton of Dr. Hill a satisfactory performance was given.

MUSIC IN MONTREAL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE third annual Festival of the Montreal Philharmonic Society took place on March 23 and two following evenings. The works performed were "Erl-King's Daughter," by Niels W. Gade; "The Deluge" (first performance in Canada), by G. Saint-Saëns; "The Spectre's Bride" (second performance by the Society), by A. Dvorák; "Story of Sayid" (first performance in America), by A. C. Mackenzie; and Overture, "Rienzi," by Wagner. The soloists were Mrs. Seabury C. Ford, of Cleveland (soprano); Madame Clara Poole, of New York (contralto); Mr. C. A. Knorr, of Chicago (tenor); and Mr. Max Heinrich. Of the orchestra of forty-six players, sixteen came from Boston, two from New York, and twenty-eight from Montreal. They far exceeded in numbers and excellence those engaged in previous years by the Society. The leader was Mr. Winternitz, of Boston. The success of the first Concert was somewhat marred by the indisposition of Mr. Heinrich, who was suffering from a relaxed throat. In the second part of the "Erl-King's Daughter" he was obliged to stop singing. The point of greatest interest to the audience was the orchestration in the second part of the "Deluge," which was thoroughly well played. The chorus sang with great precision and taste.

The performance of "The Spectre's Bride" was a very fine one. Mr. Heinrich (who had partially recovered), Mr. Knorr, as the Spectre, and Mrs. Ford, as the Maiden, gave great satisfaction by the artistic manner in which they interpreted the difficult music, and band and chorus did their duty well.

In the "Story of Sayid," which, as stated above, was performed on this occasion for the first time in America, the choir certainly carried off the palm. The choruses for the most part are brilliant pieces of musical writing and quite captured the interest of the members, who devoted time and intelligence to their mastery. The attack throughout was nearly faultless and the volume of tone full and even. The "Story of Sayid" displays much fertility of invention and skilful orchestration. The two Marches especially, and the fine concluding chorus "O Love, thy car triumphal," were much applauded. Full justice was done to the many melodious passages allotted to the solo voices by Mrs. Ford, Messrs. Knorr and Max Heinrich.

The most notable features of the third Festival are the great improvement in the chorus singing, which would now do credit to much larger cities, and the increased number of local musicians in the orchestra. Mr. G. Couture conducted with energy and tact.

Despite a heavy thunder shower which fell on the evening of the 5th ult., a vast audience greeted Mr. Joseph Gould when he appeared to conduct the last Concert of the twenty-eighth season of the Mendelssohn Choir. The principal work of the evening was a very effective and clever setting of Thomas Moore's hymn "Fall'n is thy throne, O Israel," by the Conductor, who writes under the nom de plume of Perceval. The Allegro movement, "Like heath that in the wilderness," is very difficult, and the accuracy and vigour with which this was rendered gave evidence of the strict and skilful training through which the choir has passed. The soloist of the evening was Mr. Vladimir de Pachmann, who received a genuine ovation for his masterly playing of Chopin. Mr. Pachmann was evidently delighted with his reception, as he responded three times in answer to very unmistakable encores. The following is the complete programme: "A walk at dawn," Niels W. Gade; Madrigalian Chorus, "In these delightful pleasant groves," Henry Purcell; Part-song, "Still do I think of thee," Rubinstein; Pianoforte solo (a) Ballade (Op. 23); (b) Trois Etudes (Op. 25, No. 6; Op. 25, No. 2; and Op. 10, No. 5), Chopin; Part-song, "Out on the waters," A. J. Caldicott; Double Chorus, "From the morning watch," Gounod; Pianoforte solo (a) Rondo capriccioso, Mendelssohn; (b) "Si oiseau j'étais," Henselt; Motet in eight parts, "Fall'n is thy throne," Perceval; Pianoforte solo (a) Nocturne (Op. 55, No. 1), (b) Mazurka (Op. 41, No. 1), Valse (Op. 42), Chopin; Madrigal, "Thine eyes so bright," Henry Leslie; Part-songs (a) "Song of the Lark," (b) "Early Spring," Mendelssohn.

MUSIC IN BERLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE production of Moszkowski's Opera "Boabdil" took place at the Opernhaus, after the usual postponements, on the 21st ult., with every sign of a conspicuous success. Herr Wittkowsky, who shared with the composer the honours of the evening, has provided a strong and well-written libretto dealing with the last struggles of the Moors against the power of Spain, the love interest being provided for in the characters of Boabdil, the Moorish King, and Zoraja, daughter of Cabra, Commander of the Spanish army. The conflict in the heroine's breast between her duty to her father and her love for the hostile king is well worked out, and an effective climax is reached in her death by the hand of her own father, Zoraja substituting herself as victim of the treachery prepared for Boabdil. Cabra is slain by Boabdil, who himself seeks death from the swords of the Spanish soldiers who have just entered the Alhambra in triumph.

Of all this picturesque material the composer has made excellent use. He has written an opera which has already commended itself warmly to musicians (the pianoforte score has been for some time in the hands of the critics), and which, further, contains many elements of popularity. Among the numbers which created the most favourable impression must be mentioned the Overture, which was loudly applauded; in Act II. the lament of Ayxa, Boabdil's mother, over the fallen state of the Moors, "Wo bist Du, freies Maurenland?"; Zoraja's solo, "Als Ihr von uns gezogen"; a most elaborate Moorish ballet, destined to win for itself a wide popularity; and the magnificent Finale, where the nuptials of Boabdil and Zoraja are broken in upon by the hostile entrance of Cabra with his Spanish soldiers. After the excitement of this scene, the opening portion of Act III. make a rather tedious impression, which is, however, soon removed by a love-duet of great beauty, and an exquisitely graceful Moorish people's-song for Zoraja. The Muezzin's call to prayer is then heard, inevitably recalling a similar passage in the "Barbier von Bagdad," and the music hastens on to the tragic close. Moszkowski was repeatedly called during the performance, his greatest ovation taking place after the second act, when he had to appear three times. The performance, conducted by Herr Kahl, could hardly have been better; orchestra and chorus were alike beyond reproach, and the solo parts were in thoroughly capable hands. Particularly good were the Zoraja of Frl. Hiedler, the Ayxa of Frau Staudigl, and the Cabra of Herr Fränkel. Similar praise cannot, however, be given to Herr Rothmühl, who, both vocally and dramatically, was far from being an ideal representative of the dignified Boabdil. The piece was superbly mounted, and the ballet left nothing to desire. The Opernhaus is to be congratulated on the one absolute novelty that has been produced here this season.

The last Von Bülow Concert took place on March 28, an occasion made memorable by the extraordinary way in which the great Conductor saw fit to take leave of his audience. The characteristic programme consisted of Bach's Suite for flute and strings, Brahms's Second Orchestral Serenade, and Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony.

This, however, was not Von Bülow's final appearance in the Philharmonic. On the 4th ult., at the last Concert of the Philharmonic Choir, he conducted Beethoven's "Weihe des Hauses" Overture, and secured a fine rendering of the Ninth Symphony. In addition to Brahms's "Schicksalslied," Dr. Ochs, the Conductor of the choir, had included in the programme, influenced by the Berlioz wave which has lately been passing over Berlin, that composer's "Flucht nach Egypten." This short work, afterwards incorporated by Berlioz as the second part of the trilogy "L'Enfance du Christ," was admirably performed and well received.

The Concert season has come nearly to an end. Lent has brought with it the annual oratorio performances—not many in number, as Berlin is not given over to this form of art. "The Messiah" and the "Matthew" Passion Music have been given in the Singakademie, the latter work having been performed also by the Stern'scher Gesangverein. That is all. The performance of Bach's colossal work, almost in its entirety, by the Singakademie, while a really fine one, served to clearly emphasise the wisdom if not the necessity of a more abridged version. The same institution announces for its next Concert the music to Goethe's "Faust," by the distinguished amateur, Prince Radziwill.

The recently-organised Hornsey and Crouch End Orchestral Society gave its first Concert at the National Hall, Hornsey, on the 2nd ult. A somewhat ambitious programme was most creditably got through by a complete orchestra of sixty performers, conducted by Mr. H. J. Baker (Organist of Hornsey Parish Church), with Mr. H. C. Tonking as leader. The selection of music included Mozart's "Zauberflöte" Overture, Haydn's Symphony in C, Mendelssohn's Capriccio Brillante in B minor (Op. 22), Mackenzie's "Benedictus," Schubert's Entr'acte (No. 2), from "Rosamunde," and Suppé's "Poet and Peasant" Overture. All these pieces were rendered with commendable accuracy and intonation, whilst the general ensemble reflected much credit upon the careful rehearsing and watchfulness of the Conductor, who seldom failed to secure the proper nuances at the right time. Miss Emily Davies gave sympathetic renderings of Handel's "From mighty kings" and Mascheroni's "For all Eternity," and the pianoforte part of Mendelssohn's Capriccio in B minor was played by Miss Florence Ford with care and taste. The Society is in its first season, not having been in existence more than six months. It already numbers over one hundred members, of whom fifty are active. The President is Mr. E. W. Nicholls, an old resident in Hornsey and a former chorister of St. Paul's under Sir John Goss; Sir Arthur Sullivan and several other eminent musicians have become Vice-Presidents, so that altogether the Society is well equipped and appears to have a promising future before it in one of the most important and rapidly developing suburbs of Northern London.

An interesting Concert was given at the Holborn Town Hall, on March 30, by the Cambridge University Musical Society's String Quartet (Messrs. Gompertz, Inwards, Kreuz, and Ould), assisted by Miss Elizabeth Fédarb (pianist), Miss M. A'Bear (soprano), and Mr. D. Price (bass). The chief features of an excellent programme were Schumann's Quintet, a Haydn Quartet, and the slow movement from a new Concerto for the viola by Mr. Emil Kreuz. Mr. Kreuz is already favourably known as one of our best viola players and a young composer of decided promise. The new Concerto (Op. 20) is, we believe, his first work of large dimensions, and should prove a valuable and welcome addition to the extremely limited number of important compositions for a beautiful but unjustly neglected instrument. Following the precedent set by Sterndale Bennett in his lovely Concerto in F minor, Mr. Kreuz has styled his slow movement a Barcarolle. It is an extremely favourable specimen of a somewhat hackneyed type, for it is charmingly melodious throughout; while the impassioned and vigorous second subject presents an effective contrast to the tender sentiment and the "sweetness long drawn out" of the opening theme. The important accompaniments were cleverly played on a Broadwood pianoforte by Miss Fédarb, and the composer himself rendered the solo part with great beauty of tone and finished technique. Mr. Gompertz gave a brilliant and dashing performance of Wieniawski's Polonaise in D.

Under the able conductorship of the principal, Mr. C. J. Dale, the students and professors of the Metropolitan College of Music gave an Orchestral Concert on March 29, at Holloway Hall, which was completely filled on the occasion. The band, consisting of some 130 instrumentalists, rendered an excellent account of itself in the performance of Mozart's Overture to "La Clemenza di Tito," Haydn's Symphony (No. 10) in E flat, the Marches from "Le Prophète" and "Tannhäuser," and other pieces, the performance altogether reflecting much credit upon the teaching capacity of the Institution. Mr. J. T. Carrodus was the leading violinist and also contributed some solo numbers to the programme of the evening, which, moreover, included vocal contributions by Miss Maud Ellicott, Miss Bessie Dore, Mr. Percy Palmer, and Mr. Sidney Jamieson. The Concert was given in aid of the Scholarship and Prize Fund in connection with the College.

On the 4th ult., at Princes' Hall, the Musical Artists' Society gave its sixtieth Concert. The programme included, besides a Quartet by Mozart and a Pianoforte Trio by Mendelssohn, several works by modern English composers. Chief among these were a String Quartet in C minor by Miss Oliveria Prescott, remarkable for vigour and terseness, though of course other qualities were not lacking. The Andante, in variation form, is built on an expressive theme, and the whole work abounds in clever and effective passages. A bright and genial Sonata for pianoforte and violin, by Mr. E. H. Thorne, was also heard with much pleasure, and Miss Greta Williams and Mr. H. L. Thomas contributed songs by Mr. Walter Macfarren and Mr. Stewart Macpherson. The instrumentalists were Messrs. Buziau, H. Lee, A. Wright, Albert and Algernon Ashton, and the Concert was under the direction of Mr. Alfred Gilbert.

Madame Florence Winn is to be congratulated on the success which attended the first performance of her recently established Choral Society, at the West Hampstead Town Hall, on the 2nd ult. No less important a work than "Elijah" was undertaken, with a result that proved the careful training of the choir by Mr. Henry Baker, who directed the performance with skill and judgment. The principal soloists were Miss Ada Patterson, Madame Winn, Mr. Reginald Groome, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint. The latter gave an admirable interpretation of the part of the Prophet, while Madame Winn once more proved her capability as a sterling artist, especially in "O rest in the Lord," which she sang with true devotional expression. A small orchestra, led by Mr. T. E. Gatehouse (with Mr. Clement Locknane at the pianoforte), lent efficient aid in the accompaniments. At the second Concert, on the 14th inst., Mendelssohn's "Athalie" will be given.

An interesting programme was provided at the second of Mr. Clinton's Wind Chamber Concerts, which took place at the Steinway Hall on the 6th ult. The scheme covered a wide period in musical history, for it included Marcello's Sonata in G minor for violoncello, well played by Mr. E. Howell; Mozart's Trio in E flat, for pianoforte, clarinet, and viola (often played at the Popular Concerts); Spohr's Septet (Op. 147), for pianoforte, violin, violoncello, and wind; and Rubinstein's Quintet in F, for pianoforte and wind instruments (Op. 55). The two last-named works were practically novelties, but they proved well worthy of performance—that of Spohr especially; and the various performances were almost all that could be desired, the Concert-giver being assisted by Messrs. Webbe, Hans Wessely, Griffiths, Borsdorf, and Wotton. Madame Valda contributed vocal pieces by Gounod and Meyerbeer with good effect.

The Stock Exchange Orchestral Society may be warmly congratulated on the success of its third and concluding Concert this season at St. James's Hall on the 25th ult. True, the strings in Haydn's Symphony in B flat (No. 9 of the Salomon set) were somewhat rough, but the spirited rendering of Grieg's effective Overture "Im Herbst" showed that Mr. George Kitchin had well drilled his forces; and Dr. Mackenzie's charming incidental music to "Ravenswood," conducted by the composer, could scarcely have been better rendered by a professional orchestra. The male-voice choir was heard to advantage in Wesley's fine glee "I wish to tune my quiv'ring lyre" and in Professor Bridge's clever and humorous part-song "An old rat's tale." Miss Luna Zagury was somewhat overweighted in Gounod's air "Plus grand dans son obscurité," but she sang Goring Thomas's pleasing song "A Summer Night" with a fair amount of expression.

The German Reed Entertainment re-opened on the 16th ult. with a new first part, entitled "The Barley Mow," libretto by Mr. Walter Frith and music by Mr. Corney Grain. Mr. Grain's music is of a pleasing and tuneful character, and special mention should be made of the opening Trio, which is cleverly harmonised. The chief part was played by Mr. Alfred Reed, who acted with unflagging energy, and who has rarely been seen to better advantage. Mr. Avalon Collard has proved a useful acquisition to the Company, and his scenes with Rosie (cleverly played by Miss Norah Maguire) were very successful, Mr. Collard scoring a special success with the ballad "The Mermaid." Mr. Wilkinson was excellent as a Rural Postman, and Miss Fanny Holland, always a favourite here, sang and acted with her usual success. The entertainment concluded with Mr. Grain's new musical sketch, "A Fancy Dress Ball."

Mr. Charles Fry gave a Recital of miscellaneous pieces at the Hampstead Conservatoire on the 4th ult., when he was assisted by Madame Clara Samuell and Mr. Henry R. Rose. The lady gave three old English songs with so much success that she was compelled to repeat one of them, and Mr. Rose played two brilliant organ solos by Widor and Henry Smart with admirable skill and taste. A novelty was the recital of Baring Gould's "Building of San Sofia," with an organ accompaniment, introducing part of a movement from Mackenzie's "Dream of Jubal." The experiment was perfectly successful, for Mr. Fry possesses the art of so modulating his voice that the gap between music and speech is barely perceptible. Indeed, in an exquisite little Sextain by H. Rose, his inflections might have been taken down in musical notation, if a system of shorthand had been available.

The Leeds Express says: "Mr. George Tetley's retirement from the post of Honorary Organist and Director of the Choir at St. John the Evangelist's, Leeds, will be a serious loss to the church he has served in these capacities for twenty-two years past. Mr. Tetley was an enthusiast in his work, as all well know who are acquainted with the musical services at St. John's and the high state of efficiency to which he has brought the choir. It was through Mr. Tetley that St. John's enjoyed the distinction of being the first church in the North of England to give a Lenten service of Bach's 'Passion Music,' the version according to St. John being given in 1876, with band and augmented choir, under the joint-direction of Mr. E. O. Dykes and Mr. Tetley. It will be no easy matter to replace the ripe judgment, wide experience, and musical enthusiasm and zeal of Mr. Tetley."

We are informed that arrangements are in progress for the early formation of a Joint-Stock Company, Limited, to acquire the British Patents in respect of Mr. Hope Jones's Electro-Pneumatic Action for Organs. There is a probability that Mr. Thomas Threlfall (Chairman of the Committee of Management of the Royal Academy of Music) will accept the office of Chairman of the Board of Directors, and that the proposed Company has no intention of becoming organ builders or entering into competition with the trade; their operations will be limited to the manufacture and sale of the "Hope Jones" Electro-Pneumatic Action, and the granting of licenses to manufacture or use the same on terms likely to secure the co-operation of representative firms. A small two-manual organ, showing the advantages of the invention, will be erected with the least possible delay in the London office of the Company.

Miss Nellie Harston gave a so-called "grand" evening Concert at the Princes' Hall on the 5th ult. The programme commenced with a Sonata in G minor by a Scandinavian composer named Sjögren, which proved to be a concise and agreeable if not remarkably original work, written apparently under the influence of Grieg. It was played by the Concert-giver and Mr. F. Weist Hill, the latter a very youthful violinist, eldest son of the late principal of the Guildhall School of Music. Mr. Hill displayed much promise as an executant and he is now having the advantage of tuition under Mr. Ysaÿe at Brussels. Miss Harston, who is a pianist of some ability, was heard to more or less advantage in pieces by Grieg, Chopin, Moszkowski, and Liszt, and songs were contributed with success by Miss Minnie Fischer and Miss Marian McKenzie.

Mr. J. T. Hutchinson's Concert at Princes' Hall, on March 29, comprised some pleasing solo contributions interspersed by part-songs—among them Barnby's "Sweet and low"—given with spirit and taste by the Holborn Choral Society. Miss Kate Cove specially distinguished herself by neat performances of the Jewel Song from "Faust" and "Should he upbraid," and Miss Alice Farren created a favourable impression in Gounod's "O that we two were maying" and in Goring Thomas's "A summer night." Mr. Hutchinson's pieces were Gounod's "The Valley" and Sullivan's "I would I were a king." Mr. Charles Fry recited with much judgment the scene between Touchstone, Audrey, and William from "As you like it," and subsequently evoked still heartier laughter by his delivery of "The Village Choir" and "Only a Pin."

Signor Tosti successfully exerted himself at Princes' Hall, on March 30, on behalf of St. Joseph's Schools attached to the Convent of Mercy at Cadogan Street, Chelsea. Mr. Santley, Mr. Ben Davies, and other popular vocalists appeared, and Señor Arbos and the Sisters Cerasoli gave violin and pianoforte pieces respectively. Augmented interest was imparted to Mr. Henry Irving's dramatic delivery of Hood's "Dream of Eugene Aram," by reason of the musical accompaniment composed by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie and played by him on the pianoforte. Thoroughly in keeping with the powerful poem, these expressive strains were never so prominent as to distract attention from the reciter. Dr. Mackenzie's music completely accomplished the end in view—namely, assistance to the imagination of the hearer.

The annual Concert of the Violin Classes at the Birkbeck Institution, given under the direction of Mr. T. E. Gatehouse on the 5th ult., again showed an advance on the previous efforts of the students, their attack being good, a particularly satisfactory specimen of playing being the popular Intermezzo from Mascagni's opera. The vocalists who assisted were Miss Mary Hay, who has an excellent voice and style, and Mr. R. E. Miles. It is needless to say that the popular director of the classes, Mr. T. E. Gatehouse, was heard in several violin solos with delight, and applauded enthusiastically, especially after Hauser's Hungarian Rhapsody. Humorous songs were contributed by Mr. James Kift and recitations by Mr. Charles Fry. Miss Cassie Biddell and Mrs. Fitzhenry accompanied.

The choir of the Bow and Bromley Institute gave a capital performance of Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen" on March 26, Beethoven's Choral Fantasia and a miscellaneous selection forming the second part of the programme. There was a full orchestra and Mrs. W. G. McNaught played the solo part in the Fantasia, whilst Mr. W. G. McNaught conducted with his usual skill. An interesting début was that of Miss Jessie Kennedy (youngest daughter of the late David Kennedy, the well-known Scottish singer), who showed herself imbued with the best traditions of that musical family. Mr. Arthur Barlow also made a successful appearance, while Miss Naomi Hardy and Mr. William White likewise contributed to a very successful Concert.

THE Marlborough College Orchestral Society brought a crowded audience to St. George's Hall for the cause of charity on March 31, when, with professional assistance in the wind department, the members gave a creditable performance of the "Egmont" Overture and the "Unfinished" Symphony of Schubert, among other pieces. Tact was also shown in the execution of the orchestral portion of Hiller's Pianoforte Concerto in F minor, the solo passages of which were played in a telling manner by Mr. W. T. Bambridge. Mr. Robert Berndt conducted with decision. Between the parts Mr. Henry Irving held attention by his masterly recitation of Sir Edwin Arnold's poem "The Feast of Belshazzar."

AT the Royal Academy of Music, on Monday, the 11th ult., Mrs. Curwen read a paper before the National Society of Professional Musicians' Branch, on "The Training of Music Teachers." She founded her remarks on the Blue Book lately issued, and urged that a music teacher, besides artistic power and theoretical knowledge, should understand the art of teaching, by which she meant strengthening the observing and acquiring faculties. Teachers in other subjects were now generally trained, and the same plan should be pursued in music. The chairman, Mr. Ridley Prentice, warmly supported Mrs. Curwen's view, and Mr. W. H. Cummings, Dr. Vincent, and Mr. W. G. McNaught also spoke.

A VERY interesting Concert was given, on the 9th ult., at the Grocers' Company School, Hackney Downs, by the boys of that Institution, forming a choir of some 150 voices, under the able and zealous direction of Mr. Ernest Newton. The work performed on this occasion by the youthful choristers, with the indispensable assistance of adult voices, was Sullivan's "The Prodigal Son," which was given, on the whole, in a very satisfactory manner, Messrs. Pierpoint and Beaumont taking part in the rendering of the solo numbers. Mr. Newton may be heartily congratulated upon the success of his efforts in a highly meritorious cause.

AT St. John-at-Hackney Grammar School, on the 12th ult., took place the first performance of a sacred Cantata, "The Good Samaritan," by W. M. Wait. A short selection of sacred songs and anthems, bearing particularly upon child life and the relief of suffering, was also given. The school choir was assisted by Mrs. Dudley Mainland, Miss Helen Saunders, Mr. G. Ward, and Mr. J. H. Curtis; and Mr. W. M. Wait (Choirmaster of the School) directed the Concert, the proceeds of which have been given to the North-Eastern Hospital for Children and the Invalid Children's Aid Society.

A SUCCESSFUL performance of Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" was given at Christ Church, Beckenham, on Thursday evening, March 31. The solo was entrusted to Master Frank Brown (one of Mr. Dutton's boys), who gave satisfaction, and the choir well supported him by a duly expressive and intelligent rendering of the choral parts in the work. Mr. F. W. Partridge, Organist of the Church, conducted, while his pupil, Mr. H. Collingwood, played the accompaniments with skill and effect.

MOZART'S "Requiem Mass" and Handel's "Messiah" have been given during the past month at St. John's, Waterloo Road, on the 3rd and 13th ult. respectively; the solos being contributed by Miss Gertrude Izard, Madame Bella Monte, Miss Florence Green, Miss Mary Tunnicliffe, Mr. J. Gostick, and Mr. Fred. Winton; the chorus by the choir of the Church, Mr. B. Jackson at the organ, Mr. S. S. Martyn and Mr. Henry J. B. Dart conducting. The services were in each case largely attended.

ON Monday, the 11th ult., the Emmanuel Choral Society sang selections from "The Messiah" and Stainer's "Crucifixion" at Emmanuel Church, Kennington Road. The soloists were Miss E. Faull, Mr. Verney, Mr. G. Aylmer, and Messrs. A. and J. Mackay, W. Jones, and A. Rushworth. The chorus, under the direction of the Conductor, Mr. G. Aylmer, sang capitally, and Mr. Vaughan rendered efficient aid at the organ.

THE Arcadian Musical Society (Hammersmith) gave a performance of Stainer's "Crucifixion" on the 8th ult., in the Mission Hall of St. Clement's Church, City Road. The solos were excellently rendered by Messrs. C. E. Coates, W. L. Newcome, and H. P. Attwater, whilst the choruses showed the result of careful training by the Conductor, Mr. Berthold Tours, jun. Mrs. Attwater was an efficient accompanist.

PERFORMANCES of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" were given on March 29 by the Kyrle Choir, at St. Gabriel's, Newington Butts, when the soloists were Miss Kate Cherry, Miss Ellen Cooper, Mr. Ager Grover, and Mr. Morgan Wilkinson; and on the 6th ult. at the Presbyterian Church, Hackney Downs; soloists: Mrs. Stanesby, Miss Edith Aldridge, Mr. Ager Grover, and Mr. James Blackney. Both performances were conducted by Mr. F. A. W. Docker.

GAUL'S "Holy City" was rendered by an augmented choir at Barry Road Congregational Church, Dulwich, on the 7th ult., under the direction of Mr. J. W. Lewis, Organist of the Church. The principal soloists were Miss Winifred Drake, Mrs. W. H. Hunnex, Mr. C. W. Link, and Mr. Frank Swinford. Mr. H. J. Reeves and Mr. F. W. A. Drake presided at the organ and pianoforte respectively.

THE Organ Recital at the Bow and Bromley Institute, on the 16th ult., was given by Mr. Edward d'Evry, who played a judicious selection of pieces which were favourably received. The Recital was interspersed with solos, glees, &c., by the Westminster Singers, an excellent quartet of vocalists from Westminster Abbey (under the direction of Mr. Harper Kearton), whose efforts were much appreciated by the audience.

A PERFORMANCE of Haydn's "Creation" was given at the Public Hall, Peckham, on March 21, by the Peckham Philharmonic Society, with a full band and chorus of 150. The solos were effectively rendered by Miss Winifred Drake, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Egbert Roberts. Mr. S. J. Waud was leader of the band, Mr. F. W. A. Drake presided at the organ, and Mr. J. Haydn Waud conducted.

THE annual performance of "The Messiah" was given by a full band and chorus of 200 at Oakley Place Wesleyan Chapel on Good Friday. The solo parts were admirably sustained by Miss Winifred Drake, Miss Maude Hayter, Mr. Charles Strong, and Mr. Thomas Kempton. Mr. John England conducted, Mr. G. D. Blyth was leader of the band, and Mr. C. J. Lillywhite presided at the organ.

AN excellent performance of Stainer's "Crucifixion" was given at Chigwell Church on the 11th ult., under the able direction of Mr. H. Riding. The choir, assisted by ladies from neighbouring villages, numbered ninety-six voices. The soloists were Messrs. H. Clinch, T. Kempton, G. Simmons, and W. Lebbon. Mr. E. Cuthbert Nunn presided at the organ with skill and judgment.

A LARGE congregation attended All Saints' Church, South Lambeth, on the 19th ult., when Stainer's "Crucifixion" was performed by the choir, under the direction of Mr. Walter Attersoll, with Mr. G. A. Higgs at the organ. The tenor and bass solos were taken by Mr. Albon Nash and Mr. Charles Rolfe.

A TROMBONE and Organ Recital was given at St. George's Church, Perry Hill, on the 10th ult., by Mr. R. H. Booth and Mr. George Budd. Master Miller and Mr. Gould sang vocal solos by Gounod and Faure, and the instrumental pieces were drawn from Handel, Schubert, Sullivan, Stainer, &c.

THE first part of Gounod's "Redemption" was sung at St. Michael and All Angels', Paddington, on the 6th and 13th ult. The choir gave an excellent rendering of the work, under the direction of Mr. Edmund Rogers, Organist and Choirmaster of the Church. The soloists were Master Barrett and Messrs. Pollard, McBeath, Russell, and Kebble.

STAINER'S "Crucifixion" was again well rendered by the choir of St. Stephen's, Avenue Road, on the 8th ult. The solos were given with excellent effect by Messrs. Lawrence Fryer, of St. Paul's Cathedral, and Stanley Smith, of St. Andrew's, Wells Street. Mr. C. Healey was at the organ, and Mr. W. A. Philpott conducted.

ON the 6th ult. Stainer's "Crucifixion" was given at St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Stonebridge, under the direction of the Organist of the Church, Mr. J. L. Phillips.

At the Royal College of Music on Saturday, the 9th ult., the Competition took place for the "Challen" Pianoforte Prize (a Challen upright pianoforte), offered by Messrs. Challen and Son for the best pianoforte player of the year. The award was adjudged to Mr. William J. Spencer.

On the 21st ult., at St. Mary's Parish Hall, Lewisham, Mr. R. E. Miles was presented with a purse of £25 by the clergy, choir, church officials, and a few friends in the congregation of St. Mark's, Lewisham, he having completed ten years as Choirmaster of that Church.

REVIEWS.

Symphony (No. 4) in G major (Op. 88). By Antonín Dvorák. Full Score. The same, arranged as a Pianoforte Duet (four hands), by the Composer.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

This is the work which was brought to a first hearing in England at the Philharmonic Concert of April 24, 1890, its second performance (at a Richter Concert) taking place two months later. We trust that its publication in the two forms here indicated will lead to its repetition at no distant date, and its subsequent inclusion among the stock pieces at English orchestral concerts; the score will assuredly be welcomed by conductors and students of orchestration generally, and the pianoforte duet may be expected to win so many friends that appreciative audiences will be easily found whenever the work is given in its original form. The performances of Dvorák's four Symphonies in this country have not been numerous enough to permit a final judgment on their relative merits; but as far as present knowledge extends, the opinion that Dvorák's latest Symphony is also his best seems pretty general among competent judges. We are, however, in no hurry for an ultimate verdict upon this point, being quite content to feast on the beauties of Dvorák's No. 4 without instituting comparisons which, in addition to being odious, involve a lot of trouble. These beauties are so many and of such various kinds that we can make no attempt to describe them in detail here. It must suffice to say that the four movements of which the work consists absolutely teem with melody of the most captivating and haunting kind and that this is enhanced by harmonic treatment of the greatest possible richness and ingenuity. Thus much is evident from the pianoforte arrangement; the score reveals even more than the usual command of orchestral resource and knowledge of effect which we have learnt to expect from this composer. To students of Musical Form the first movement of this Symphony offers an interesting study, being based on four principal subjects instead of the usual two. These are presented in pairs—i.e., two "first" and two "second" subjects. It may be mentioned that Dvorák has confessed he had a programme in his mind while composing this Symphony; but what that programme was he declines to divulge. This, however, does not matter in the least—the work is clear as noon-day.

The Inchcape Rock. Ballad. By Robert Southey. Set to music for chorus and orchestra by J. Frederick Bridge.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

In setting Southey's well-known ballad Professor Bridge has availed himself, with marked success, of the fine opportunities for writing dramatic, descriptive, and picturesque music which the subject offers, and has produced a little work which possesses every necessary qualification to rank as a great favourite with choral societies. It presents no difficulties which a fairly competent choir could not surmount. On the other hand, it is not without a passage here and there demanding the singers' best efforts for its realisation, and for that very reason should be all the more attractive. Professor Bridge has carefully avoided anything in the way of elaboration that would delay the "action," and has set the words in a straightforward, bold, and pointed manner, without a trace of diffuseness, and, generally, to melodic phrases at once vocal and dramatically appropriate. Altogether the music has a breezy freshness about it and may be said to "smell of the sea." Beginning Allegretto tranquillo in A minor, with a sombre and suggestive theme in the orchestra and quiet, sustained phrases for the chorus, the composer portrays in the first half-dozen pages the impressive monotony of the calm sea by simple yet withal very effective means. The "descriptive" passage in which the tenors and basses imitate the sound of the Bell (softly accentuated dotted minims on the second beat of the bar), and the suave phrase, slightly Scotch in character, which does duty for the Abbot motive, deserve mention. A change of tempo and key introduces a swinging, joyous subject eminently suggestive of "the cheering power of Spring." From here the music grows in interest. The lowering of the boat, the sinking of the bell, &c., are illustrated by graphic, even realistic, but always interesting and appropriate music and we quickly reach the climax where the ship strikes the rock. The agonised cry, "It is the Inchcape Rock," is uttered ff in close imitation by the different parts of the chorus to a short dire-sounding exclamatory phrase, afterwards used as the Doom motive, to which the interval of an augmented fourth gives poignancy. The sinking of the ship is described in a stormy, strident passage, full of dash and power, and thence the music continues its course to an impressive end, the orchestra, after the voices are silent, pointing the moral, as it were, by thrice giving out the Doom motive, the first and second time with its fullest power, and finally pp.

The Law of Musical and Dramatic Copyright. By E. Cutler, Q.C., T. E. Smith, and F. E. Weatherly. Revised Edition. [Cassell and Co.]

The additions which have been made to this work since its first appearance will undoubtedly add to its usefulness. Amongst these we note appendices setting forth the recent alterations in the law of Copyright in the United States, the text of the American Statute of 1891, the argument in support of the view that registration by a foreigner suing in our Courts is still necessary, and the various periods during which Copyright subsists in foreign countries. Nor have the recent decisions of the Courts upon several vexed questions been left out of account. Cases upon Registration under the English and International Copyright Acts, as well as upon the retrospective operation of the latest International Copyright Act, are assigned their proper places. In a work of such small dimensions as this it would obviously be impracticable to quote in extenso all the cases and all the statutes relating to the subject discussed. On the whole a wise selection appears to have been made, and the principles involved are generally stated with accuracy. It may be questioned, however, whether it be correct to say that "proprietors and assignees of musical compositions may sue for unlawful performance without previous registration" (p. 48). No doubt, under Section 24 of the Statute of William IV., the proprietor of a "dramatic piece" may sue without registration, and by the preamble of that Statute "dramatic piece" is to be taken to include "musical entertainment"; but as the Master of the Rolls pointed out in Wall v. Taylor (11 Q.B.D., 102), "musical entertainment" means the whole concert or performance and not detached portions of it—i.e., not the separate musical compositions forming the programme of a concert. Indeed, the authors themselves seem to have subsequently placed this construction on the Statute, for at p. 162 we read: "According to the best opinion, the necessity for registration before suing applies to performance of a musical composition." We regret that we cannot join in the eulogium bestowed upon the Berne Convention. This is not the place to point out its many discrepancies. Suffice it to say that, far from hailing it with "admiration" and "welcome," we think it too lenient to describe it, in the words of the learned author of another work on Copyright, as framed in language of diplomatic vagueness rather than in that of legal precision.

Novello's Octavo Anthems, Nos. 375—383.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

The following numbers have recently been added to this useful series:—No. 375, "Let God arise," by T. Tallis Trimnell, is a very spirited composition, written with breadth and freedom, but church-like and not difficult. Solo voices are not essential. No. 376, "Hide not Thy face," by Kellow

J. Pye, is quiet, brief, and devotional, in every respect suitable for the coming Lenten season. No. 377, "Have mercy upon me," by the same composer, is an arrangement of Bach's Fugue in E, from the second set of "Das Wohltemperirte Clavier." The next of the series, "Bless the Lord," by Matthew Kingston, is a longer and more elaborate composition, but broad and dignified in character, and suitable for choir festivals or any occasion of public or local rejoicing. No. 379, "I was glad," by T. Tallis Trimnell, is described as a full Anthem, but a tenor soloist is required. It is written in a quiet church-like manner, and the pianissimo close is extremely effective. No. 380, "O perfect Love," by Joseph Barnby, is a beautiful though unpretentious and hymn-like Wedding Anthem (which was written for the marriage of the Duke and Duchess of Fife), the words, by Dora Blomfield, being equally impressive. No. 381, "Praise the Lord," by J. W. Elliott, is short, but bright and distinguished for its bold though musicianly harmonic progressions. No. 382, "Hallelujah," by Oliver King, is a Christmas Anthem for four voices, without soloists, the style being a happy combination of church-like dignity and modern feeling. No. 383, "Give unto the Lord," by Horatio W. Parker, is a remarkably effective though not difficult Anthem, full of rich harmonies, some of which suggest the idea that the composer must be familiar with modern French music.

Eton Songs. Written by Arthur Campbell Ainger. Set to music by Joseph Barnby. Illustrated by Herbert Marshall.
[The Leadenhall Press; Novello, Ewer and Co.; Simpkin, Marshall and Co.]

It is to be hoped that the publication of this handsome volume will stimulate further efforts in the same direction. The student-songs of the Germans occupy a prominent place in the rich store of that country's Volkslieder, while here, as yet, the song of the student is too often synonymous with the song of the music hall. It is only necessary to point to the magnificent "Academic" Overture of Brahms, the thematic material of which is entirely drawn from well-known German student-songs, in illustration of the difference in this respect between the two countries. Such a work would have been impossible to an English composer, for lack of material. Wherefore let all—whether Etonians or not—be grateful to those who, giving us these "Eton Songs," have contributed their mite towards the removal of so grave a reproach. There are two four-part secular songs, "Carmen Etonense" (already published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co.) and "Victoria, our Queen," an Eton Jubilee Song; two hymns—one for "Founders' Day" and another "For Dedication of Lower Chapel"; and five songs for a single voice, with unison chorus, respectively entitled "The Silver Thames," "Cricket is King," "St. Andrew's Day," "A Song of Fives," and "Vale." The end in view being the production of songs easy to learn and difficult to forget, it is obvious that simplicity and directness were essential requirements. We venture to think that in both respects the work of Mr. Ainger and Mr. Barnby will meet approval. Of the illustrations, as of the book generally, regarded as a bait to the bibliophile, it is sufficient to say that nothing could be in better taste. No less than thirty-two of the most familiar views, besides a sketch of Edward Powell, "for more than forty years a faithful servant of Eton," are given. Among the most beautiful of these studies in "black and white" may be named the views of Boveney Lock, of Windsor Castle, and of the interior of the Chapel. The volume is, by special permission, dedicated to Her Majesty the Queen.

My soul truly waiteth (Psalm 62). For soli, chorus, and organ, or orchestra. Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in F. For men's voices. By Gerard Cobb.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

Mr. Cobb has selected the Prayer Book version of the Psalm, and his setting is in five numbers. It is composed for the Festival of the North-Eastern Choir Association, which is to be held at Ripon in July next. As the work is too long for ordinary purposes the author suggests that it may be divided into two separate anthems, the first ending with the seventh verse. It opens with a broad, dignified chorus in F, changing to an Allegro in A minor, 3-4 time, at the words "How long will ye imagine mischief." This section is declamatory and extremely effective. The return to the style of the opening chorus is well managed and with this the first part of the Psalm ends. No. 3, "O put your trust," is a soprano solo in B flat, brief, but flowing and tuneful, with a somewhat florid accompaniment. To this succeeds a choral duet for tenors and basses, "O trust not in wrong," in E flat, 6-4 measure. The final chorus, "God spake once," opens fugally in G minor, but after a while there is a transition to the original key and the Psalm comes to a very quiet close with a passage for tenor solo and a reprise of the initial phrase of the opening chorus. If not particularly festive in character, Mr. Cobb's work is exceedingly well written and, generally speaking, genial and unlaboured. In the setting of the evening Canticles the voices are divided into three parts, one tenor and two basses. The music presents no particular characteristics on which to dwell, but it is at once church-like and unpretentious.

Original Compositions for the Organ, Nos. 144-146.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

The first of these numbers consists of an Allegretto Pastorale in B flat, by Herbert Wareing, a piece in which the composer ignores the stereotyped 6-8 measure generally thought indispensable in music of a pastoral character, and writes in 4-4 measure. He further shows his indifference to conventionality by a more liberal employment of chromatic chords and extraneous modulations than is usual with English composers of organ music. The effect of his sketch would much depend upon the skill of the executant in matters of registration, &c., though it presents no difficulties of a technical nature. Mr. Alfred Alexander's Sonata in D minor (No. 145) is, of course, a work of a more elaborate and ambitious nature. The first movement, though not strictly symphonic in respect of form, is fairly symmetrical and wholly consistent in the use made of the subject-matter. The next section is an expressive Adagio in B flat, written with much freedom as regards modulations and the use of modern chords, but always musicianly and organ-like in tone. The Finale is a four-part fugue worked out at considerable length and with much ingenuity. The close in the major is extremely effective, and the Sonata generally may be highly commended for its musicianly and pleasing qualities. No. 146 is a March in C, by H. Elliot Button, bright and festive in character, but quite easy. The Trio, in A flat, is especially light and tuneful.

A Record of the Cambridge Centenary Commemoration on December 4 and 5, 1891, of Wolfgang Amadé Mozart. Edited by Sedley Taylor, M.A., Senior Vice-President of the Cambridge University Musical Society.
[Macmillan and Co.]

The contents of this elegant little volume are—firstly, a Lecture on the life of Mozart, delivered at the Alexandra Hall by Mr. Sedley Taylor, into the fifty pages of which he has skilfully managed to compress the 1,500 of Otto Jahn; secondly, the analytical programme of sacred music performed in the Chapel of Trinity College; thirdly, that of the secular music given in the Hall of Gonville and Caius College. There is also a Minuet composed by Mozart in his fifth year. Altogether a most interesting little volume.

A Violin Method. By Otto Peiniger. (Robert Cocks' Modern Methods, No. 2.) [Robert Cocks and Co.]

This is essentially an instruction book of to-day. Although, as the author himself says in his preface, it is hardly possible in compiling a guide for the study of the violin to insert anything new; nevertheless, in this book will be found many old friends with new faces, for the rudiments of this, the most difficult of all instruments, have been set down in a clear and comprehensive manner. The object of the author appears to be to supply a guide book for teachers as well as an instruction book for those who are attempting to teach themselves; a separate violin part is provided, and there is a well-devised list of works for study given at the end of the book. The method does not offer any new theory to assist to remove the difficulties of the instrument, but the object of the author seems rather to endeavour to make the rules plain and easily comprehended. To effect this the various directions are couched in the form of phraseology known as colloquial, and by so doing the only fault possible to discover has been committed. As an adjunct to some other existing text-book the method will be found of the greatest value both to students and to teachers, and, moreover, those who are supposed to be sufficiently proficient to dispense with an instruction book will find many useful hints and interesting studies in Otto Peiniger's "Violin Method."

The Organ Works of J. S. Bach. Edited by J. F. Bridge and James Higgs. Book 10.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

This instalment of what may fairly be described as the most useful edition of Bach's organ works ever issued includes two rarely-played Preludes and Fugues in D minor (Dorian mode) and A minor, the renowned Passacaglia in C minor, and the majestic Fugue in the same key, the subject of which the composer took from Giovanni Legrenzi. As in the previous books, the prefatorial remarks of the editors are valuable, and the task of the performer will be considerably lightened by the clearness with which the work is indicated for either hand.

The Morning and Evening Service, together with the Holy Communion Office, in B flat. By Henry John King.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

Although this setting of the musical portion of the Liturgy is comparatively simple, being mostly in plain four-part harmony, it is varied in style, some portions being obviously founded on the Gregorian Tones, while others are modern alike in melody and harmony. The composer, however, justifies his eclecticism by writing equally well in the ancient and the late nineteenth century manner. His Service is throughout pleasing and musicianly and well within the means of ordinary choirs.

FOREIGN NOTES.

The Vienna Musical and Dramatic Exhibition will be opened on the 7th inst., and is to be closed, according to present arrangements, on October 9. The inauguration ceremony will be performed in the "Tonhalle" (the great hall specially constructed for concert performances) on the day in question, while in the evening a grand dramatic performance will be held in the Exhibition Theatre, in which all the principal Viennese actors will take part. During the present month the German Theatre at Berlin, the National Theatre of Pesth, and the Comédie Française will give performances at this theatre. In June the Czech Opera, Madame Rejane, of the Paris Variétés, and director Pollini, with the "Tragedy of Man," will be seen. In July ballets, operettas, and farces will be given by companies from different countries. In August a French operetta company will appear first, and the Brixlegg peasants will play "Andras Hofer." In September a grand operatic season will begin, with MM. Sonzogno and Mascagni as manager and conductor respectively.

Under the auspices of the committee of the forthcoming Vienna Exhibition, an "Album of living Viennese masters" is to be published, which is likely to prove not the least interesting souvenir of the event to musical visitors of the Austrian capital. Among the noted musicians who will contribute original compositions to the volume, we notice the names of Brahms, Bruckner, Brüll, Goldmark, Heuberger, Julius Zellner, as well as Johann Strauss, Suppé, and Millöcker.

It is stated upon trustworthy authority that Verdi's new opera "Falstaff" will be brought out in January or February next at La Scala of Milan, and will soon after also be produced at Rome. M. Maurel is to create the titular part, and the important première having been at length brought within measurable distance is looked forward to with intense interest in Italian musical circles. A correspondent of a London paper relates that the veteran Maëstro, in a recent conversation with some intimate friends, said he had written "Falstaff" because Boïto had succeeded in furnishing him with a libretto full of the spirit of real fun; a libretto which was "his ideal of the musical comedy as he himself understood it." Writing this opera, he declared, had been one of the most amusing things of his life. He is also reported to have remarked that he felt it in him to write yet one or two more serious works but for the material trouble of putting down so many thousand notes on paper!

The report of Signor Mascagni having completed the score of his new Opera, "I Rantzau," is being confirmed in Italian papers. The work is to be brought out at the Pagliano Theatre, Florence, and the principal parts are to be created by Signor Terrazini and Signor de Lucia.

Mascagni's opera "L'Amico Fritz" was brought out at the Berlin Royal Opera on March 19, with a German translation of the libretto, and was very cordially received. The performance was conducted by Herr Felix Weingartner, the leading parts being interpreted by Herren Sylva (Fritz) and Betz (Rabbi), Mesdames Pierson (Suzel) and Rothhauser (Joseph). Herr Otto Lessmann, the able editor of the Berlin Allgemeine Musik-Zeitung, in an interesting notice of the performance, considers the new work, while by no means free from certain crudities and anomalies, to be, nevertheless, a distinct advance upon the young Maëstro's "Cavalleria Rusticana." Among the most effective numbers of the opera, the critic signalises the song of Suzel presenting the violets, the violin solo and song of the gipsy Joseph, and the march of the children, in the first act; the duet between Suzel and Fritz under the cherry tree, and the scene between the former and the Rabbi in the second; and the song of the gipsy and the impassioned air of Fritz, in the third act. The Intermezzo sinfonico preceding the third act had to be repeated, Count Hochberg, the director of the Berlin Opera, himself giving, from his box, the initiative for thus breaking the rules of the house, according to which all calls for repetition are to be strictly disregarded.

Herr Wilhelm Kienzl, whose opera "Heilmar der Narr" met with a very favourable reception on its recent first performance at the Munich Hof-Theater, has been appointed to the post of third Capellmeister at that Royal institution.

At the Krollsche-Theater, Berlin, several new operatic works by composers belonging to the younger generation of German musicians are to be brought out in the course of the summer season, amongst their number being "Margaritta," by E. Meyer-Hellmund, and "Der Schmied von Gretna Green," by C. Doebber, both in three acts; and a four-act opera "Alienor," by Hubay. Angelo Neumann will also give a series of performances, with the personnel of the Prague Opera, during the months of June and July next in the German capital, his repertory including (for the first time here) the scenic representation of Liszt's oratorio "St. Elizabeth."

According to some interesting statistics concerning the musical activity of Vienna, the number of the more important concerts given in that capital during the past six months was 158, the chief performers being mostly foreigners, some of world-wide reputation. The performers represented every country, from America to Roumania. Many of the male and female artists came to Vienna, not so much to make money as to acquire fame by winning the approval of the critics and audiences of the capital.

The second Westphalian Music-festival is announced to take place on the 21st and 22nd inst., at Dortmund, the programme including the following numbers: Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, a symphonic poem by Liszt, Haydn's "Creation," Bach's Cantata "Lobet Gott in seinen Reichen," and Brahms's "Schicksalslied." Dr. Joachim will play Bruch's third Violin Concerto. The festival will be conducted by Herr Janssen.

The ceremony of unveiling the Mendelssohn monument, in front of the Neue Gewandhaus in Leipzig, is to take place on the 22nd of this month. The proceedings will include the performance, at the new Gewandhaus, of the master's "Athalie."

M. Massenet's new opera "Werther" is to be first performed, after its recent successful première at Vienna, at the Weimar Hof-Theater, where the work is in active preparation. By a curious coincidence the representative here of the part of the hero will be Herr Gilssen, alias Buff, a grand-nephew of Charlotte Buff, the original of Goethe's Lotte, so that, as a waggish critic remarks, "the young fellow will be actually making love to his great-aunt on the stage before all the people."

The widow of Friedrich von Flotow, the composer of "Martha," has nearly completed a biography of her late husband, which will shortly be published. The lady, who some time since married a major in the Austrian Army, resides in Vienna.

A one-act mythological Idyl, "Aci e Galatea," by the Maëstro Redente Zardo, met with great success on its recent first performance at the Chiabrera Theatre of Savona.

An opera, "The Child of the Taborites," by the Czech composer, Karel Bendl, met with an enthusiastic reception on its first performance last month at the Bohemian National Theatre, of Prague. The work is also spoken of in terms of high praise in the ably conducted Bohemian music journal Dalibor.

The Vienna Philharmonic Society (Gesellschaft der Musik-Freunde) has opened the competition for the Beethoven Prize of that institution (a sum of 1,000 florins) to be awarded next year, for the composition of either an opera, oratorio, cantata, symphony, concerto, or sonata. Competitors of every nationality are admitted, but have to confine themselves to one work only, to be sent in not later than March 1, 1893.

At a pupils' Concert of the Leipzig Conservatorium, held on the 5th ult., the programme included an Overture entitled "Enoch Arden," written by a young American student of the institution, Mr. N. Svoing Hyatt, which attracted the attention of a critical audience and is spoken of in the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik as being a work full of the very highest promise.

The new opera "Hertha," by the young Swiss composer Franz Curti, recently brought out with conspicuous success at Riga, has been accepted for performance at the Royal Opera at Cassel.

A project has been set on foot in Frankfort-on-Main for the erection there of a monument to Arthur Schopenhauer, whose ethical and æsthetical tenets have exercised so marked an influence upon Richard Wagner and modern German musicians generally. Dr. Hans von Bülow will, it is stated, shortly give a special Concert at Frankfort in aid of the project in question.

An interesting relic has just been added to the collection of the Mozarteum, at Salzburg—viz., the watch presented to the master, when in his fifteenth year, by the Empress Maria Theresa, of Austria. This timepiece, which, apart from the historical and personal interest attaching to it, is of considerable intrinsic value, being studded with diamonds, was formerly in the possession of Herr Pfeffer, of Buda-Pesth, lately deceased, who bequeathed it to the Salzburg Institution.

The Stradivarius violin known as the "Jupiter," which has been successively in the possession of Viotti and of Rode, has just been purchased by the well-known violin virtuoso, Herr Hugo Heermann.

The "St. Matthew" Passion, by Heinrich Schütz, the forerunner of the great Bach as regards this form of musical art, was performed recently at the University Church of St. Paul's, Leipzig, with the co-operation of the Gewandhaus orchestra, under the direction of Herr Bruno Röthig.

The fiftieth performance of Wagner's "Lohengrin" was recorded last month at the Paris Grand Opéra.

Mr. Algernon Ashton's "Fandango" (No. 3 of "Spanish Dances") was played with much success at a recent Subscription Concert in Reichenberg (Bohemia) by Fräulein Marie Teimer, an able local pianist.

A correspondent informs us of an excellent performance, on the 2nd ult., of Bach's stupendous Mass in B minor, by the Gesangverein, of Barmen, in commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of that Institution. The performance was conducted by Herr Anton Krause, the highly meritorious Barmen musik-director, and for many years past the esteemed Conductor of the Gesangverein.

An opera, entitled "Isora di Provenza," by Signor Mancinelli, was brought out on the 22nd ult., at the Hamburg Stadt-Theater, and met with a highly favourable reception, the composer, who was present, being called before the curtain several times. The work had already been performed some years since, both at Bologna and at Naples, but has been considerably retouched by its composer. The libretto, from the pen of Signor Zanardini, is founded upon Victor Hugo's "Légende des Siècles."

Anton Rubinstein has completed the score of his new Biblical drama "Moses," the libretto of which is from the pen of Hermann Mosenthal, the well-known German dramatic author. The work is divided into eight parts or tableaux, illustrative of the career, from the cradle to the grave, of the great leader of the Israelites, and will occupy two evenings in performance. The pianist-composer took part both as conductor and performer in the Leipzig Gewandhaus Concert of March 24, which was entirely devoted to compositions from his pen. He was received with unbounded enthusiasm by a crowded audience.

The establishment of an Academy of Music for the Blind is projected at Königsberg, a committee having been formed for the purpose of promoting this most laudable scheme.

The annual meeting of the Allgemeine Deutsche Musik-verein is announced to take place from September 16 to 18 next, at Vienna.

A new sacred Oratorio, "Christus der Auferstandene," composed by Herr Gustav Schreck, the book compiled from Scriptural and other sources by the composer's wife, created a highly favourable impression upon its recent first performance at the Leipzig Gewandhaus.

Hans Sommer's opera "Loreley," successfully brought out recently at Brunswick, is to be performed also at the Weimar Hof-Theater, under the direction of Herr Richard Strauss, during the present month.

Mr. Eduard Zeldenrust, the gifted young pianist, residing in London, has recently met with a most flattering reception in Concert performances both at Berlin and at Amsterdam. The artist will return to the German capital in November next, in order to take part, by special request, in a Concert to be given by the Singakademie, under the direction of Herr Siegfried Ochs.

The centenary of the composition, by Rouget de l'Isle, of the "Marseillaise" was celebrated on the 24th ult. in Choisy-le-Roi, the composer's native town, by a grand performance of the stirring national hymn on the part of a combination of military bands, the members of several choral societies, and a number of school children, under the direction of M. Wettge.

A committee of experts, including a number of eminent French authors, composers, and executive artists, presided over by M. Bourgeois, has been appointed by the French government to enquire into the working of the existing regulations at the Paris Conservatoire, and to suggest such alterations or modifications as may be deemed advisable.

It is stated that Count Hochberg, the director of the Berlin Opera, has acquired the right of first production in Germany of Bizet's opera "Djamileh," a one-act opera, performed in Paris in 1872, but soon overshadowed by the immense success of "Carmen."

A new operetta, "La Femme de Narcisse," by M. Varney, was brought out on the 18th ult. at the Renaissance Theatre, of Paris, with brilliant success. The subject of the libretto is a lively one, and the music wedded thereto is described as full of melody, sprightliness, and grace.

M. Alphonse Duvernoy's opera "Sardanapale," some fragments of which only had been produced some ten years ago in Paris, at one of M. Lamoureux's Concerts, was brought out last month, at the Grand Théâtre of Liège, with marked success. A number of professional musicians and amateurs had journeyed over from Paris to witness the interesting première.

Miss Florence Menk-Meyer, an Australian pianist and composer, who appeared in London a few years ago, has given Concerts in Paris during the past month with considerable success.

At the Théâtre de la Monnaie, of Brussels, Verdi's early opera "Jerusalem" (first produced in 1847, at Paris) was revived last month with, however, but moderate success. At the same house M. Noël Desjoyeaux's lyrical drama "Gyptis," already performed on the provincial stages of Rouen and Marseilles, was announced to be brought out during the past month.

M. Alexandre Guilmant, the eminent French organist, gave the first of his annual Organ Concerts of the season at the Paris Trocadéro on the 13th ult., before a numerous audience. The artist played, amongst other solo pieces, a Toccata and Fugue by Sebastian Bach and a Concerto by Handel, composers whose instrumental works would, but for him, be comparatively unknown to French audiences. M. Guilmant had the co-operation of a small but efficient orchestra, conducted by M. Gabriel Marie.

Tschaikowski is reported to be busily engaged upon a new operatic work, "King René's Daughter," founded upon Henrik Hertz's drama of the same title.

The prize for the best string quartet offered last year by the St. Petersburg Society for the Cultivation of Chamber Music has been awarded to Herr M. Weber, of Wiesbaden, and the second to M. Sokolow, of St. Petersburg. The jury consisted of MM. Tschaikowski, Rymski-Korsakow, Napravnik, and La Roche.

A somewhat tardy celebration of the Rossini Centenary took place on the 8th ult., at the La Scala Theatre of Milan, the occasion being, however, rendered doubly memorable by the presence of Giuseppe Verdi, who, moreover, conducted a portion of the performance. The latter included the Overtures to "La Cambiale di Matrimonio" (Rossini's first operatic work) and "Guillaume Tell," the "Stabat Mater," and the prayer from "Mosè," the latter conducted by Verdi. On account partly of the presence of the idolized living one, the homage paid to the dead master took the form of enthusiastic demonstrations altogether beyond description on the part of the numerous audience. There was a choir of some 450 voices and an orchestra numbering 150 performers.

At the Teatro Pagliano, of Florence, a new opera, "Tilda," the libretto by Signor Zanardini, the music by the young Maëstro Cilea, was first produced last month and met with a highly successful reception.

A new four-act opera, entitled "Cimbelino," the libretto founded upon Shakespeare's play and written by Signor Golisciani, the music by M. Van Westerhout, a Naples musician with Wagnerian leanings, was brought out last month at the Teatro Argentina, of Rome, and was well received, although the press organs are greatly divided in their estimate of the merits of the new work.

Fifty-five national bands of Italy are to take part in a contest to be held at Genoa in connection with the forthcoming celebration of the Christopher Columbus Centenary.

Signor Arrigo Boïto, the composer of "Mefistofele," has been appointed, by the Italian Government, Inspector-General of the Conservatorios and other recognised music-teaching institutions of the kingdom, with a view to his reporting periodically upon the status of the technical instruction carried on at these establishments.

A commemorative tablet is to be attached, by order of the Municipal Council of Venice, to the old Theatre of San Mose in that town, where, at the age of eighteen, Rossini made his début as an operatic composer with "La Cambiale di Matrimonio."

A most successful first performance took place last month, at Turin, of a new operetta entitled "Studenti Parigini," by the Maëstro Settimo Sarroto.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE "VICAR OF BRAY."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—My letters in your December and January numbers seem to have elicited an amount of information that may be said to have solved the question raised in them. Mr. Kidson's learned letter in your February issue definitely settles these statements:—

(1.) That the air to the "Vicar of Bray" that I quoted from my MS. book in December was copied in all likelihood from a broadside, circa 1735-1740, and was printed before this by Walsh in his "Musical Miscellany" (1734) to the words of the "Vicar of Bray."

(2.) That this air is an old Scotch air known as "Bessy Bell," to be found at least as early as Thomson's "Orpheus Caledonius" (1725).

The present tune to the "Vicar of Bray" does not, so far as I know, appear in combination with the words before the Vocal Magazine (1778). Unless someone can find an earlier instance, it seems to me that my original conjecture that the tune given in your December Number was the original tune to the "Vicar of Bray" has been established.—

Your obedient Servant,
John H. Mee.

Kettel Hall, Oxford.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—I lately came across the following entry in Pepys's Diary, which I think may probably refer to an early version of the "Vicar of Bray":—

"June 16 [1668]. . . . Come to Newbury, and there dined; and musick; a song of the old courtier of Queene Elizabeth's, and how he was changed upon the coming in of the King, did please me mightily, and I did cause W. Hewer to write it out." It is perhaps extravagant to suggest that Hewer's transcription may be amongst the MSS. in the Pepysian Library (musical department?), but I think the possibility warrants a search therein.—Yours truly,

Arthur E. Grimshaw.

Leeds.

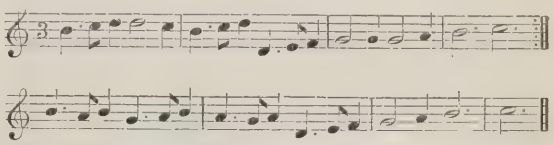
"BESSY BELL" AND A WELSH AIR.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—The air which "F. R. C." has sent, copied from the modern Collection of Welsh Songs, has perhaps some slight degree of resemblance to the air "Bessy Bell," but it bears a still greater to the popular tune now well known by its adaptation to Burns's song "The Deil's awa' wi' the Exciseman." In its original form this melody is first seen in Playford's "Dancing Master" in all the many editions from 1650-1 to 1716. In this it is called "The Hemp Dresser," with the additional titles, "The London Gentlewoman," or "The London Maid." The air is the same in all the editions, this following being copied from the third edition, 1665, and being nearly note for note as in the sixteenth, 1716—

"The London Gentlewoman; or, The Hemp Dresser." From the "Dancing Master," 1665.

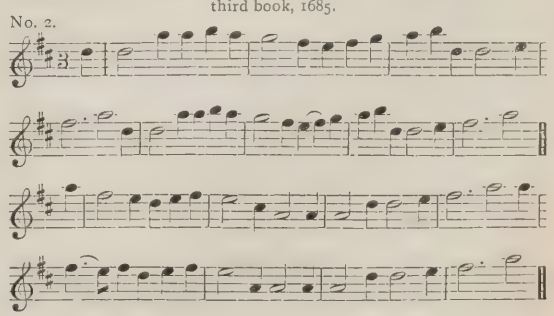
No. 1.



After the first editions of the "Dancing Master," Tom D'Urfey wrote a song to a better version of the air, and published it in "A Third Collection of New Songs, never printed before. The words by Mr. D'Urfey." London, folio, 1685. The song he wrote is at page 7, and is called "The Winchester Christening, the Sequel to the Winchester Wedding, a new Song set to the tune of a pretty country dance called The Hemp Dresser."

"The Winchester Christening" &c., from D'Urfey's third book, 1685.

No. 2.



The song is a poor parody of the delightful original by Sir John Suckling, "I'll tell thee, Dick, where I have been." D'Urfey's song commences—

> The sun had loosed his weary team
> And turned his steeds a-grazing, &c.

When "Wit and Mirth" was published in 1698, D'Urfey included in it the song and air; it is also found upon contemporary musical broadsides, and is in other early collections. It was used, as "Bessy Bell" was, in the "Beggar's Opera" (1728), set to the song "The first time at the looking glass," and after this time in many ballad operas and collections innumerable. Under the title "When Sol had loosed" it was published in Oswald's "Caledonian Pocket Companion," 8vo, cir. 1750-60. This, no doubt, led to its being considered a Scotch tune, and when Burns's song was put to it in the fourth volume of Johnson's "Scots Museum" (1792) its Scottish claim got a firmer hold.

Chappell gives a rather meagre account of the air, and strangely enough does not point out the poorness and the imperfect character of the tune as it appears in his "Dancing Master" both early and late, and the improvement in D'Urfey's setting, which is the one he himself mostly adheres to.

The Welsh setting published in the Songs of Wales has most probably been copied from one of Edward Jones's Welsh collections, published at the end of the last century and beginning of this. Both Jones and Parry included in their Gatherings airs which had been published years before as English or other airs, and this without any mention of the circumstance and evidence of their Welsh nationality. Such, among others, are "Of noble race was Shenkin" and "The dawning of the day," the latter being originally "Windsor Terrace."—Yours truly, 128, Burley Road, Leeds. Frank Kidson.

Correction.—In the February Number of The Musical Times, by a slip of the pen, I said that the song "Vicar of Bray" was in Vol. II. of the "Merry Musician." I should have written Vol. IV.

BROKEN MUSIC.

To the Editor of "The Musical Times."

Sir,—Bacon's "Sylva Sylvarum" (page 72, 1628 Edition) says:—

"All Concords and Discords of Musicke, are, (no doubt) Sympathies, and Antipathies of Sounds. And so (likewise) in that Musicke, which wee call Broken Musicke, or Consorte Musicke; Some Consorts of Instruments are sweeter than others; (A Thing not sufficiently yet observed:) As the Irish Harpe, and Base Viall agree well: The Recorder and Stringed Musicke agree well: Organs and the Voice agree well: &c. But the Virginalls and the Lute; Or the Welsh-Harpe, and the Irish Harpe; Or the Voice and Pipes alone, agree not so well; But for the Melioration of Musicke, there is yet much left (in this Point of Exquisite Consort,) to try and enquire."

It is probable that this (rather than the passage in the "Essay of Masques and Triumphs," quoted in the article by "W. H. C." in The Musical Times for April) is what Sir G. A. Macfarren referred to. Any way, the "Sylva Sylvarum" paragraph brings additional evidence as to the meaning of "broken music" as the phrase was used in Shakespeare's time. It is furthermore worthy of consideration whether Matthew Locke's "broken Consort" gives a perfect explanation of the phrase "broken music." The discourse of Henry and Katharine ("King Henry V.") loses nothing from the supposition that Katharine's speech was "broken" because it was partly English, partly French. This is quite in accordance with Sir G. A. Macfarren's explanation; but not so strictly in accordance with the Matthew Locke statement that music was broken when the number of parts was lessened.—Yours obediently, Andrew Deakin.

Soho Park, Birmingham, April 12, 1892.

[The quotation from "Sylva Sylvarum" proves that the author regarded "broken music" as synonymous with "consort music"—that is to say, concerted music for voices or instruments. Sir G. Macfarren could not have referred to this passage when he suggested that "broken music" meant the intermixture of strings and wind. Here several of the examples cited are for concerted strings alone.—W. H. C.]

ANCIENT AND MODERN FORMS OF HYMN-TUNES.

To the Editor of "The Musical Times."

Sir,—In reviewing Mr. Julian's "Dictionary of Hymnology" J. S. writes: "Musical purists also turn up from time to time who call aloud for the old English tunes to be restored to their original shape." Does not a previous paragraph suggest a very practical argument in favour of such restoration, at least in some cases? The paragraph I refer to is this: "All practical musicians have had some unpleasant experience of the difficulty of setting to music words . . . in such irregular rhythm," &c.

One of the commonest irregularities of rhythm is the frequent substitution of a trochee for an iambus at the beginning of an Iambic line. Unless the musical rhythm in such cases is changed from verse to verse there results a false accentuation of words, very painful to the ears of a verbal purist. In the old English tunes in Iambic metres each line begins and ends with a note of double length, with the result (whether intentional or not) that a false metre is hardly perceived by the ear. Not only does the obviously conventional form of the music fail to impress the idea of recurring accent upon the mind, but the extra length given to the first syllable of the trochee does really compensate for the loss of its proper position in the musical bar. Take, for instance, "St. Michael's," as printed in "Hymns Ancient and Modern" to Hymn 446, where we get such accents as "Bright shall the crown" and, much worse, "Bittér the cup," "Boundléss their joy." Sing the tune as originally written, with a semibreve instead of a minim at the beginning of each line, and the words regain almost entirely their proper form.—Yours faithfully, Christ. Thompson.

Pensax Vicarage, Tenbury, April 21, 1892.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.*

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music is always kept in stock, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

Andrew Armour.—(1). There are two Masses by Ambroise Thomas, a "Requiem" and a "Messe Solennelle," the latter of which is published at 20 francs net. We know of none entitled "St. Cecilia." (2). The "St. Cecilia" Mass by Ad. Adam is not published in complete vocal score, but four of the movements may be had separately. (3). The vocal score of Schumann's Mass in C minor costs 4s. 6d.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Airdrie.—An excellent performance of J. More Smieton's dramatic Cantata King Arthur was given by the Choral Union on March 30, under the direction of Mr. David Johnston. The soloists were Madame Isabel George, Mr. Bantock Pierpoint, and Mr. Charles Chilley. Mr. Harvey accompanied with customary skill. The chorus was in capital form and the audience very appreciative.

Andover.—An excellent rendering of Stainer's Crucifixion was given by a choir of about 100 voices at the Parish Church here in Passion Week, which attracted a very large congregation. The Rev. H. W. Carpenter, Minor Canon of Salisbury Cathedral, and the Rev. J. P. May, of Andover, sang the solos in excellent style; and the Quartet, "God so loved the world," sung unaccompanied, was well rendered. Mr. Chuter conducted and Mr. George H. Westbury, who had trained the chorus, played the organ accompaniments.

BARNSTAPLE.—On the 19th ult. the Easter Musical Festival Society gave excellent performances of Dr. Edwards's Motet Praise to the Holiest, Stanford's Battle of the Baltic, and a miscellaneous selection. The soloists were Miss Jessie Hotine, Mr. R. Groome, and Mr. C. J. Bath. Dr. Edwards conducted with his usual tact. The Motet, which, it will be remembered, was produced at the Hereford Festival last year, was much appreciated by the audience, whose hearty applause will no doubt stimulate the gifted composer to further efforts.

BISHOP AUCKLAND.—The last Concert of the season was given by the Auckland Musical Society on March 28, when Barnett's Ancient Mariner and Bridge's Inchcape Rock were given, with chorus and orchestra. The latter work was performed for the first time in the North of England, and made a marked impression, and it is but a reasonable expectation to indulge that so meritorious a composition will speedily be found in the répertoire of every choral society in the land. The composer has caught the spirit of Southey's poem, bringing vividly before our mind's eye the dare-devil pirate and his ill-fated vessel. The work, which is for chorus and orchestra (no solos), is by no means easy; yet the difficulties are just those which render the music interesting, and this has been largely increased by a judicious use of the Leitmotif. The artists engaged in Barnett's work were Miss Emily Davies, Miss Mary Reeve, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. M. Tufnail. Among the miscellaneous pieces was Schubert's "Death and the Maiden" string quartet, ably performed by Mr. J. H. Beers, Mr. Verdi Fawcett, Mr. J. H. Hill, and Mr. Sam Beers. The choir was augmented to twenty voices from the Rev. Canon Firth's Durham Choir. Mr. J. H. Beers was leader, Mr. Hornung and Mr. W. Wilkinson, accompanists, and Mr. Kilburn, Conductor.

BOURNEMOUTH.—The Boscombe Choral Society gave an evening Concert in aid of the National Sanatorium for Consumption, on the 19th ult. Part I., May Queen; Part II., Miscellaneous. The soloists were Miss Hodge, Mrs. Turton, Mr. Walter Howgate, and Mr. Myerscough. Accompanist, Madame Steiner. Conductor, Mr. F. J. Dugard.

CATERHAM.—A successful Concert was given by the Choral Society on the 6th ult., when Haydn's Creation was performed. The soloists were Miss Ada Loaring, Mr. Kenningham, and Mr. Kempton. Miss Loaring was heard to great advantage in "With verdure clad." Mr. Kempton exhibited great declamatory power. Mr. Kenningham rendered "In native worth" with great effect. The choruses were executed with a precision and accuracy that did credit to the Conductor, Mr. Charles Hunt, and an efficient orchestra of thirty-three performers was led by Mr. Arthur A. Hunt.

CHEPSTOW.—A performance of Elijah was given by the Choral Society in the Parish Church on the 20th ult. Miss Beatrice Gough (pupil of Miss Hilda Wilson) greatly distinguished herself in the soprano solos, and Miss Hilda Wilson's singing created a deep impression. Mr. Ineson was entrusted with the part of the Prophet and Mr. Fredericks was excellent in the tenor music. The chorus, under their Conductor, Mr. Fred. Whishaw, acquitted themselves in a manner which did them infinite credit, especially in "Thanks be to God" and "Be not afraid." The organ, played by Mr. Kingsford, was supplemented by a small orchestra, consisting of instrumentalists from Newport and Chepstow, led by Mr. Richards.

CHESTER.—On Good Friday Sir John Stainer's Oratorio The Crucifixion was performed at Eaton Chapel, the soloists being Mr. E. S. Giles and Mr. W. E. Snelson. The choruses were sung by the chapel choir. Mr. H. J. Timothy presided at the organ.

CHESTERFIELD.—Haydn's Creation was performed, on March 29, by the Harmonic Society, in the Stephenson Memorial Hall, under the patronage of most persons of influence in the town. There was a very large audience and the performance was of great merit. Miss Ada Loaring (soprano) was highly successful in all her selections. "With verdure clad" was beautifully sung. Mr. Charles Blagbro was the tenor and sang with his accustomed finish. Mr. F. G. Hewson was the bass. The band and chorus did their work well. Mr. G. A. Seed was the Conductor.

CHICHESTER.—A selection from The Messiah and Mendelssohn's Motet Hear my Prayer was given here on the 5th ult. The chorus numbered about seventy voices and was conducted by Mr. Seymour Kelly. The solo vocalists were Miss Edith Lake, Messrs. Koblich Pillow, Clifford Hunnybun, George Fielder, and Seymour Kelly, the latter giving a magnificent rendering of "Why do the nations?" A special feature of the Concert was an instrumental Trio by Dr. F. J Read (pianoforte), Mr. H. P. Allen (harmonium), and Mr. A. G. Whitehead (violin). Mrs. Dean presided at the pianoforte and Mr. Allen at the harmonium.

CHURCH STRETTON (SALOP).—An amateur Musical Society, lately formed here to replace an older one, gave its first Concert on the 20th ult., under Mr. J. H. Chester, Organist of the Parish Church The first part consisted of Stanford's Revenge, very creditably performed, the pianoforte and harmonium accompaniment being taken by Mrs. Barnett and Mr. C. Woolley. The second part of the programme consisted of part-songs, trios, and solos, all of which were well received by a large and appreciative audience.

COCKERMOUTH.—On the 21st ult., in the spacious Drill Hall of this town, a most successful performance of Handel's Samson was given by the united Choral Societies of Cockermouth and Keswick, with orchestra chiefly composed from Hallé's orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. F. W. Schofield. The performers numbered 230. The principals were Miss Annie Coclcroft, Madame Ashcroft Clarke, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. W. Thornton. The Conductor was Mr. P. T. Freeman, of Keswick.

DINGWALL, N.B.—The Choral Union gave its final Concert for the season here, in the Masonic Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 12th ult. Sir Arthur G. R. Mackenzie, Bart., of Coul, presided, and there was a large and appreciative audience. An excellent miscellaneous programme of part-songs, glees, &c., was presented, one of the most successful being Bishop's "Now tramp," the soprano solo being sung by Miss Bruce with much effect. The feature of the Concert was the brilliant pianoforte playing of Mr. Whitehead, in a charming Minuet and Gavotte from his own pen; he also sang Sullivan's "Sweethearts" most delightfully, and was associated with Miss Ross in a pianoforte and organ duet, a selection from Faust. Miss Bruce was most successful in "My Lady's Bower," and in a vocal duet with Mr. Whitehead, Offenbach's "I'm an Alsatian." The other soloists were Misses Munro, Mackenzie, and Macalister, Messrs. Ross and Macpherson. The evening before Mr. Whitehead, the able and popular Conductor of the Society, was presented with a handsome ivory bâton as a mark of the members' sincere esteem.

EASTBOURNE.—An excellent Lecture, entitled "Music in its practical aspect as it enters into our every-day life," was given at the Town Hall on March 30, by Mr. George Langley, a local professor of repute. The audience was large and very appreciative.

EVESHAM.—The Town Hall was filled to repletion on the 20th ult., when the local Choral Society, which was inaugurated three years ago by Miss Myra Taylor and Miss Gill Smith, gave its annual Concert. On the previous evening, at the final rehearsal, Mr H. St. John Wilding, head master of the Grammar School, on behalf of the Society, presented to Miss Myra Taylor a silver-mounted ebony bâton, and to Miss Gill Smith a silver-backed hair brush. Wednesday's programme comprised, in the first part, Barnett's popular Cantata The Ancient Mariner, and in the second part miscellaneous selections, vocal and instrumental. Miss Gill Smith took the soprano solos in the Cantata, Miss Annie Holmes the contralto, Mr. Lloyd James the tenor, and Mr. William Evans the bass. The chorus, eighty strong, under the able conductorship of Miss Myra Taylor, did remarkably well. The accompaniments were skilfully played by Mrs. Leslie Sherwood and Mr. A. W. Smith.

EYDON, NORTHANTS.—The newly-formed Choral Society in this village gave its first Concert on the 20th ult. The first part of the programme consisted of Henry Lahee's Cantata The Building of the Ship, which was well rendered throughout. The accompanists were Mrs. G. Thompson (pianoforte), Mr. A. Walker (American organ), Mr. A. Fletcher (violin). Mr. J. T. Andrews, Organist and Choirmaster of the Parish Church, conducted. The solos were taken by members of the Society. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous, concluding with Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's part-song "The stars are with the voyager."

GREAT BERKHAMPSTEAD.—On Good Friday evening a fine and impressive rendering of Sir John Stainer's Crucifixion was given by the choir at the Parish Church, under the direction of Mr. F. Gatward (Organist and Choirmaster), who presided at the organ. The soloists were Messrs. Braggins, Acford, Wilson, and Ward, members of the choir. There was a large congregation.

HENLEY-ON-THAMES.—On the 14th ult. a very creditable rendering of Stainer's sacred meditation The Crucifixion was given by the choir of Holy Trinity Church, under the direction of Mr. J. Herbert Chalmers, Organist and Choirmaster. The soloists were Mr. James Wright (tenor), Oxford Cathedral, and Mr. Hudson (bass), Reading, both of whom sang admirably. The quartet was taken by Mrs. Marsh, Mrs. Wilsdon, and Messrs. Wright and Hudson.

HYTHE, KENT.—Mr. Ashworth, Organist and Precentor of the Parish Church, brought the winter season of music to a close with a performance of The Messiah on Sunday afternoon, the 3rd ult. The large church was filled with an immense congregation from all parts of the district, and the service was a decided success. The soloists were Madame Florence Ashworth, Miss Marion Howard, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. H. L. Pringle. The accompaniments consisted of organ, Mr. H. N. Norton; first pianoforte, Mrs. Hardy; second pianoforte, Mr. J. A. de Monti; kettledrums, Mr. E. Palmer; and double-bass, Mr. Clark; Conductor, Mr. John H. E. Ashworth. During the last few months renderings have also been given of Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, Mozart's Twelfth Mass, Weber's Jubilee Cantata, and Spohr's Last Judgment. Chorus of seventy voices. All these performances have been on Sunday afternoons.

KESWICK.—A very fine performance of Handel's Samson was given in St. John's Church, by the combined Choral Societies of Keswick and Cockermouth (band and chorus numbering 230), on the evening of the 20th ult. The principal vocalists were Miss Annie Cockcroft, Madame Ashcroft Clarke, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. W. Thornton. The orchestra was composed of local performers and thirteen instrumentalists from Sir Charles Hallé's orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. F. W. Schofield. The Conductor was Mr. P. T. Freeman.

LEAMINGTON SPA.—A fine performance of Elijah was given on the 5th ult. to a crowded audience, in the Winter Hall, by the representative Society of the town, the Musical Union, with Miss Anna Williams, Miss Morgan, Mr. Stubbs (Chapel Royal, Windsor), and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint as principal soloists. The band, consisting of forty performers, principally drawn from the Birmingham Town Hall Orchestra, was well under the control of the Conductor, especially in the refined and delicate accompaniments to the solos. The chorus, comprising about 110 members, was remarkable throughout for the even balance of its component parts no less than for the vigour and accuracy that marked the rendering of the choral numbers, reflecting infinite credit both on the members and their honorary Conductor, Mr. Heden.

MAIDSTONE.—On Good Friday evening a Special Service was held at Holy Trinity Church, when Mendelssohn's Christus was performed by the choir and orchestra of eighty performers. Dr. Henniker conducted; Mr. Vincent Henniker presided at the organ. The church was crowded.

Maldon.—A special Service was held at the Congregational Chapel on the 10th ult., when selections from The Two Advents, by Dr. Garrett, and from the Last Night of Bethany, by C. L. Williams, were well given by the choir. A large congregation heard the music with evident appreciation and interest.

Merthyr Tydfil.—Dr. E. H. Turpin gave an Organ Recital in St. David's Church, on the 19th ult. The programme included Mendelssohn's First Sonata, Bach's A minor Prelude and Fugue, Mendelssohn's "Harmonic Music," and works by Molique, Handel, Hubert Parry, Spohr, Gounod, Merkel, Beethoven, Gladstone, and Turpin. Mr. Illtyd J. David was the vocalist, and Mr. T. Westlake-Morgan accompanied.

Middlesbrough.—Gounod's Redemption was performed by the Musical Union, under Mr. Kilburn's direction, on the 6th ult., the soloists being Miss Medora Henson, Miss Sarah Berry, Mr. Gordon Fletcher, and Mr. A. Foxton Ferguson, Mrs. Nancarrow taking the second soprano part in the Trios. The chorus of about 200 voices was supplemented by a celestial choir of thirty boys, trained by Mr. Tarrant of the Industrial School. The effect of this celestial choir and the accompanying trumpets, placed apart above the usual orchestra, was satisfactory, although greater distance is no doubt what the composer's intention requires. Miss Henson and the choir were accorded a hearty recall for "For Thy love as a Father," and Miss Berry's fine contralto voice was heard to good effect in the few short solos which fall to this part. The orchestra, numbering about sixty performers, was ably led by Mr. J. H. Beers. In response to an appeal from the Mayor the committee decided to give the proceeds of the Concert to the relief of the distress which unfortunately prevails in the town, and a collection of about £50 was, in addition, taken at the doors for this Fund. The management of these matters and the general arrangements reflect much credit on Mr. Hornung and Mr. Hood, the Hon. Secretaries, and on the other members of the executive.

Nantwich.—The Musical Society gave a successful performance of Handel's Samson on Monday, the 4th ult. The band and chorus numbered 120, the principal soloists were Miss Florence Armriding, Miss Bowmont, Mr. J. Leyland, and Mr. Gordon Heller. Mr. Bell, of De Jong's Concerts, played the trumpet obbligato in "Let the bright seraphim" in his usual brilliant manner; Mr. Fred. Brown, of Sir Charles Hallé's Orchestra, led a most efficient band; and Mr. Arthur J. Smith conducted.
